The cases of the strikers now on trial before Judge Charles M. Foell for picketing will come up again in court today. All the witnesses have been heard in this case in which 13 strike pickets are bunched. The only witnesses against the strikers have been J. Reinhardt and Nat Riebeck, garment bosses, and the hired tools of the dress manufacturers' association. The strikers have all flatly denied on the witness stand the testimony of Patrick Collins, sergeant of State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe and Patrick Moran, hireling of the garment bosses.

Negro Workers on Picket Line.

The colored strikers are continuing their prominent place on the picket line. Several hundred colored girls belong to the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union in this city and are attending strike meetings regularly.

A few of the scabs related to union men have been hunted down by "The Committee of 15." It is contemplated printing their names in the labor press and expelling their relatives from the unions if they do not promptly quit the shops. Only a few have been reached so far, however, and a large proportion of the scabs are still wives, sisters and daughters of union men.

Vice President Perlstein pointed to the action, Sunday, of the Chicago Federation of Labor as another indication that the 1,500 garment strikers are commanding the support of all organized labor. He declared his conviction that the strike would be won before many more weeks.

Gets Bosses Letter

One letter; sent out by the Elias Mann Dress Company is addressed to a striker, urging "Come to work tomorow if possible.—Elias Mann Co." The letter was dated April 14.

Altho with the passing of Easter the present season is over for the dressmakers, the new season is only six weeks away. Because of the strike,

WESTERN FOUNDRY PLANT AT HEGEWISCH HIT AS MEN JOIN WALKOUT AT PULLMAN

The strike of workers in five departments of the Pullman Steel Car Foundry Co. spread yesterday to similar departments in the plant of the Western Steel Car Foundry Co.'s plant at Hegewisch, Ill., a suburb near Pullman.

The news of the strike's spread to the town that was put on the map by the lightweight prize fighter, "Battling" Nelson, had a very spiriting effect on the Pullman strikers as they gathered Monday morning for their daily strike meeting at 158 E. 107th street on the far south side.

Among those who walked out at Hegewisch were reamers, riveters, fitters, buckers and heaters, who do work similar, and

At a mass meeting yesterday, in Strummel's Hall the strikers at the Pullman Car and Foundry Co. were addressed by John O. Holmgreen, General Vice-President of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America.

Holmgren has been dealing with the strike situation in Pullman since the men walked out one week ago in protest against a wage reduction ranging from 15 to 45 per cent.

Holmgren told the strikers that this wage cut was to go into effect in all other departments as well as the rivetting department if the Company had not been halted by the spontaneous walkout of 500 workers.

The company fears the strike will spread to other departments and is doing everthing possible to prevent it. At yesterday's meeting a representative of the company's shop committee was present and told the strikers that the company officials were willing to meet an enlarged committee representing the strikers to discuss a settlement. This the strikers responded to and enlarged the present strike committee of five to ten, two representing each of the departments on strike, the rivetters, fitters, rimmers, buckers and heaters.

This committee was to meet the company officials and report back at strike meeting at ten o'clock Tuesday morning in the same hall.

Tho there was no organization the strikers are picketing at the main gates of the Pullman Car Works. On Monday morning the company had several policemen on duty at the gates to protect scabs.

There is little doubt that the workers in the Pullman Works and in the neighboring towns could be organized if the A. F. of L. got on the job and started an organization campaign.

Steel Trust's Report Gives Added Force To Drive of Bears

NEW YORK, April 21.—Wall Street has looked forward with confidence to the steel corporation's annual meeting, believing that optimistic statements regarding the industry's immediate outlook should be expected from Chairman Gary; altho the Judge predicted a continuance of prosperity, his remarks regarding the present situation conveyed the impression that no increase in the extra dividend was under consideration, and professional operators took advantage of the occasion to resume their attacks on the general industrial list.

These tactics had the assistance of the disturbance created by a bad break in congoleum, which apparently, reflected financial embarrassment of a bull pool in the issue whose loans were reported to have been called.

Tremendous activity was maintained in the stock thruout the session, altho its latter movements were relatively steady.

Persistent selling continued in the industrials thru the last hour. Baldwin was depressed to a new low for the year at 108¼ and steel broke below 96. But heaviness of the industrials was offset by pronounced strength in various sections of the rail list.

GILLETTE HAS ANCIENT ALIBI IN HOOCH QUIZ

Named With Daugherty and McLean.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Speaker Gillett today entered an indignant denial before the senate investigating committee that he got a trunk full of liquor seized by the department of justice in 1919.

"It is an outrage to allow such statements to be given out," said Gillett in denouncing the testimony of Captain H. L. Scaife, former department of justice agent, who told the committee last week that Gillett was the one who got the liquor.

Gillett's Weak Alibi.

Gillett explained that the trunk in question belonged to a constituent. It was being sent by express from Florida to Massachusetts when a bottle of liquor broke and the trunk was seized.

Gillett said that he was in Augusta, Ga., and instructed his secretary to write to the department of justice and have the trunk released. The trunk was sent to Gillett's office in the capitol and later shipped to his constituent, he said.

"I did not like the idea of the story about the liquor getting out and altho it was not my liquor," said the speaker, "it always besmirches a man a little to have his name used in a liquor case."

Gillett said that two years ago he learned that Scaife was responsible for similar rumors. He said that he went to Representative Woodruff, Michigan, and asked him to have Scaife stop circulating them.

There was a flare-up when Scaife sought to cross-examine the speaker.

Senator Gets Heated.

"I'm not going to have an employe of this committee cross-examining the speaker of the house," said Senator Moses, New Hampshire.

Scaife insisted that his charges were true.

After Gillett left, J. M. Boucher, a former employe of the Department of Justice took the stand. He testified that he delivered either "four or six quarts of liquor seized by the Department of Justice, to E. B. McLean's little house on H street, while former Attorney General Daughtery and Jess Smith were living there.

Boucher said that he used a Department of Justice automobile to deliver the liquor to Daugherty's H street house. He said that it was taken

ACTORS' BATTLE WITH MANAGERS EXPECTED JUNE 1

100 Percent Union Shop Is Equity's Demand

By LUDWELL DENNY
(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

NEW YORK, April 21.—"It looks like a lockout June 1," officials of the Actors' Equity Asociation, American Federation of Labor, told the Federated Press following breakdown of prolonged negotiations with the anti-union group of the Producing Managers Assn.

Last November a joint committee of the union and the managers drew up a satisfactory agreement to become operative in June. The Equity membership ratified the agreement, but a group of managers refused, whereupon the actors voted 1600 to 2 to stand by the Equity demands in the events of a lokout. A union victory is expected if there is a fight because the powerful Shubert-Selwyn group in the P. M. A. as well as the independent producers support the union. Another rank and file union meeting will be called before May 1.

Union Shop, Is Issue

The issue is Equity shop and does not touch wages or hours. The Equity shop rule provides for 100 per cent Equity organization in every company in which a union member is employed, but permits managers to have non-Equity companies, and exempts certain actors belonging to a small rival association.

Following the 1919 strike, when the Producing Managers' Association was formed to defeat the union, a five year contract was signed comprising the Equity shop principle. A company union, the Actors' Fidelity league, had been formed, with managers as officers and about 50 members. The union contract recognized the league and permitted a non-Equity shop. Equity is now demanding for the new contract a complete union shop where members are employed, excepting only the few actors who were Fidelity members up to Sep. 1, 1923. This is to prevent managers from increasing Fidelity membership ($5 annual dues) with potential Equity members ($18 annual dues.)

Managers "who control two-thirds of the theatres on Broadway have definitely committed themselves to the actors side," says Equity, official organ of the union. "A check on current productions revealed that there were many casts 100 per cent Equity already and that the general average was more than 90 per cent Equity."

Equity wants another 5-year contract, but has agreed with Lee Shubert to sign an Equity shop contract for ten years if necessary.

Equity has a 10,000 membership. The annual meeting is June 2. Outgoing officers, including John Emerson, Ethel Barrymore and Frank Gillmore, will probably be reelected.

LUMBERJACKS SPEED SELVES OUT OF JOBS

Canadian Loggers Rush Production Madly.

By SYDNEY WARREN
(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

VANCOUVER, B. C., April 21.—British Columbia logging camps are today producing one-third more logs than the mills of this province can cut.

Complete confession that the lumber barons were speeding up their workers was given by G. G. Johnson, president of the B. C. Loggers' Assn., which he stated that "We are producing more logs than our mills at present are consuming. In eight months we can produce what our mills are now cutting in 12 months. Such being the case, the obvious and in fact the only course we can take if we are to prevent disaster is to curtail our production during the coming year."

Speed Hogs Lose Jobs

B. C. loggers know that this means they will be speeded up thruout the spring and summer months and when winter comes they will be dumped on the labor market again to swarm the streets of Vancouver until their meager winter stake dwindles away, then to take what the boss offers when "things open up" in the spring.

A break has occurred in the lumber market here and for the time being the lumber bosses are in consternation over their profits. In their greediness to clean up on the Japanese earthquake companies all along the Pacific coast dumped vastly more lumber onto the Japanese market than what was needed. The result has been a fall in the price of lumber to the orient.

Bosses Use Government

To help maintain their profits the British Columbia Loggers' association has asked the Canadian government to remove the duties on logging plants, equipment, utensils, supplies and machinery used in logging and the manufacture of lumber in Canada. While making these requests the boss loggers are fighting the eight-hour act now before the provincial house, despite the fact the act is regarded by the workers here as only a piece of political chicanery.

BIG RAILROAD ANNOUNCES CUT IN ITS STAFF AT MILWAUKEE SHOPS

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MILWAUKEE, Wis., April 21.—The Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad has just posted a notice here of reduction of staff in its local shops. The department was reduced as follows, effective last Saturday, April 19: sixty-three carmen, three steel carmen, 24 helper carmen, three blacksmiths, one welder, three helper blacksmiths.

EIGHT FIREMEN GIVE UP LIVES FOR PRIVATE PROPERTY

Score More Injured On Blue Island Ave.

Funerals are being held today and tomorrow for the eight firemen, heroes today to be forgotten tomorrow, who gave up their lives to the great god private property Friday night in the fire which destroyed Curran Hall, Blue Island avenue.

Quickly after the fatal crash of the wall which injured a score and killed nine, the DAILY WORKER reporter was on the scene. He saw over 50 policemen and as many firemen, thru force of habit, carrying on the tradition that their life was nothing as compared to the property of the master class which they protect.

This Cop Sees Thru It.

A police officer, standing with a stretcher waiting for the next body to be unearthed from the debris, told the DAILY WORKER reporter, "I have been on the police force for over thirty-two years. It is always the same in any emergency. The civilian says, 'Stand back, the firemen and the policemen are the [illegible] who are paid to be burned to death and shot at. Let them do the dirty work'."

And they were doing the dirty work Friday night. Most of the firemen had just been out to the half million dollar stock yard fire, risking their lives so that Armour might still be called the champion pigsticker of America. Exhausted and red-eyed, these men had rushed without rest or food, to the ancient building on Blue Island avenue, eight of them to answer their last alarm.

The DAILY WORKER reporter watched the firemen work—bound by the tradition instilled into these servants of private property—risking their lives while three mangled corpses of their comrades still lay buried within the debris.

Firemen clambered to the front of the building where the ruins of the crumbled wall still swayed menacingly just above their heads. Bodies were brought out headless, crushed and broken, and sent off to the morgues in patrol wagons. Moving picture cameras clicked in the glare of light rockets, while laborers dug the pile of marble, bricks and mortar for more bodies. "There's another one. Get that stretcher," was the call, and a docile policeman, called out of bed to the scene, rushed up with a stretcher.

"The building's gone all right. Over forty thousand dollars' worth of damage," was heard as deputy sheriffs and firemen and policemen patrolled back and forth on the sidewalk. "There was another fire here last Christmas. That paper box factory was heavily insured. He had a large stock on hand ready for shipment, I understand."

The usual investigations are under way. The fire fighters' union Chicago, Local No. 2, has donated one thousand dollars to the widows and orphans of the victims. The space given to the disaster in the press is already diminishing. In a few weeks the affair will be all but forgotten.

Eight firemen have lost their lives and are gone, but the system which carries on the tradition that a fireman's life must be sacrificed in the interests of private property, remains to destroy life again in the future.

Funerals for three of the eight firemen burned to death here in the Curran building fire Friday night were held yesterday. Four of the others will be buried today, and the eighth will be buried Wednesday.

William J. Panzer, chief of the St. Louis fire department, accompanied by Charles Rigley, his secretary, and Michael Fahey, came here to pay their respects to the memory of the dead. They visited the homes of the victims and will remain for the funerals.

Blame for the fire has not been placed as yet. Arson is suspected, and three men are held for investigation.

He Was Absent-Minded.

CARSON, Wis., April 21.—Placing four sticks of dynamite under an old stump on his farm near here, and then lighting the fuse, J. N. Winacke, in a moment of absent-mindedness, sat down on the stump. After the explosion, Winecke was picked up thirty feet away, seriously injured. He will probably lose his eyesight, attending physicians at a hospital at Stevens Point, where he is being treated, said today.

Fixing Up The Leviathan.

SOUTHAMPTON, England, April 21.—Repairs to the giant U. S. shipping board liner, Leviathan, damaged by fire late Saturday, are being completed rapidly and the ship will be able to sail for New York Tuesday, on schedule, it was announced today.

ALASKA'S WORKERS PROVIDE SCHOOLING FOR THEIR CHILDREN

KETCHIKAN, Alaska, April 21.—Miners, fishermen, and lumbermen of this district are not stingy in providing their children with adequate school buildings. The town counts only 2,500 residents, but they have just voted to issue $50,000 additional bonds for the erection of a modern school building. Previously, they had voted $100,000 in bonds which proved an insufficient sum.

Pennsy Farmers Read Daily Worker; Talk Communism

WHEATLAND, Pa., April 21.—Mills are being closed rapidly here, indicating that the bosses are moving cautiously—for their profits sales. Workers do not know where to turn for employment. Many of them are reading the DAILY WORKER and are becoming more than ever convinced of the fact of the class war.

Farmers around Wheatland read the DAILY WORKER and some of them openly express themselves in favor of Communism. Their plight is desperate and no aid is in sight. The government has made no serious move to help them and they find no solace in prayer, which some of the local pulpiteers have suggested. One of them writes: "A shower of manna would be in order," but the heaven remains as unconcerned with man as it ever has.

Workers and farmers are learning under the whip of depression that their hope is not in the democratic pills fed them by capitalist agencies and are turning to more intelligent guidance. More would get the DAILY WORKER if their pocket books were not so flat.

garment shops will not be able to make up their styles or make any of the necessary preparations for the approaching season.

For that reason, Meyer Perlstein in charge of the strike told the strikers at yesterday's strike meeting, the bosses, realizing that they are losing money, are increasing their effort to get the girls back to work.

Bosses Try Race Prejudice

Strikers report that J. Reinhardt and many of the other bosses have been visiting their employes asking them to return to work with a large advance in pay. Perlstein declared.

"The fact that the bosses are going to Polish workers and trying to arouse prejudice against the Jewish and Negro strikers, and playing the same trick on the Negroes and Jews shows that the bosses are weaking. The strikers are growing stronger every day. There are few scabs and we have been promised ample financial aid."

"The Committee of 15 announces that two automobiles have been donated to take the strikers around to the various unions and tell the story of the strike.

HARRISBURG, Pa., April 21.—Tomorrow Pennsylvanians will pass once more on the wet or dry issue in the state.

An off-year primary election—usually an ordinary affair in the Keystone state—has taken national importance.

Governor Gifford Pinchot, champion of law enforcement, last night said he expected to win and asked all citizens to support his candidacy for republican delegate at large. At the same time he repeated his acknowledgement that President Coolidge would be nominated at Cleveland in June, saying that he would support him. The governor made liquor or law enforcement, the issue.

NO UNION LABEL IN BOOKS PRAISING COOLIDGE CABINET

Crooked Hubert Work Gets Special Boost

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Washington's biggest department store is selling a series of booklets, entitled History Makers of Today, eulogizing Daugherty, Mellon, Work and other members of the Harding-Coolidge cabinet.

The Truth About Hubert Work is a gem in this collection. Like the others, it bears no union label and no confession as to whether the Republican National committee paid the bill. Work is the secretary of the interior who fell heir to Fall's job and who lawlessly began to scrap the Reclamation Service when the Service proposed to build Boulder Canyon power plant and reduce the profits of the hydro-electric monopoly in the Southwest.

Describing how he dismissed a lot of aged government employes from the Pension Office, the book says: "When everything humanly possible had been done in the personal interest of the clerks, he reluctantly gave his approval for the reduction and then, instead of dispatching curt, formal dismissal orders to each of the aged employes slated for removal, he invited them to come and see him in his great private office and talk matters over with him.

"This man Work actually shook hands with these honored government servants, exchanged reminiscences with them, talked as long as they wished to talk .. .. .. and strange as it may seem, not a single veteran or veteran's widow or sister or brother complained, but left with the knowledge that they had found a true friend .. .. .." "Logic and a great Christian character had triumphed in the interest of good government."

It was this great Christian character whom the American Society of Civil Engineers condemned, after a careful investigation, for his violation of federal law and treachery to principles of ordinary honesty and sound public policy, when he dismissed Arthur P. Davis, at the head of the Reclamation Service, and installed in his place, under pretext of "reorganization" an enemy of the essential principles of the bureau. The booklet devotes a dozen pages to a whitewash of this incident, and to denunciation of the "vicious attack" by the engineers of the country upon Work. He is still in office.

Letters To Daily Worker.

To the Editors of the DAILY WORKER: The report in Monday's Worker of my speech before the Chicago South Slavic Branch of the party, contained a number of inaccurate quotations, which should be corrected. The report makes it appear that our support of the revolt against and split away from the Republican and Democratic parties would take the form of our "entering" the petty bourgeois "Third" party in the event such a party is formed. This is not the position of the party. And since my speech was nothing more nor less than an elaboration and explanation of that section of the thesis of the Central Executive Committee, which deals with the Third party aspect of our labor party policy, the misquotation becomes quite obvious.

The main line of our policy, as laid down in the thesis of the Central Executive Committee, is to support the general revolt against the parties of big capital, in which several economic classes are taking part—workers, farmers, small business and professional elements and a part of the middle manufacturing class—and to strive to deepen and accelerate, by such means as we can, the split between this general mass and the Wall Street parties. At the same time our fundamental task is to promote the organization of an independent class party of the industrial workers and poor farmers, separate and distinct from the petty bourgeois Third Party as well as from the Republican and Democratic Parties.

Under certain definite conditions explained in the thesis and in my speech, our party will favor an election alliance of the Farmer-Labor Party with the Third Party, but will not favor the idea of this alliance taking the form of organizational unity under any circumstances. So far from "entering" the Third Party, we are striving with all our power to bring about a complete organizational and ideological separation of the workers and poor farmers from it and its leaders. This policy is demonstrated in action by the fight of our party for the June 17th convention at St. Paul as against the July 4th Convention of the C. P. P. A. at Cleveland.

The error of the reporter of the DAILY WORKER consisted in representing my argument for "supporting" the third party in the coming elections to mean that the workers and farmers should "enter" it. There is a vast difference between the two and I tried to explain that difference in my speech.

For purposes of illustration, I referred to the action of the Russian Bolsheviki in "supporting" the Kerensky revolution against Czarism and working at the same time for the overthrow of the Kerensky regime. Here again the report in the DAILY WORKER contained a misquotation. It quotes me as saying: "The Bolsheviki fought with guns in their hands in Kerensky's army against world imperialism." What I said, was that they fought with Kerensky against Czarism. Everybody ought to know that Kerensky did not fight against world imperialism, but for it.—James P. Cannon.

MUSSOLINI EXPELS CORRESPONDENT

my fourth article when I was arrested and escorted to the French frontier.

"Now, here I am, almost uncertain of what is going to happen to me. One thing is quite certain, and that is the impossibility of my going to Italy as long as Mussolini keeps power there."

Giglio sent a report of his arrest and expulsion from Italy, from Paris that is of exceeding interest. It reads in part as follows:

PARIS, April 2.—I have been too weak from my journey and experience to give the full facts of my expulsion until now.

I was arrested by the Italian police at half-past eight on Monday morning. I was in bed, and was told by my wife that there were two policemen outside who wanted to speak to me.

As I was afraid that they were really Fascisti, I told her not to open the door until I was fully dressed, when I discovered that they were really police officers. They asked for my passport, which I produced. Then they required me to follow them to the Prefecture of Police.

My wife was alarmed and asked me to return soon, and stated that she would call for me at the Prefecture if I did not return within half an hour.

Mussolini's Own Order.

I was kept there, however, for two hours before the Commissary of Police saw me. When he did, he read to me a Government decree ordering me to leave Italy within 24 hours.

This decree was passed at a Cabinet meeting, upon the motion of Signor Mussolini. The reason given was public security.

I asked the Commissary if I could be granted 24 hours more to make the necessary arrangements, but he replied that I was to leave by the first train.

I was forbidden to go home, and I was forced to wait at the police station until I could be escorted to the train.

I was not allowed to get in touch with the British Embassy. I was only allowed to see my wife and 10-year-old son in the presence of the Commissary.

I was asked to which frontier I would be deported and I chose to go to London via Modane on the French frontier. At three in the afternoon, after having been kept under arrest all day, I was allowed to see my wife, and, after a sad separation, was taken to the train by two carabinieri in mufti.

Threat of Handcuffs.

Before I left, the Commissary, in my presence told the carabinieri that I was to be handcuffed if I tried at any point in the journey to speak English or communicate to anybody. I had no reason, however, to provoke the carabinieri, who treated me kindly.

At the frontier station, however, I was received with the greatest insolence by the Fascisti in authority there, who told me "never to enter Italian territory again."

"The atmosphere of Italy is not good for people like you," the bully went on. "The Fascisti stick rules here with absolute power." I congratulated him, and told him that I expected to be back soon, as I hoped Italy would soon be a free nation again.

When I reached Modane, a Fascist militiaman tried to cause me more trouble by pointing me out to the French police. However, the French policemen, after examining my passport and hearing the reason for my expulsion, returned the passport, and told me I was free to go where I chose.

That I have been expelled on the very eve of the elections convinces me that Signor Mussolini is about to extend his system of violence to secure a Fascist victory.

CANUCK PARTY NOW COMMUNIST

ist International raised the question, in its letter to the convention, of an alliance with the farmers and whether the Labor Party should not be changed to the Farmer-Labor Party.

After a thoro discussion of the question in which some delegates expressed the viewpoint that to change the character of the party from a labor party to a farmer-labor party at this time would be premature, the convention voted to raise the issue in the Labor Party of the alliance with the farmers in the formation of the proposal, to change the name to the Farmer-Labor Party and to invite farmer organizations to send delegates to the labor party units.

Nova Scotia Strike.

The second issue which caused a great deal of discussion was the question of the conduct of the Nova Scotia strike. There was some criticism of the method of developing the sympathetic strike of the miners in support of the British Empire Steel Company employes. The Communist International raised the question as to the tactics of the party in relation to the strike, criticising the party for not making sufficient political use of the Nova Scotia strike. The Communist International was of the opinion that the Workers Party should have issued a manifesto calling upon the workers thruout Canada to rally to the support of the miners and thus develop the strike as a political issue against the Canadian government.

The discussion of this question brought out the fact that the strike in Nova Scotia had developed spontaneously and that the leaders had done all in their power to safeguard the interest of the workers. It was admitted that the party might have acted more energetically in making use of the political issue raised by the strike.

Recommends Political Action.

The Communist International also raised the question whether the Central Executive Committee of the party in Canada was giving sufficient attention to the political developments in that country. It urged that the party must keep in close contact with every development in the political life of the country and express its views and raise issues in connection with these developments.

The report to the convention made by Comrade Specter on the political situation gave a very fine analysis of the Canadian situation and unquestionably the party will, from this time on, play a larger part in the political life of the country.

Party Influence.

While the Workers Party, now the Communist Party of Canada, was unable to increase its membership during the past year, it has been successful in extending its influence. It is an accepted section of the Canadian Labor Party and wields considerable influence in that organization. It has also been able to establish itself in the trade union movement of Canada.

MacLachlan and Ruthenberg Speak.

The convention adjourned in order to permit the delegates to attend a mass meeting at which J. B. MacLachlan, president of District 26 of the United Mine Workers, deposed by John L. Lewis and recently released from prison, and C. E. Ruthenberg, who was the fraternal delegate of the Workers Party of America, were to speak. This meeting showed the influence of the party among the workers of Canada, as the audience, which packed assembly hall of the Labor Temple, greeted the two speakers.

The convention reassembled after the mass meting to take up organizational problems and take steps to organize the party so as to permit the national organization to send organizers in the field for the upbuilding of the party.

The delegates at the convention, generally, expressed an optimism as to the future of the party, and it is certain that the coming year will show the Communist Party of Canada a stronger organization and a still greater influence among the working masses of that country.

Liquor belonging to Alonze Bunch, of Washington, Boucher said, was "sorted" in the Bureau of Investigation, "the best" being put in the office safe and the rest stored in the basement.

Booze for Counsel.

Cross-examined by ex-senator Chamberlain, counsel for Daugherty Boucher said he believed the liquor was for Daugherty and Jess Smith, "because they were living at the H street house."

Alonzo Bunch said that 108 cases of liquor and a quantity of beer belonging to him was seized in October, 1918.

"The liquor was released by the courts but I never got a bottle," said Bunch.

Bunch said he went to Wm. J. Burns, director of the Bureau of Investigation, and protested against the continued holding of his liquor, Burns "passed the buck."

"Where did the liquor go?" asked Brookhart.

McLean Too.

"I was told on good authority that most of it was hauled to Ned McLean's house," said Bunch. "I understand that Gillett got some of it too."

"Who told you that McLean got most of the liquor?" asked Brookhart.

"My lawyer, Judge Daniel T. Wright, has the name of the man who told me that the liquor was handled from the warehouse to McLean's house," said Bunch.

Bunch said that he wrote several letters to the late President Harding in an effort to get his whisky back.

"Did you get any reply?"

"Yes, he referred me to Burns."

"Have you written to President Coolidge?"

"Twice, with no reply."

SCHOOLS IDEALIZE CAPITALIST, NOT CHRIST, HE SAYS

McCluskey Assails U. S. Educational System

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 21.—Our educational system is "a huge hopper for feeding idealistic youth to the business interests," was the charge of Howard McCluskey, graduate student of the University of Chicago, in an attack on vocational guidance, before the conference of six hundred Methodist students here. The students, representing 112 colleges and universities thruout the country, heard several church officials denounce the capitalist system as un-Christian.

"Our law schools and schools of commerce are shot thru with trickery and get-rich-quick ideals. The captain of industry, not Christ, is the ideal held before the students," McCluskey asserted.

"Nasty, Dirty, Stinking" War.

Bishop Francis J. McConnell of Pittsburgh declared it was not disloyal to face the delicate issues of industrial strife and war. "I don't mind a man's going to war," exclaimed Bishop McConnell, "but I do object to trying to give that nasty, dirty, stinking business a halo of sanctity."

The present distribution of wealth, whereby excessive riches and dire poverty exist side by side, was denounced by the Rev. Allan A Heist. Christianity can make little progress in steel towns, where poverty prevails and among farmers robbed of their lands and made landless peasants by deflation and bread bandits," the Rev. Heist said. "The profit motive should be eliminated from industry. The church must teach the abolition of poverty and give whole-hearted support to every agency, political, economic and social which seeks to heal the age old sore of poverty."

Youth is hearing a new melody out of the discord which followed the disillusionment of the war, Howard Becker, the Northwestern University pacifist, told his audience. "In the past we have worshipped national gods. The great universal God has been divided by boundary lines."

WASHINGTON, April 21.—A constitutional amendment abolishing child labor was urged here by the Rev. Dr. Worth Tippy on behalf of the commission on social service of the Federal Council of Churches.

Slavery of 1,000,000 Kids.

"Child labor is shameful," the Rev. Tippy declared in a statement issued to the press. "During certain seasons in the beet fields and canneries and factories over 1,000,000 children under 10 years of age work from 44 to 60 hours a week."

"Fifth Year", Forbidden Before, To Appear

(Special to The Daily Worker)

"The Fifth Year" film picture of Russian life under the Soviet government wins its rights to appear in Providence, R. I., on Wednesday, April 23, after six months of efforts on the part of the Civil Liberties Union and others to get permission from the police commissioners of that city.

"Soviet Propaganda" Cry.

A local committee had been formed for the purpose of running the entertainment. This committee was called for the R. I. Russian Relief Committee, and was composed of men of Russian birth and parentage, but all citizens of this country. But reactionary elements raised a hue and cry against Soviet propaganda and alleged that the showing of the picture was part of a nation-wide plot to convert this country to the ideas of the Bolsheviks and as a result of this opposition the permit was denied.

Police Commissioners Yield.

The Civil Liberties Union tried to get the police commissioners to reconsider their action, but without avail. Finally the R. I. Workers Educational Society decided to show the films as part of their educational program and when Dr. J. U. Reid made application for a permit, which is required under the local law, it was granted by the police commissioners.

So the "Fifth Year" will be shown to a Providence audience as an educational film in Eagles Hall, on Wednesday, April 23, at 8 p. m., under the auspices of the R. I. Workers Educational Society. All tickets that were purchased for the showing on Sept. 26 will be good for this showing. It is expected that a large attendance at this meeting will be the answer to the reactionary elements of Providence. All friends of freedom in Providence are requested to spread the news and to be present in Eagles Hall on the night of April 23 and see the pictures of Russian life under the fifth year of the Soviet regime.

GERMAN HARBOR WORKERS WIN BIG 8-HR. DAY STRIKE

"Technical Aid" Scabs Proved Useless

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER

(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

BERLIN, April 21.—It paid for the harbor workers of Hamburg and Bremen to hold out to the finish. They have scored a signal victory. The bosses wanted to introduce an 11-hour day but the 8-hour day remains. The bosses wanted to introduce a two-shift system but the three-shift system remains. The bosses wanted to reduce wages but wages will be raised from 4.50 gold marks a-day to 4.80. The bosses were determined to break up the works councils system but the works councils remain.

The strike involved 20,000 workers in Hamburg and 7000 in Bremen. Much fuss was made in the capitalist press about the activities of the technical emergency aid, an aggregation of strikebreakers recruited from business men, technicians, etc. Their untrained help did not cause a ripple. The strikers were careful to keep public opinion with them by seeing to it that perishable goods and food were handled and distributed.

Another strike now in Stettin involves a small unit of the Marine Transport Workers' Union, a branch of the American I. W. W.

HINDOOS NOT NICE ANY MORE, WAILS RICH AMERICAN

Coolies Gave Eleanor Rough Treatment.

(By The Federated Press)

BOMBAY, April 21.—Nobody is nice any more among the natives of India, acording to the observations of Eleanor Franklin Egan, an American who traveled thru India both during the world war and recently. The lordly white ladies (mem-sahibs) are no longer treated as divine, this wife of a J. P. Morgan lieutenant has discovered.

"I followed my baggage down into the customs shed," she relates, "when I got caught in a vociferating horde of unmannerly humanity. A filthy, foul-smelling coolie brushed up against me and shoved me with his shoulder. He was of the great untouchable tribe, and knew better than to touch a Hindu of castle, let alone a mem-sahib.

"I moved out of his way and turned upon him with a brief but emphatic remonstrance. Whereupon he looked me up and down with a rudeness I have never seen equalled, then with a sneer on his face, spat copiously at my feet out of a mouth that was hideously stained with the red juice of the betel nut.

"I then began to observe that nobody was nice any more. I know that only a short time ago such a performance would have been unthinkable and absolutely impossible."

BRITISH MINERS DEMANDING SHARE OF $100,000,000 PROFITS; LABOR BECOMING AGGRESSIVE

By LELAND OLDS

(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

Settlement of the London street railway and bus workers' strike on the basis of an immediate advance of 6 shillings (approximately $1.50) in the weekly wages of platform men has encouraged other branches of British labor to make increasing demands for higher wages, according to a cable from acting U. S. Commercial Attache H. D. Butler at London. Butler mentions specifically the transport, engineering, shipbuilding, coal, woolen, building, and distributive trades as parties to the movement.

The street railway strike started March 22 and the bus workers struck in sympathy. Altogether 40,000 workers were involved and London's surface transportation system brought to an abrupt halt. In addition to the 6 shillings advance the settlement also provides an advance of 4 shillings a week to shop and other employes, a guarantee that no reductions will be made in wages until the cost of living index declines eight points below a point 75 per cent over the pre-war level and a sliding scale of wage advances for every four points rise in the cost of living above the 75 per cent level. Latest figures place the cost of living 78 per cent above July, 1914.

Following the settlement of the street car strike the most critical labor situation is the dispute over coal miners' wages which have been notoriously low since the one-sided settlement of 1921 which provided a minimum wage only 20 per cent above the pre-war level with the workers sharing profits after the owners had secured so-called standard profits. As a result of this agreement the owners' profits for 1923 are estimated at more than $100,000,000 or nearly three times the pre-war figure. But miners' wages in the great fields of South Wales, Lancashire and Scotland, have fluctuated between 40 per cent and 50 per cent above the pre-war level at a time when the cost of living was up approximately 80 per cent.

Stingy Offer From Bosses.

This agreement expired April 17 and the national conference of miners has urged the Labor government to pass the miners' minimum wage bill to avoid a strike. This bill proposes a minimum wage for all coal workers on the basis of the 1914 wage plus an amount equal to the increased cost of living. There appears little expectation of its passage.

The situation during the first week of April is described by Butler in his cable as follows: "Last week's national wage negotiations brought another final offer from the coal owners conceding a further 2½ per cent, making their offer 32½ per cent instead of the present 20 per cent as the minimum standard or basic rate above the 1914 level. Other previous concessions included the ratio of standard profits equivalent to 15 per cent of standard wages, the miners' demand being 13 per cent while the present basis is 17 per cent; the sharing of the surplus 87 per cent to wages and 13 per cent to profit; the agreement that no adult shall receive less per diem than 50 per cent above the lowest 1914 day wage standard and the existing minimum subsistence wage to be increased one-eighth. South Wales coal owners on April 4 announced further local concessions by removing certain restrictions to the earnings of unmarried men and absentees."

Miners Voting Against Offer.

The latest Dow Jones & Co. cable indicates that vote on acceptance or rejection of the owners' terms is running very close with a probable majority of about 15,000 out of 660,000 votes in favor of rejection.

The whole basis of settlement proposed by the owners is calculated to allow them to cut prices to meet competition in the foreign market. This would reduce wages in proportion. The coal miner's family is made to carry the burden of this competition by accepting a depreciated standard of living which approaches slow starvation.

Hunger Strike for Lenin.

ESSEN, Germany.—A humble story of devotion to Nicolai Lenin has just come to light here. When a group of political prisoners heard of the death of Lenin, they asked permission to hold a ceremony of mourning. The French administration of the prison here refused the request, whereupon the politicals showed their respect for Lenin and defiance of French capitalism by a 24-hour hunger strike.

Probe Miner's Death.

BELLEVILLE, Ill., April 21.—A coroner's inquest was held today investigating the death of Cal Leiskau, 28, coal miner and member of a dance orchestra, who was fatally injured early Sunday when thrown from the running board of a car into a telephone pole.

Pickets In Boston Cap Makers' Strike In Court Tomorrow

BOSTON, April 21.—The case of the arrested capmakers has been postponed until Wednesday, the 23rd. Those under arrest are Jacob Miller, organizer of Capmakers' Local 7, and Joe Korshun, of the administration committee. The strike was called on Friday, April 11, for the unionization of the shop, a small one.

One of the worst evils the union has to contend with is that of the corporation shop, whereby a few workers go into partnership, employ workers and work as many hours overtime as they please. They take the work from the organized shops and leave the union men and women without the means of making a living.

During the past year seven strikes were called by the union. The plague of corporation shops is spreading, and the union has determined to uproot them.

Union representatives went on the picket line Saturday and were insulted and then beaten by the bosses. The capitalist cop got on the scene, and arrested the two workers and the two bosses. But when they got to the court, lo and behold, a charge of disturbance was put against the workers, and it was the bosses who placed the charge. The union is determined to fight the cases to a finish and to carry on the strike until the petty bosses are made to live up to union rules.

Go-Getter Gets Increase.

ANN ARBOR, Mich.—The annual salary of the handsome go-getter president of the University of Michigan, Dr. Marion LeRoy Burton, who has inspired an extension of campus espionage under the college deans, has been increased from $18,000 to $24,000 by the state regents. A reason for the increase, it was reported, is the large amount of "official entertaining" he is required to do.

FRENCH-GERMAN VOTERS URGED TO DEFEAT REACTION

U. S. Progressives Send Appeal To Europe

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Seeking to avert a new tragedy in Europe, due to the tendency toward political reaction in the German and French elections of next month, the Emergency Foreign Policy Conference has summoned its national committee to meet here April 30 to consider sending an appeal to the voters of both countries.

"Save the German republic!" is the burden of the appeal which the Conference, comprising senators, congressmen, labor union officials, publicists and others in the progressive movement, is expected to send to Europe.

Fear Reaction In France-Germany.

The German elections were set to take place one week ahead of the French elections, and when this appeal from America was first suggested it was agreed that fear of Poincare would probably lead to great political gains by the German militarist and monarchist element. Such an outcome of the German election would result, almost inevitably, in gains for the militarist imperialist element in France, and a new war would be prepared by the rival groups of reactionaries. In preparation for that war, reaction would crush out all democratic powers and institutions in both countries. The world would swing back toward barbarism.

Germans May Delay Election.

Unofficial report is now made that the German election will be postponed until the date of the French election. This change is hailed with relief by the Conference promoters. Nevertheless they believe that the utmost moral strength of America should be asserted now, to the safeguarding of the German republic against monarchism and militarism and further collapse. If this be intervention in the affairs of another people, it will at least be friendly to the hopes of humanity in general, and it will run counter to most of the diplomatic interventions with which governments at Washington and elsewhere amuse themselves.

Senators Frazier, Howell, Magnus Johnson, Ladd and Wheeler are members of the national committee. Most of the La Follette group in Congress will attend.

Forged Notes, Says District Attorney

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 21.—After being out of court just one week, Governor Warren T. McCray today went on trial a second time on charges of criminal acts growing out of the collapse of his personal fortune last summer.

McCray's federal court trial on charges of using the mails to defraud opened this morning with nearly 200 Indiana bankers called to testify for the government.

District Attorney Elliott will attempt to prove that McCray used false financial statements and forged notes to deceive the banks and secure additional credit from them during the months preceding his failure.

McCray's first trial, in the Marion County Criminal Court on charges of embezzling $155,000 from the State Board of Agriculture, resulted in a hung jury.

Big Detroit Meeting.

DETROIT, Mich., April 21.—In Detroit meeting Tuesday, April practically every seat in the auditori of the Houses of the Masses w taken and an interested audience tened eagerly while Comrade Trachtenberg described the relative meri of revolutionary class warfare as carried on in Russia versus the Germa method of "class collaboration."

Russian revolutionary workers smashed the bourgeois state apparatus and established the proletarian dictatorship. The less courageous leaders in the German revolution succumbed to the delusion of a "people's government" and the logic of events has "coalesced" the workers out of al governmental influence, until today the Social-Democratic President Ebert and his government are the mainstays of German reaction. Such were th lessons to be drawn from the Russia versus the German revolutions.

Detroit Federation Addressed.

Wednesday evening Comrade Trachtenberg addressed the delegates of th Detroit Federation of Labor on the Russian trade unions. The trade unions in Russia, according to the speaker, have an extremely influential position in the Soviet state. They feel that they are the owners of industry. The Soviet government can take no step regarding industry without consulting the trade unions, which since the revolution are "organs production" rather than weapons the class struggle. Herein do the Russian unions differ from the tra unions in every other country.

CONDUCTED BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE OF NEW ENGLAND HOLDS GOOD CONVENTION

By WILLIAM SIMONS.

BOSTON, Mass., April 21.—The Young Workers League of New England laid plans at their District Convention held here for strengthening their branches, establishing more of them, and of taking an active part in movements for the benefit of the young worker.

This district suffers even more than others from the ravages of child labor, and the Convention instructed the District Executive Committee to call a convention to launch a campaign against child labor. To the convention are to be invited all local unions, central union bodies, labor political organizations, and any other committees engaged in fighting against child labor. A special committee of the District Executive Committee is to be created to keep in touch with all organizations interested in fighting child labor including the labor unions.

New Branches Created

The delegates expressed their pleasure over the creation of several new branches of the Young Workers League in Boston, under the guidance of Max Salzman, national organizer of the Young Workers League. The benefits from that trip urged the delegates to go on record as requesting the National Executive Committee to appoint a paid organizer for this district. It was understood, that before this was possible, the district would have to devise ways and means of meeting a large part of the expense incurred by an organizer. In this connection, there was a discussion of the industrial character of the New England district, and the splendid opportunities for organizing the youth.

With a committee from various cities, extending over a large area, it had been found difficult to get the District Executive Committee together often. To meet this difficulty, it was voted that the members of the new District Executive Committee should be from Boston and vicinity. Those elected were, Boston, Lewis Marks, Aster Berkowich, H. Shainis; Maynard, George Heikkenin; Providence, Lyons. They, together with the District Organizer, John Louko of Norwood, comprise the District Executive Committee.

Organization Needed

In his report as organizer, Comrade Louko touched on the work being done, especially by the groups of Worcester, Boston and Providence. The District Executive Committee, because of the difficulties confronting it, especially lack of finance, had not been able to take full advantage of the opportunities before it. A start had been made on Junior groups, in many cities, for example, Boston; and W. Concord, N. H. He spoke on the extensive tour made by Comrade Salzman, and urged the necessity of such further organization work. The question of shop nuclei was still a pressing one, the only functioning one yet established being in Providence. He urged the branches to complete the industrial registration called for by the National Office. On the Salzman tour, the Finnish District Committee of the New England District of the Workers Party had paid half of the expenses. The recent Finnish District Convention had voted to give the Young Workers League a chance to run the regular Fall festival thus make a large sum of money for organizational purposes.

After the acceptance of Comrade Louko's report, William Simons, New England District Organizer of the Workers Party, and a delegate to the Young Workers League convention, gave a brief report on the activity of the Workers Party on the industrial field, as well as in relation to the Farmer-Labor movement in the country and state. The report was accepted, after the delegates from each city explained the relations existing between the Young Workers League and the Workers Party.

Reports Given

On finance, it was decided to hold the Fall Festival in Maynard and act in co-operation with the District Executive Committee of the Finnish Federation. All branches are to be asked to hold an affair for the District Executive Committee once every six months and 30 per cent of all income derived from entertainments. It is hoped that this will raise sufficient money to allow of far-reaching propaganda campaigns.

Child Labor Bill Now Before House Opposed By Bosses

An amendment to the federal constitution affecting the child labor laws, expected to be passed by both House and Senate within a week, is backed by sixteen out of twenty-two members of the judiciary committee. Local organizations which favor the bill include the Illinois League of Women Voters, the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, the City Club and the Council of Social Agencies.

The amendment, which is being opposed by the National Manufacturers' Association, provides: "Congress shall have power to limit, regulate and prohibit the labor of persons under eighteen years of age. This shall not impair the power of the several states except where in conflict with the federal enactment."

MORALLY INSANE, ALIENIST ASSERTS OF HARRY THAW

Says Millionaire Can't Resist Temptation

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 21.—"Harry Thaw's is a case of moral insanity—no purely mental defects are apparent," Dr. Charles W. Burr, leading alienist, testifying for the Thaw estate, said on the stand today.

Opposing Release of Millionaire.

"If freed, I believe, he would revert to his abnormal sexual practices—assuming that the history of his case is true," Dr. Burr continued, "I don't believe him capable of taking care of himself—of resisting temptation, once he is away from control," the witness said.

"It's not the man's fault. He cannot help it. He's not responsible," the alienist added.

Possibility that Evelyn Nesbit, divorced wife of Harry K. Thaw, would take the stand today in the trial of the latter's sanity on his petition to be released from "Kirkbridge's" asylum drew crowds to the court room doors several hours before time set for resumption of the hearing.

Fights For Son's Heritage.

Evelyn, fighting for the heritage of her boy, threw in her lot with those opposing the millionaire's release. She now stands out as probably the most important witness against Thaw if her attorneys ask her to testify.

Startling revelations have been promised by the cabaret entertainer who once was America's most beautiful artist's model and for whose love Thaw killed Stanford White and started the long chain of tragic events that brought him finally to a Philadelphia mad house.

VANDERLIP IS ON MELLON'S TRAIL; MAY BRING OUT FACTS ABOUT 30 CASES OF BIG GRAFT IN TREASURY

By LAURENCE TODD
(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Frank Vanderlip has been cast out by his fellow-managers of the financial government of the country, and his fighting blood is up. He knows the game from the inside, and it is the intrinsic fraud and the socially poisonous character of big business that he will presently expose—unless his banker friends take him back quickly and apologize for having tried to declass him.

That's to be kept in mind when reading, next month or later, the sensational details of about 30 cases of big graft in the Treasury. It is to be remembered when Vanderlip takes credit for having collected evidence of the skeletons locked in the Mellon closet, when the whole power of the kept press and of President Coolidge and the republican national committee was mobilized to shield that closet door.

Vanderlip Just Felt Hurt.

If the kept press and the national committee had not been so ugly and personal in their resentment, at the time Vanderlip made a speech reflecting upon the integrity of Mr. Harding, Vanderlip would not have established a research bureau to justify his speech.

Had he not founded this bureau, and secured rich returns in short order for his investment, President Coolidge would not have had to rush to the Senate with a frantic denunciation of its investigation plans.

Jim Watson, of beef trust scandal notoriety, would not have had to take the Senate floor to denounce Senator Couzens and Francis J. Heney for seeking to learn the secrets of Mellon's office.

For it was Vanderlip who assembled the evidence which induced Heney to say he would take the job of counsel to Couzens' committee for investigation of the treasury.

All of these things are profound secrets in the capital: nobody but the men who are watching the agony of the administration over the threatened investigation of Mellon's coarse work could give you the details offhand. But from them you may learn that the most famous graft prosecutor the country has ever produced has seen the evidence in these 30 cases and has declared it to be "the biggest thing" he has ever tackled.

Wall Street Gets Scared.

Wall street does not want the treasury examined by Francis J. Heney just on the eve of a presidential campaign. It does not want the nature of capitalist management of politics to be indecently exposed at so critical a time. If there has been wholesale violation of the prohibition law in every direction, and under organized control, and for a price paid, the men in New York who run the real government do not want that fact used to the possible disturbance of the stock market.

Besides, there is the Mellon tax plan to be considered. It has been badly dented already, but if Heney discovers half the rottenness in the internal revenue bureau that the stench indicates, that plan and its sponsors will be not merely found out, but utterly discredited for all time.

The country has already observed the press bribery involved in Mellon's scheme of untaxing the rich, and has seen that bribery effective in support of the bill in support of Mellon as an individual accused of shielding graft. Yet the plan has not "gone over" as the financiers hoped. Another big drive must be made.

Hundreds of millions of dollars are at stake. If Heney gets one week's testimony into the record, a protest amounting to a revolution which will cost the millionaires several times the amount they hoped to grab by the "plan" will be inevitable. Hence the filibuster on Heney.

Strike Blow at Seamen's Act.

A blow has been struck at the seamen's act, in the immigration bill which has just passed the Senate and is going to conference of the two houses. It is contained in the provision which authorizes the bureau of immigration to regulate the time and conditions under which alien seamen may remain in American ports.

Andrew Furuseth, president of the International Seamen's Union, was able to persuade the senators in charge of the bill to strike out the clause drafted by Secretary of Labor Davis, under which Davis' department could demand a cash bond of these alien seamen who might quit their jobs in American ports in order to reship at American rates of pay.

The bond scheme would have nullified the emancipation of seamen. But even without the bond feature the bill may be used by an anti-labor official such as Davis to defeat the whole purpose of the law which Furuseth worked 20 years to get. If alien seamen are to be watched and bedeviled in their attempts to get a living wage from shipping masters in our ports, then the LaFollette seamen's act is substantially repealed.

This man Davis is a "bad actor," as his three mischievous years in charge of the department have demonstrated. Maybe some day an investigation of his business affairs can be had.

MOST FAMOUS TRAGEDIENNE IS TAKEN BY DEATH

Eleanore Duse Stricken In Pittsburgh

The Italian actress, whose alliance with Gabrielle D'Annunzio goes down with that of Abelard and Heloise as one of the most talked of love affairs of history, succumbed to influenza in her hotel suite here, far away from her native land and former lover.

The actress was 65 years old and was ranged with Sarah Bernhardt as one of the great tragediennes of history.

Affair With D'Annunzio.

The love affair between the actress and Gabrielle D'Annunzio came at the height of her career, after her union with the actor Checchi had been dissolved. It set all Italy athrob.

The poet wrote a number of plays for Duse, in which she scored some success in Italy, but which were a failure on tour in the United States.

The tragedy queen herself was a daughter of the stage, born of strolling players. Her father was Alessandro Duse and her mother Angelica Capeletto. The child was born near Venice, October 3, 1839.

Began in "Les Miserables."

Duse made her first appearance on the stage in 1863, as the child "Cosetta" in "Les Miserables," and from her earliest years worked with her parents, playing in a variety of pieces. Subsequently she joined other traveling companies, touring all over Italy, and made her first substantial success in Turin in 1879, in "La Princesse de Bagdhad."

In 1891 she was accorded a splendid reception in Russia and Austria, and the following year created a furore in Berlin in "La Tosca."

She paid her first visit to America in 1893.

After appearing at the Drury Lane Theater, London, in 1906, in a benefit performance for Ellen Terry, she retired from the stage, but after an absence of 15 years reappeared at Turin in May, 1921.

Triumphal Return to America.

She came to New York again last fall, after an absence of 20 years, appearing at the Century Theater under the direction of Comstock & Gest, where she played a series of matinee performances, including "The Lady from the Sea," "Cosi Sia" and Ibsen's "Ghosts." She received a most enthusiastic reception and at the conclusion of her engagement signed a further contract with the Selwyns for a tour of the United States.

200 Daily Workers Sold At Kansas City Meeting Of Negroes

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 21.—The DAILY WORKER scored a victory at the meeting of Negroes addressed here by Chandler Owens, editor of the Messenger. Over 200 copies of the paper were distributed and sold when a worker outlined the policy of the DAILY WORKER and announced a lecture on "Communism and the Race." Many who had never seen the paper before paid it enthusiastic compliments.

Owens had spoken on the "Rising Tide of Color," emphasizing that color is incidental and that the vital relationship of men is economic. The speaker called for the white slave and the black slave of the wage system to join hands and "struggle for absolute equality." He condemned the weak leaders and the "lunatic fringe" which advocates retreat to South America or Africa, which is already too full of Negroes.

The speaker was in very different vein from that of some of his former speeches and editorials in which criticized the revolutionary movement and praised liberals, who are far closer to the capitalists than they are to the workers.

Order Arrest Of 36 Victims Of Sherman Anti-Trust Statute

CLEVELAND, O., April 21.—Arrest of representatives of 36 malleable iron corporations, indicted here for violation of the Sherman anti-trust act, was ordered today when that number failed to appear in federal court to answer to the indictments.

DETROIT LIBERALS FIGHT FOR DOGS' RIGHT TO RABIES

Object To Vaccinating Canine Parasites.

DETROIT, April 21.—Once upon a time stag hounds used to hunt game as allies of man in the struggle for existence. The dogs crouched at meal time in the great dining halls of the nobles and received bones and scraps for the table.

Other dogs guarded sheep. Others did relief work in mountainous regions.

Symbols of Power.

Now in great cities dogs run at large in the streets or strut at the ends of chains as symbols of power or elegance. Dogs in present day society are parasites, except where they are used to round up small herds of cattle or to pull dog sleds.

And as pets, dogs differ from cats or birds in being dangerous.

There is, however, a kind of social worker that devotes his life to "saving" dogs, just as another kind of social worker devotes his life to "saving" society. This kind of social worker usually organizes or joins an Animal Welfare League or Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

In preventing cruelty to animals nothing is involved but the expression of a generally humane disposition. But in Detroit at the present time these saviors of "our four-legged friends" are engaged in a propaganda in behalf of dog life at the expense of human life.

A Mad Dog Town.

Rabies or hydrophobia among dogs in Detroit, according to Dr. S. L. Morgan of the department of health, is increasing. Thirty-five persons, most of them children, have been bitten by dogs recently and are under observation. Six new cases were reported in one day. Three persons have died of rabies recently. Of 117 dogs sent to the pound for observation, 72 developed positive cases of rabies.

But a circle of dog lovers is carrying on a struggle against the plan of the department of health for systematic vaccination of all dogs. It is the plan to require vaccination before licenses will be issued. Compulsory vaccination of dogs is heresy to those who would prefer a lick on the hand from a servile dog to the fellowship of an intelligent child.

Loss of Spirits Is Negative of American Spirit, Says Gompers

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Declaring that he opposes the whole eighteenth amendment as a "violation of the spirit of American freedom," Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, told the house judiciary committee that the American workingman must be given the right to drink beer.

Gompers was the first witness in hearings before the House committee on various bills to modify the Volstead act.

Are you self-conscious about the impression you make on people?
PERSONAL appearance has a lot to do with the way you feel. Clothes count, of course. But still there is one thing so many people overlook—something that at once brands them as either fastidious or careless—the teeth.
Notice today how you, yourself, watch another person's teeth when he or she is talking. If the teeth are not well kept they at once become a liability.
Listerine Tooth Paste cleans teeth a new way. At last our chemists have discovered a polishing ingredient that really cleans without scratching the enamel—a difficult problem finally solved.

Jingoism In Excelsis

It must be a painful thing to be a 100 per cent American and live in constant fear of blood dilution thru mixture with some other nationality. That the life of the 100 per center is a nightmare of this sort is indicated by the wild alarums now sounded by some of the tribe following the passage of this sort is indicated by the wild alarums now Japanese exclusion act.

A number of the small-caliber statesmen who infest the capitol are proposing now that a soldier be stationed every hundred yards along the Canadian and Mexican borders to keep out any aliens who might be tempted to slip in and the proposal has the enthusiastic support of all the militarists who are quick to seize every opportunity that can be used as an excuse to increase the rank and file of the army and thereby the official caste.

As for the native sons of California wh[illegible] up the Japanese mess they are stil[illegible] but fate seems to be against them [illegible] the boycott on California prod[illegible] the I. W. W. in retaliation for [illegible] their members, California stock [illegible] and mouth disease and the ne[illegible] wealths have thrown a sanit[illegible] the Golden State just as the tou[illegible] to begin; the Japanese have also [illegible] cott and, altho the Californian [illegible] deny it, it is going to hurt the Ca[illegible] —business—very severely.

Manuel Quezon, head of the Phillipine independence mission, has also denounced the action of congress and the senate in totally excluding Japanese and he appears to voice the general sentiment of the masses thruout the Orient.

American imperialism may feel strong enough to antagonize the whole world, to shut its doors to the populations it is exploiting by means of huge loans to foreign capitalists and governments but from the Communist point of view American imperialism has, by its catering to the prejudices of the Nordics whose heads are supposed to denote unusual ability to rule, begun to solidify against it not only Europe but Asia as well.

When the masses of the American workers and farmers are called upon to fight the masses of eastern and western nations for the conquest of the world by American finance capital they may not look so lightly upon the hysterical outbreaks of jingoism that mark the present premier position of the United States as the financial overlord of capitalist civilization.

Aiding the Garment Strikers.

The striking garment workers will appreciate the financial support promised them by the last meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor speaking in the name of organized labor in this city but they would appreciate more and organized labor as a whole would be benefited more by a display of economic power.

The task of getting unions in other industries to strike in sympathy with the garment workers is a little too big in the present stage of the development that the American labor movement but a wholesale violation of the injunction against picketing by officials and members of the local labor organizations would, we believe, be the next best thing. The DAILY WORKER has urged the use of this tactic from the first day the injunction was issued but altho the American Federation of Labor is on record for violation of injunctions, President Gompers came to Chicago, stopped at the Morrison hotel and left again without uttering a single word against the injunction now in force. The tentative plans for a parade of labor organizations thru the loop district in a demonstration against the injunction have also been dropped; all that is left of the plan is the proposal to seat striking garment workers on a float and solicit onlookers for strike donations.

The suggestion of Sam Gordon, sentenced to 30 days in jail by Sullivan for injunction violation, that a float be run denouncing injunctions and injunction judges, received applause in the federation meeting but not approval altho it came the nearest to being anything savoring of a militant nature.

The garment workers will probably win their strike with financial assistance but nothing will have been settled. The injunction will stand to be used again whenever a strike impends.

Nothing is ever settled until it is settled right and injunctions will continue to hamper labor until labor unites against them as the bosses do for them and shows the employers and their kept courts that they will not be bound by legal red tape in their fight against exploitation.

Soviet Russia and British Bankers

We remarked the other day a change in the tone of the British capitalist press when commenting on the Anglo-Russian negotiations and expressed the opinion that the fact that Soviet representatives had shown no disposition to discuss any trade matters until all political questions had been settled, was largely responsible for the change in front.

The London Daily Herald furnishes an additional reason. W. P. Coates has issued a pamphlet entitled "Russia's Counter-Claims" which sets forth with great wealth of detail the facts upon which Soviet Russia's damage case against the government of Great Britain is based. The counter-claims presented by Soviet Russia for injury to property and loss of life during the invasions and counter revolutions engineered and financed by the British government and British capitalists exceed by millions of pounds the British claims arising out of the expropriation of British property owners by the Soviet government. Speaking of the data contained in the Coates pamphlet, the Daily Herald says:

> That Russia has, in international law, a perfectly good case, can scarcely be questioned. No state of war existed between the Soviet Republic and the British Empire. The action of our Government in sending munitions and men to the aid of the various "White" generals was a complete violation of its international duty. At the worst it was murder and piracy. At the best it was the giving of armed assistance to one of the parties in a civil war.
> The case of the Alabama is conclusive. We then admitted liability to pay damage for mere negligence in allowing a British-built ship to be used for the destruction of Federal commerce. In the Russian case the British [illegible]vernment, not by negligence but by overt [illegible] was directly responsible for far greater [illegible] done by British ships, munitions and [illegible]
> [illegible]s got to be honestly faced. For [illegible] evade it could only result in [illegible] of the country's moral credit. [illegible]selves been instrumental in framing international law on the question. We [illegible] accept the law even when it tells against ourselves.

Mr. Coates' pamphlet—with a preface by the chairman of the Trades Union Congress—does face the facts. And it deserves careful reading, not only by everyone who wants to understand the forthcoming negotiations, but by everyone who wants to realize what vile work was done in the name of this country by the men who were so recently its rulers and who aspire to rule it again.

Just before the negotiations began the MacDonald government was presented with a memorandum signed by London's leading bankers urging it to make no concessions to the Soviet representatives and the British capitalist press applauded loudly. The statement in the Daily Herald is evidently a warning to the financial fraternity that in the matter of dealing on a basis of equality with Soviet Russia and the recognition of the justice of the Russian claims for the murder, ravage and rapine perpetrated by agents of British capitalism, the labor wing of the Labor party is going to stand for no nonsense.

Art and The Boss Class

Five hundred workers are on strike in Pullman and the police prevent the showing of Karl Capek's "Robots" in that industrial suburb. It is taxing our credulity a little too much to believe that the policemen themselves had discovered that the Capek play contains a revolutionary message and it follows therefore that the censorship was exercised at the behest of the industrial magnates of that community.

We hear a good deal about the impartiality of art—especially when artists for one reason or another see fit to glorify some phase of the existing system; "Rossum's Universal Robots" is art but it is not impartial; it strikes a great blow at the automatonizing process to which the workers are subjected by modern industrial capitalism and no worker can see the play without having at least a spark of hope arouse in his breast.

It was probably a wise thing that the Pullman rulers did, viewing the incident from their standpoint, but we want to take this opportunity to point out to our artistic friends who balk sometimes at the eminently practical character of the Communist movement that the emancipation of the artists of the pen, brush and chisel can be accomplished only by alliance with the working class. The artists are no more free under capitalism than are the wage-earners, as the Pullman incident shows.

A policemen, taking his orders from the master of thousands of wave-slaves, makes no distinction between a great work of art like Capek's play and the utterances of a soap-boxer if his bosses discover that art too can endanger the grip of the capitalists on the minds of the masses.

The production of Capek's "Robots" was stopped in Pullman Sunday but the process of robotising the workers there is carried on at full speed.

Perhaps "Hell and Maria" Dawes is favored as running-mate for Coolidge because they need someone who can talk language the cabinet can understand.

Progressives--Liberals--and Communists

By TOM MATTHEWS.

IN the woefully reactionary American labor movement a leader need not stand far in advance of his fellows to gain a reputation for progressiveness. In fact, to differ from the trade union bureaucracy on even one fundamental issue stamps a trade unionist as being progressive.

John Fitzpatrick became an outstanding progressive thru his stand for independent political action and his implied support of industrial unionism. John Brophy became a "progressive" by supporting nationalization of the coal mines. William H. Johnson is regarded as a progressive even today because of his support in the past for industrial unionism thru amalgamation, independent political action, and recognition of Soviet Russia.

Judging by the records of such progressives as these, we may safely say that the progressive gains his reputation by taking a stand more or less in advance of the crowd on certain vital questions affecting the welfare of the labor movement. (We see this to be true equally on the political field, where La Follette wins renown thru taking a position far in advance of the Republican party, while even Hiram Johnson lays some claim to progressiveness by differing with the Republican machine to some slight degree.)

Words Versus Deeds.

Wherein does the progressive trade unionist differ from the Communist trade unionist?

John Fitzpatrick became one of the foremost exponents of the idea of independent political action in the American trade union movement. He went even so far as co-operate with the Communists in the calling of a great national convention for the purpose of forming a mass Farmer-Labor Party. Yet when the convention convened with 700 delegates and the formation of such a party became an immediate possibility, Fitzpatrick "backslid" and in so doing he "slid" so far as even to denounce the very Communists with whom he had cooperated in calling the convention. Why?

John Brophy collaborated in a program for the nationalization of the coal mines for the consideration of the Miners' Union. Yet when the time came for Brophy to put up a fight he deserted the ship and defended the Lewis administration, which had sunk a knife into his program. Why?

William H. Johnson succeeded in getting together an organization representative of over a million organized workers for "progressive political action" and was himself elected chairman of that organization, yet we see that organization refusing to move forward to independent political action, while its leaders indorse the discredited McAdoo for the presidency of the United States. Why?

Liberal Nonsense.

"If the Communists would keep their hands off and not try to force the movement ahead too fast," these liberals say, "such denouncements would not occur."

To liberals who stand off afar and study surface eruptions thru field glasses, such reasoning may seem logical, but to those who actually participate in the broad labor movement, it is nothing more than sheer nonsense.

As a matter of fact, these liberals themselves play a more important role in connection with the treason of the progressives, when such occurs, than we Communists may wish to admit. It would seem strange indeed, if a progressive, about to embark upon some great national undertaking in co-operation with the Communists, should not be affected by the continual warnings and insinuations, whispered and open, of the liberals:

"Look out for these Communists. They will try to lead the movement too far ahead."

"Be careful or those Communists will capture the movement away from you."

"Those Communists take all their orders from Moscow. Those Russians don't understand the problems you are facing. They will lead you into a blind alley if you don't watch out, etc., etc."

Rare indeed, is the progressive who is so well ballasted as to pay no attention to such underhanded propaganda as is continually being carried on by these liberals.

Fear of the Reaction.

While this poisonous propaganda of the liberals has a telling effect on the progressives, it is not always the principal cause of traitorous actions.

Every leader derives a certain pleasure and personal satisfaction from his "leadership." To John Fitzpatrick the presidency of the Chicago Federation of Labor is the "be all and the end all here." William H. Johnson regards the presidency of the International Association of Machinists no less highly.

(The same may prove true in the case of La Follette. He is not overly anxious to give up the committee chairmanships which fall to his lot as a Republican leader.)

To these gentlemen their positions are something tangible, something which they possess here and now. As one so-called liberal has unwittingly expressed it, they fear having to give up these positions to enter "the desert, full of wild tribes, with whom responsible trade unionists cannot possibly co-operate."

"Responsible trade unionists" cannot co-operate with the Communists, according to this liberal, for they might lose their positions of responsibility and be "kicked out of the American Federation of Labor."

With the proper interpretation placed upon his high-sounding words, this liberal is eminently correct. The "practical progressive" prefers his position of responsibility in the old movement to the position of leadership in the new, for the former means a regular salary as long as he "behaves", while the latter may call for that sacrifice which always falls to the lot of the pioneer. It does not matter that he may be "responsible" to the Gompers' bureaucracy rather than to the rank and file.

Communists Willing to Co-operate.

Treason and betrayal are to be expected of the progressives, yet the Communists will cooperate with them in spite of that possibility. Even tho a progressive be right on only one issue, the Communists will co-operate with him on that issue and go down the line for it. Whether it be for amalgamation of the trade unions, recognition of Soviet Russia, protection of the foreign-born workers, organization of the unorganized, or for any other issue vital to the labor movement the Communists will be found willing at all times to co-operate to the limit of their ability and patience.

But to all such progressives we Communists say: "We are only too glad to co-operate with you in any undertaking for the good of the broad labor movement, and so long as you stay true to the cause our assistance can be taken for granted. When, however, you should choose to betray the movement we have jointly initiated, we shall consider it our duty to go ahead without you. If you betray the cause, we will only feel that we must strive all the harder for its success. So far as we are concerned, the only limit to your leadership is your own ability, but we shall not hesitate to take over the leadership of the movement if you should try to betray it or lead it back into the swamps of reaction."

Communists Carry On.

When John Fitzpatrick deserted the cause of independent political action, the Communists stepped into the breach he left open and made possible the formation of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party.

When John Brophy betrayed the issue of Nationalization of the coal mines, the Communists carried on the fight and made nationalization a living issue thruout the Mine Workers' Union.

When William H. Johnson's "Conference for Progressive Political Action" declared for the continuation of the time-worn policy of "rewarding friends and punishing enemies," the Communists carried on the struggle for the workers and farmers' party within and without the C. P. P. A.

Future Treason Expected.

We can expect some of the progressives in the future to return to the camp of Reaction, just as they have done in the past.

That does not necessarily mean, however, that the progressives are hopelessly lost to the movement when they stray away. If the lost progressive is sincere in his intentions—if he has the welfare of the broad labor movement at heart—it is entirely possible that sooner or later he may realize the enormity of his mistake and again take the lead.

In fact, we have the right to expect (if our movement has the sound foundation we believe it to have) that some golden day there will appear a number of progressives who will kick over the traces and announce openly and without reservation his conversion to Communism. When that happens an entirely different complexion will be placed on the American labor.

The Communist work for the advancement of the broad labor movement must go on, with or without the progressives. We prefer to have them go along with us, and we will even make minor concessions for the sake of their co-operation, but under no circumstances will we follow them on any trail which leads away from the American labor movement.

An Arabian Night's Fantasy

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN.

Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherezade," a work in four movements descriptive of the Arabian Nights was played on the twenty-seventh regular program of the Chicago Symphony orchestra at Orchestra Hall on April 18 and 19. Few composers have written more brilliant Oriental work of the Russian composer. Thruout all the movements, binding them together, is a theme in a sole violin, representative of the Sultana Scheherezade telling her marvelous stories. The first movement describes the sea, and the ship of Sinbad. Undulating rhythms of water play back and forth across the orchestra, with a heavy, stormy figure breaking in at times.

The second movement is a magical one, containing the mystery and sorcery of many of the tales of Scheherezade. It brings up visions of genii conjured out of jars, and of the vast monsters of Arabian legend. The last section tells of a festival at Bagdad, in light, sensuous dance rhythms, and then suddenly switches to a big, culminating climax, telling how Sinbad's ship is wrecked at the foot of a mountain.

Rimsky-Korsakoff was a master of brilliant orchestration, and his mastery was exercised to the fullest in the composition of this suite. But at the same time the music he created is terrifically difficult to play.

A Victory Ball.

Following this was one of the few important musical works directly inspired by the recent war, "A Victory Ball," by Ernest Schelling, the American pianist. Schelling's composition is intended to illustrate a poem by Alfred Noyes. It might not be amiss to quote a stanza or two from Noyes.

"The cymbals crash and the dancers walk,
With long silk stockings and arms of chalk,
Butterfly skirts, and white breasts bare,
And shadows of dead men watching 'em there.

• • • • • •

" 'Pish,' said a statesman standing near.
'I'm glad they can busy their thoughts elsewhere!
We mustn't reproach 'em. They're young, you see.'
'Ah,' said the dead men, 'so were we!'

• • • • • •

"Victory! Victory!! On with the dance.
Back to the jungle the new beasts prance!
Watching the fun of the Victory Ball!"

Ernest Schelling's musical version of this text takes the form of a sort of jazz polonaise, suddenly interrupted by bugle calls and a muffled drum. Follows a weird and ghostly march, with the insistent sounding of three snare drums. This dies away, and the dance is resumed.

"Parsifal"

Three excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" followed. "Parsifal" was the last completed work of Richard Wagner, a music drama of religious symbolism. It is interesting to see the change in the German composer's genius as he became successful and honored. As a young man he was a close personal friend and disciple of Michel Bakunin, and author of the fiery pamphlet "Art and Revolution," on account of which he was banished from Germany. It was at this time that he wrote the Niblung cycle, big, vital music, but essentially human, into which Bernard Shaw reads an elaborate political allegory.

But the successful Wagner, at the end of his life, is not concerned with men. His genius for musical creation had in no way changed, but his subject deals with Christ, and the mystic and exalted phase of the Christ myth.

As a memorial to Charles Villiers Stanford of London, who died three weeks ago, the concert opened with his first Irish rhapsody. It is tuneful music, but rather drawn out and tiresome.

The concert of next week will be the last of the season. It will open with the Beethoven third "Leonore" overture, followed by the Brahms fourth symphony, Debussy's Spanish suite, the "Ride of the Valkyries" from Wagner's "Die Walkuere", and the same composer's overture to "Tannhaeuser".

MENTIONING THE MOVIES

"UNDER THE RED ROBE"—NO REVOLT FILM.

This is Hearst's latest venture in the field of "heroic" film. The principal character is a down-at-the-heels nobleman who saves his own neck by turning stool pigeon against the rebels who were plotting against King and Cardinal. He tackles the job in approved style, by getting into the confidence of the conspirators thru an inn brawl brought on by indiscreet public avowal of their cause. He then vamps the sister of the rebel leader, learns from her the hiding place of her brother, and proceeds to arrest him on the Cardinal's warrant.

When he gets to the very gates of Paris, however, his love for the girl whose confidence he betrayed, impels him to another double-cross and he goes back to take his punishment. The Cardinal's sudden fall from grace has stripped him of the power to carry out his sentence, so instead the "hero" is rewarded for his "fidelity" to the Cardinal during the dark day. In the end, the King himself engineers the clinch.

Robert Mantell invests Richelieu with a dignity seldom seen on the screen. Most of the other actors look very uncomfortable in their costumes—or is it perhaps their role? Alma Rubens, playing the conspirator's sister, is strikingly beautiful, but Mary MacLaren, from whom one might expect much in the role, is a very much ill-at-ease Anne of Austria. The only set-off against the glorification of the Cardinal and his stool-pigeon is the contemptuous role of royalty in general thru the picture. Unfaithful, cowardly, indecisive, useless appendages, the Kings and Dukes and their retinue fuss and fume while the Cardinal in building up his governmental machine, employs every art and wile dear to the ways of the political faction builder.

The picture is said to have cost a million and a half. The front page space and services of high priced cartoonists, special writers, and other hangers-on of the Hearst machine, must cost as much more. "Heroism" of this kind generally comes high. Bought and paid for.

It must be a painful thing to be a 100 per cent American and live in constant fear of blood dilution thru mixture with some other nationality. That the life of the 100 per center is a nightmare of this sort is indicated by the wild alarums now sounded by some of the tribe following the passage of this sort is indicated by the wild alarums now Japanese exclusion act.

A number of the small-caliber statesmen who infest the capitol are proposing now that a soldier be stationed every hundred yards along the Canadian and Mexican borders to keep out any aliens who might be tempted to slip in and the proposal has the enthusiastic support of all the militarists who are quick to seize every opportunity that can be used as an excuse to increase the rank and file of the army and thereby the official caste.

As for the native sons of California who stirred up the Japanese mess they are still standing pat but fate seems to be against them. In addition to the boycott on California products sponsored by the I. W. W. in retaliation for the persecution of their members, California stock has developed hoof and mouth disease and the neighboring commonwealths have thrown a sanitary cordon around the Golden State just as the tourist season is about to begin; the Japanese have also instituted a boycott and, altho the Californian capitalists may deny it, it is going to hurt the California god—business—very severely.

Manuel Quezon, head of the Phillipine independence mission, has also denounced the action of congress and the senate in totally excluding Japanese and he appears to voice the general sentiment of the masses thruout the Orient.

American imperialism may feel strong enough to antagonize the whole world, to shut its doors to the populations it is exploiting by means of huge loans to foreign capitalists and governments but from the Communist point of view American imperialism has, by its catering to the prejudices of the Nordics whose heads are supposed to denote unusual ability to rule, begun to solidify against it not only Europe but Asia as well.

When the masses of the American workers and farmers are called upon to fight the masses of eastern and western nations for the conquest of the world by American finance capital they may not look so lightly upon the hysterical outbreaks of jingoism that mark the present premier position of the United States as the financial overlord of capitalist civilization.

Aiding the Garment Strikers.

The striking garment workers will appreciate the financial support promised them by the last meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor speaking in the name of organized labor in this city but they would appreciate more and organized labor as a whole would be benefited more by a display of economic power.

The task of getting unions in other industries to strike in sympathy with the garment workers is a little too big in the present stage of the development that the American labor movement but a wholesale violation of the injunction against picketing by officials and members of the local labor organizations would, we believe, be the next best thing. The DAILY WORKER has urged the use of this tactic from the first day the injunction was issued but altho the American Federation of Labor is on record for violation of injunctions, President Gompers came to Chicago, stopped at the Morrison hotel and left again without uttering a single word against the injunction now in force. The tentative plans for a parade of labor organizations thru the loop district in a demonstration against the injunction have also been dropped; all that is left of the plan is the proposal to seat striking garment workers on a float and solicit onlookers for strike donations.

The suggestion of Sam Gordon, sentenced to 30 days in jail by Sullivan for injunction violation, that a float be run denouncing injunctions and injunction judges, received applause in the federation meeting but not approval altho it came the nearest to being anything savoring of a militant nature.

The garment workers will probably win their strike with financial assistance but nothing will have been settled. The injunction will stand to be used again whenever a strike impends.

Nothing is ever settled until it is settled right and injunctions will continue to hamper labor until labor unites against them as the bosses do for them and shows the employers and their kept courts that they will not be bound by legal red tape in their fight against exploitation.

Soviet Russia and British Bankers

We remarked the other day a change in the tone of the British capitalist press when commenting on the Anglo-Russian negotiations and expressed the opinion that the fact that Soviet representatives had shown no disposition to discuss any trade matters until all political questions had been settled, was largely responsible for the change in front.

The London Daily Herald furnishes an additional reason. W. P. Coates has issued a pamphlet entitled "Russia's Counter-Claims" which sets forth with great wealth of detail the facts upon which Soviet Russia's damage case against the government of Great Britain is based. The counter-claims presented by Soviet Russia for injury to property and loss of life during the invasions and counter revolutions engineered and financed by the British government and British capitalists exceed by millions of pounds the British claims arising out of the expropriation of British property owners by the Soviet government. Speaking of the data contained in the Coates pamphlet, the Daily Herald says:

> That Russia has, in international law, a perfectly good case, can scarcely be questioned. No state of war existed between the Soviet Republic and the British Empire. The action of our Government in sending munitions and men to the aid of the various "White" generals was a complete violation of its international duty. At the worst it was murder and piracy. At the best it was the giving of armed assistance to one of the parties in a civil war.
> The case of the Alabama is conclusive. We then admitted liability to pay damage for mere negligence in allowing a British-built ship to be used for the destruction of Federal commerce. In the Russian case the British government, not by negligence but by overt acts, was directly responsible for far greater damage done by British ships, munitions and men.
> That fact has got to be honestly faced. For any attempt to evade it could only result in the destruction of the country's moral credit. We have ourselves been instrumental in framing the international law on the question. We must accept the law even when it tells against ourselves.
> Mr. Coates' pamphlet—with a preface by the chairman of the Trades Union Congress—does face the facts. And it deserves careful reading, not only by everyone who wants to understand the forthcoming negotiations, but by everyone who wants to realize what vile work was done in the name of this country by the men who were so recently its rulers and who aspire to rule it again.

Just before the negotiations began the MacDonald government was presented with a memorandum signed by London's leading bankers urging it to make no concessions to the Soviet representatives and the British capitalist press applauded loudly. The statement in the Daily Herald is evidently a warning to the financial fraternity that in the matter of dealing on a basis of equality with Soviet Russia and the recognition of the justice of the Russian claims f[illegible] der, ravage and rapine perpetra[illegible] British capitalism, the labor [illegible] party is going to stand for no [illegible]

Five hundred workers are [illegible] and the police prevent th[illegible] Capek's "Robots" in that indu[illegible] taxing our credulity a little to[illegible] that the policemen themselves had [illegible] the Capek play contains a revolutionary message and it follows therefore that the censorship was exercised at the behest of the industrial magnates of that community.

We hear a good deal about the impartiality of art—especially when artists for one reason or another see fit to glorify some phase of the existing system; "Rossum's Universal Robots" is art but it is not impartial; it strikes a great blow at the automatonizing process to which the workers are subjected by modern industrial capitalism and no worker can see the play without having at least a spark of hope arouse in his breast.

It was probably a wise thing that the Pullman rulers did, viewing the incident from their standpoint, but we want to take this opportunity to point out to our artistic friends who balk sometimes at the eminently practical character of the Communist movement that the emancipation of the artists of the pen, brush and chisel can be accomplished only by alliance with the working class. The artists are no more free under capitalism than are the wage-earners, as the Pullman incident shows.

A policemen, taking his orders from the master of thousands of wave-slaves, makes no distinction between a great work of art like Capek's play and the utterances of a soap-boxer if his bosses discover that art too can endanger the grip of the capitalists on the minds of the masses.

The production of Capek's "Robots" was stopped in Pullman Sunday but the process of robotising the workers there is carried on at full speed.

Progressives--Liberals--and Communists

By TOM MATTHEWS.

IN the woefully reactionary American labor movement a leader need not stand far in advance of his fellows to gain a reputation for progressiveness. In fact, to differ from the trade union bureaucracy on even one fundamental issue stamps a trade unionist as being progressive.

John Fitzpatrick became an outstanding progressive thru his stand for independent political action and his implied support of industrial unionism. John Brophy became a "progressive" by supporting nationalization of the coal mines. William H. Johnson is regarded as a progressive even today because of his support in the past for industrial unionism thru amalgamation, independent political action, and recognition of Soviet Russia.

Judging by the records of such progressives as these, we may safely say that the progressive gains his reputation by taking a stand more or less in advance of the crowd on certain vital questions affecting the welfare of the labor movement. (We see this to be true equally on the political field, where La Follette wins renown thru taking a position far in advance of the Republican party, while even Hiram Johnson lays some claim to progressiveness by differing with the Republican machine to some slight degree.)

Words Versus Deeds.

Wherein does the progressive trade unionist differ from the Communist trade unionist?

John Fitzpatrick became one of the foremost exponents of the idea of independent political action in the American trade union movement. He went even so far as co-operate with the Communists in the calling of a great national convention for the purpose of forming a mass Farmer-Labor Party. Yet when the convention convened with 700 delegates and the formation of such a party became an immediate possibility, Fitzpatrick "backslid" and in so doing he "slid" so far as even to denounce the very Communists with whom he had cooperated in calling the convention. Why?

John Brophy collaborated in a program for the nationalization of the coal mines for the consideration of the Miners' Union. Yet when the time came for Brophy to put up a fight he deserted the ship and defended the Lewis administration, which had sunk a knife into his program. Why?

William H. Johnson succeeded in getting together an organization representative of over a million organized workers for "progressive political action" and was himself elected chairman of that organization, yet we see that organization refusing to move forward to independent political action, while its leaders indorse the discredited McAdoo for the presidency of the United States. Why?

Liberal Nonsense.

"If the Communists would keep their hands off and not try to force the movement ahead too fast," these liberals say, "such denouncements would not occur."

To liberals who stand off afar and study surface eruptions thru field glasses, such reasoning may seem logical, but to those who actually participate in the broad labor movement, it is nothing more than sheer nonsense.

As a matter of fact, these liberals themselves play a more important role in connection with the treason of the progressives, when such occurs, than we Communists may wish to admit. It would seem strange indeed, if a progressive, about to embark upon some great national undertaking in co-operation with the Communists, should not be affected by the continual warnings and insinuations, whispered and open, of the liberals:

"Look out for these Communists. They will try to lead the movement too far ahead."

"Be careful or those Communists will capture the movement away from you."

"Those Communists take all their orders from Moscow. Those Russians don't understand the problems you are facing. They will lead you into a blind alley if you don't watch out, etc., etc."

Rare indeed, is the progressive who is so well ballasted as to pay no attention to such underhanded propaganda as is continually being carried on by these liberals.

Fear of the Reaction.

While this poisonous propaganda of the liberals has a telling effect on the progressives, it is not always the principal cause of traitorous actions.

Every leader derives a certain pleasure and personal satisfaction from his "leadership." To John Fitzpatrick the presidency of the Chicago Federation of Labor is the "be all and the end all here." William H. Johnson regards the presidency of the International Association of Machinists no less highly.

(The same may prove true in the case of La Follette. He is not overly anxious to give up the committee chairmanships which fall to his lot as a Republican leader.)

To these gentlemen their positions are something tangible, something which they possess here and now. As one so-called liberal has unwittingly expressed it, they fear having to give up these positions to enter "the desert, full of wild tribes, with whom responsible trade unionists cannot possibly co-operate."

"Responsible trade unionists" cannot co-operate with the Communists, according to this liberal, for they might lose their positions of responsibility and be "kicked out of the American Federation of Labor."

With the proper interpretation placed upon his high-sounding words, this liberal is eminently correct. The "practical progressive" prefers his position of responsibility in the old movement to the position of leadership in the new, for the former means a regular salary as long as he "behaves", while the latter may call for that sacrifice which always falls to the lot of the pioneer. It does not matter that he may be "responsible" to the Gompers' bureaucracy rather than to the rank and file.

Communists Willing to Co-operate.

Treason and betrayal are to be expected of the progressives, yet the Communists will cooperate with them in spite of that possibility. Even tho a progressive be right on only one issue, the Communists will co-operate with him on that issue and go down the line for it. Whether it be for amalgamation of the trade unions, recognition of Soviet Russia, protection of the foreign-born workers, organization of the unorganized, or for any other issue vital to the labor movement the Communists will be found willing at all times to co-operate to the limit of their ability and patience.

By PROJECTOR.

"UNDER THE RED ROBE"—NO REVOLT FILM.

This is Hearst's latest venture in the field of "heroic" film. The principal character is a down-at-the-heels nobleman who saves his own neck by turning stool pigeon against the rebels who were plotting against King and Cardinal. He tackles the job in approved style, by getting into the confidence of the conspirators thru an inn brawl brought on by indiscreet public avowal of their cause. He then vamps the sister of the rebel leader, learns from her the hiding place of her brother, and proceeds to arrest him on the Cardinal's warrant.

When he gets to the very gates of Paris, however, his love for the girl whose confidence he betrayed, impels him to another double-cross and he goes back to take his punishment. The Cardinal's sudden fall from grace has stripped him of the power to carry out his sentence, so instead the "hero" is rewarded for his "fidelity" to the Cardinal during the dark day. In the end, the King himself engineers the clinch.

Robert Mantell invests Richelieu with a dignity seldom seen on the screen. Most of the other actors look very uncomfortable in their costumes—or is it perhaps their role? Alma Rubens, playing the conspirator's sister, is strikingly beautiful, but Mary MacLaren, from whom one might expect much in the role, is a very much ill-at-ease Anne of Austria. The only set-off against the glorification of the Cardinal and his stool-pigeon is the contemptuous role or royalty in general thru the picture. Unfaithful, cowardly, indecisive, useless appendages, the Kings and Dukes and their retinue fuss and fume while the Cardinal in building up his governmental machine, employs every art and wile dear to the ways of the political faction builder.

The picture is said to have cost a million and a half. The front page space and service of high priced cartoonists, special writers, and other hangers-on of the Hearst machine, must cost as much more. "Heroism" of this kind generally comes high. Bought and paid for.

A theatre in Philadelphia recently used a couple of bales of German marks on which to imprint its throwaways for the picture "Why Worry?". The fellow who is compelled to worry is the German worker, paid in this depreciated junk, and saddled with its weight by Hell an' Maria Dawes.

American Finance Imperialism in Action

By JAY LOVESTONE.

Dollar Diplomacy Exposed

The DAILY WORKER begins today the publication of a series of eight articles on the development of American imperialism and the problems arising there for the working and farming classes.

These articles are the result of an extensive study and are the report on imperialism adopted by the last convention of the Workers Party. The whole subject has been brought up-to-date.

In view of the rapid strides now being made by the American capitalists towards world financial, industrial, and commercial domination, this investigation is of especial importance today. The articles will prove particularly interesting and instructive and gather added importance just now because of the serious turn that the relations between Japan and America are taking.

Begin today! Follow up the series regularly. Recommend them to your friends. The dangers of American imperialism menace you and all your brothers in the factory, in the coal pit, and on the farm. If you want to know how the workers and farmers of this country can avoid the grave consequences of the new campaigns of aggression the American employing class is preparing, if you want to know what the Communists propose to do to meet this challenge flung at the working class by the bosses and their government, then read and consider carefully the whole series of articles written especially for the DAILY WORKER by Jay Lovestone, Director of the Research Department of the Workers Party of America.

Article One.

The United States entered the arena of capitalist imperialism as a world power after the Spanish American war in 1898.

After having routed Spain the United States secured undisputed control of the American Mediterranean—the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean—Porto Rico was annexed. A protectorate was established over Cuba.

In Cuba there is invested about $1,000,000,000 of American capital in the sugar industry alone. This is 60 per cent of the total capitalization of the sugar industry. Fully 85 per cent of the capital invested in the Cuban railways is American. One third of Cuba's imports is edible and more than half of that third comes from the United States. According to the last reports of the Department of Commerce, Cuba has outstripped Japan as our second best customer in steel.

In the Philippines the American imperialists have a territory the size of the kingdom of Italy and with a population greater than that of Canada and Hungary. Sixty-five per cent of the foreign commerce of the Philippines is done with this country. Close to $300,000,000 of American capital is now invested in these islands which are teeming with natural resources and are only three days away from China, the richest and cheapest labor mine in the world. They are the gateway of American capital to the prize market of the Far East where 800,000,000 people live.

Then followed the complete domination by the United States of the successful engineering of the revolt of Panama against the Republic of Colombia. Having secured "general supervision" of the new government and unrestricted control of the Canal Zone, the American capitalists proceeded to establish their hegemony over Nicaragua and mastery of the alternative canal route. Scarcely had the ink dried on Wilson's democratic notes when American troops dissolved the Haitian parliament. Today the United States is the political master of over 150,000 square miles and almost 10,000,000 people in Central America and the Caribbean, which has become an American lake. In the Pacific, the United States has an island of an area of more than 125,000 square miles and a population of close to 13,000,000.

Peaceful Penetration.

Our imperialists are also engaged in the peaceful penetration of other countries. In recent years particular attention has been paid by our capitalists to Canada, Mexico, Central and South America. Because of the collapse of the European market American investors and merchants have been making especially strong efforts to develop these markets. In the Latin American countries the United States has today invested $610,000,000 in public securities and $3,150,000,000 in industries.

IN CANADA.

The last annual report of the Canadian Commissioner of Trade shows the rapidity and extent of the hold the Yankee exploiters have on Canadian resources. The total amount of American capital invested in Canada is more than $2,500,000,000 and is today more than the entire British interest. American investors now hold 18½ per cent or $701,000,000 of Canadian government, provincial and municipal securities as against only 12.8 per cent or $511,000,000 held by British investors. Almost 25 per cent (24.1) of the Canadian Pacific Railway shares are in the hands of American capitalists. American interests are rapidly assuming control of Canada's mines, railways, motor car and accessories industries, meat packing, rubber, paint, metals, pulp and paper, and refined petroleum industries.

In the manufacturing and associated water power industries the American investments are now placed at well over one billion dollars. British investments in similar enterprises are only 350 million dollars. In Canadian public utilities forest, and mining industries American investments are estimated as considerably in excess of British investments.

Sixty-one per cent of the capital invested in the motor car industry was found to be American in 1919. More than 40 per cent of the electrical apparatus, meat packing, rubber, paint, varnish, brass, copper, condensed milk, and refined petroleum are United States owned. In 1920 approximately $250,000,000 of the United States money was invested in the Canadian pulp and paper industry. This was about 80 per cent of the total capital invested in that industry. Approximately one-eighth of the total American trade with the world is with Canada. $979,079,003.00.

CLEVELAND LABOR FIGHTS PLAN TO JAIL 6 WORKERS

Then Endorses Project For New Jail

CLEVELAND, April 21.—The Cleveland Federation of Labor at its last meeting passed a resolution condemning the attitude of the authorities in the city of Farrell, Pa., where six members of the South Slavic Federation of the Workers Party will go on trial under the criminal syndicalism law of the state of Pennsylvania. The unions of Cleveland are helping the defense council and several of them have already voted financial assistance, among them the joint board of the Amalgamated, $15; Painters' Local, $25, and Slate and Tile Roofers, $25. An effort is being made to put the case before all trade unions in the city of Cleveland before the trial today.

Build Jail for Themselves.

The federation at the same time voted to indorse a proposition to build a new jail and county building after listening to a representative from the Chamber of Commerce, who, strange as it may seem, came to plead with organized labor for the support of this measure in the city election.

The building tradesmen were unanimous in the support of building a new jail, as it would give more work to them, but warned the Chamber of Commerce representative that if there was going to be any attempt made to erect the building under the so-called open shop the Building Trades Council would be ready to "fight you to the limit, as we are always fighting your Chamber of Commerce and do not trust you."

For Workers Only.

Several embarrassing questions were asked this worthy representative of the capitalist class, as for instance whether only members of the working class would fill the jail, with all of the rich idlers who ought to be in jail going free. He was told by another delegate that the economic society which he was helping to defend was the cause of all the social evils and therefore also the jails.

The opposition was led by a delegate from the printers' union, who accused the Chamber of Commerce of trying to break up the unions, and informed the delegates that these Chamber of Commerce men have all their printing done at a scab shop. The delegates seemed to be very disinterested when speakers were only arguing on the basis of taxes, but were much more enthused when the Chamber of Commerce was assailed as an enemy of labor.

WORKERS IN OHIO PREPARING FOR CLASS F.-L. PARTY

Central Labor Councils Going On Record

CLEVELAND, April 21.—That the organized workers in the state of Ohio are beginning to realize the necessity for independent political action can be judged by the groups of organized labor that have gone on record for a state farmer-labor party and for the June 17 convention.

The Central Labor Councils of Mansfield and Lima have recently indorsed a call for a state party and have elected committees to carry on the work of co-operating with other organizations. A call will be issued in the near future for a state convention, it is expected. The joint board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in Cleveland has indorsed a resolution similar to the ones passed by the two central bodies.

The movement for a class farmer-labor party, however, is growing by leaps and bounds. The rank and file of the unions are sick and tired of the old policy and some of them have smelled the trap set in the call, which states only that labor shall go into independent non-political action. The workers fear that an attempt will be made to give over the conference to the C. P. P. A. and indorse McAdoo or some other oily or near-oily candidate, as the electrical workers' international heads have indorsed McAdoo and Coolidge for presidential candidates for the two respective parties.

PROFITEERING WAR CONTRACTS FOR NEXT STRUGGLE UNDER WAY; SHELVE CONSCRIPTION OF LABOR

(By Federated Press.)

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Direct conscription of labor at the time of next war "or national emergency" is reluctantly but surely being abandoned by the strategists of the army general staff, and economic mobilization with a guaranty of fat profits and immediate contract orders, is being substituted. "Patriotic" labor leaders are to deliver the workers to the war crowd, and martial law will do the rest.

The Federated Press is informed that 50 officers have been working full time, and 300 officers part time, during the past year, on plans for the next war mobilization. It is informed that the draft of the detailed contract which is to be signed and delivered to some 6,000 manufacturers in all parts of the country, to be made effective upon the declaration of war, will be completed within a few weeks.

Guarantee Profiteering.

This war supplies contract, far from conscripting the materials and money available in the United States, as has been promised by the military propagandists ever since the world war, will be a definite assurance to the manufacturer that he can operate at a profit and can operate immediately—when war comes. If the business interests of the country line up for a war, and stamp out pacifism at the critical moment, the manufacturers will make their own killing.

Promise is made that the profits will rise with the efficiency of the manufacturer. Costplus contracts will be abandoned, and premium will be laid upon cheapness of production, and upon speed. No guaranty of short hours and high wages is mentioned. Labor must look after its own interests.

Legion's Bill Modified.

This scheme of insuring a greed-inspired clamor for war thruout the country is to be offered as a modification of the American Legion's conscription bill, which was written in the War Department and was introduced in Congress by Senator Capper of Kansas and Representative Johnson of South Dakota. The bill (H. R. 4841) provides that "in the event of a national emergency declared by Congress to exist which in the judgment of the President demands the immediate increase of the military establishment, the President be and he hereby is authorized to draft into the service of the United States such members of the unorganized militia as he may deem necessary; Provided, that all persons drafted into service between the ages of 21 and 30, or such other limits as the President may fix, shall be drafted without exemption on account of industrial occupation."

That last phrase covers labor in general, and is the clause which has struck a snag.

War Contracts in Advance.

Army men say the war machinery could be organized after the declaration of war, and pressure could be brought upon any group of labor or of employers that failed to fall in line. But in the meantime contracts now prepared will have been locked in the office safes of thousands of big manufacturers, and their alluring terms will be known to the directors of tens of thousands of banks, and other thousans of newspaper publishers, political bosses and other molders of public opinion. And in the event of Congress failing to pass this Capper-Johnson bill or any other conscription measure, the powder trains for setting off a war will still have been laid.

Hoover for Dictatorship.

Herbert Hoover, testifying before the House military affairs committee, has shown that he is not satisfied with anything less than full conscription. He would put "war industries" under an individual administrator, and would make the President dictator in time of war. He would empower the President to "fix prices, wages, transportation charges . . . . and to suspend habeas corpus and have generally complete and absolute authority in all ramifications over the whole civilian life, with the provision that he may delegate the authority thru various agencies.

Would Abolish Jury Trials.

"I would favor trial by court-martial for violations of any of the decrees made by the President or his agencies in pursuance of such powers, vested in the President or delegated by him. The law would naturally assume that every person is recruited into the service of the government, and court-martials would necessarily be the means of enforcing it."

CASH BONUS PLAN DOOMED; VETS TO GET INSURANCE

Cal's Tombstone Silence Is Discouraging

WASHINGTON, April 21.—The silence of President Coolidge has killed the cash soldier bonus—even tho a big majority in the Senate favors it.

Just a word from him could revive it, but his closest friends gave assurances today he would not speak that word.

As a result war veterans probably will get a 20-year endowment insurance policy, valued up to $500, depending upon the length of service.

Expect Passage Today.

The bill embodying this plan will probably be passed by the Senate late today or tomorrow. It will be written in almost the same form as that adopted by the House.

If President Coolidge chooses to veto it, as expected, bonus adherents say they will shoot it thru over his objections before Congress adjourns. Admittedly they have the votes to do it.

Democrats have tacitly decided to drop their cash option plan, which would have enabled soldiers to choose between an insurance policy or cash. It is now before the Senate, but it will not be pressed unless unforeseen developments occur.

Cal Silent as Tombstone.

The continued silence of the chief executive in the face of insistent pleas from the Democrats during the last three days has convinced them that Mr. Coolidge would veto the cash option bill even if it passed.

There are not enough proponents of the cash plan to control a two-thirds vote necessary to pass it over his veto.

As soon as the bonus is out of the way the Senate will take up the tax bill. The Army and Navy Department appropriations bill may be sandwiched in between, but leaders expect the tax bill to become the unfinished business before the end of the week.

THIRSTY SOULS BEG CONGRESS FOR '2.75' BEER

A. F. of L. In Wet Group Before Committee

WASHINGTON, April 21.— Beer and anti-beer groups battled today before the house judiciary committee in support of their views.

Fifty-nine identical beer bills, all of which would permit the manufacture and sale of a pre-Volsted beverage, were taken up by the committee, while advocates of modification of the Volstead act urged adoption of one of them and drys condemned them all.

The house wet bloc, headed by Representatives Hill, Maryland, and Dyer, Missouri, brought the bills to the committee's attention today at a public hearing. Both Dyer and Hill were scheduled to deliver speeches in behalf of favorable committee action.

A. F. of L. Will Be Heard.

Representatives of the Joint Legislative Committee, American Federation of Labor, the association against the eighteenth amendment, the Constitutional Liberty League of Massachusetts, and the Moderation League, incorporated, will then be heard.

Julian Codman, Boston, a spokesman for the fourth organization, will tell the committee that the modification groups represent a voting strength of five million and that these people regard the Volstead law as a failure.

Representatives of the American Federation of Labor will follow Codman.

Wayne B. Wheeler, leader of the anti-saloon league forces, will tell the committee that the proposed beer modification of the law is only the first wedge which foes of prohibition hope to drive into the law.

"2.75" Beer Is Wet Goal.

The proposed beer bill would amend the Volstead act by defining intoxicating alcohol content to be 2.75 per cent. This 2.75 per cent, once the butt of all ridicule, has now become one of the longed-for goals of those who yearn for beer, however, weak.

Jingoism In Excelsis

It must be a painful thing to be a 100 per cent American and live in constant fear of blood dilution thru mixture with some other nationality. That the life of the 100 per center is a nightmare of this sort is indicated by the wild alarums now sounded by some of the tribe following the passage of this sort is indicated by the wild alarums now Japanese exclusion act.

A number of the small-caliber statesmen who infest the capitol are proposing now that a soldier be stationed every hundred yards along the Canadian and Mexican borders to keep out any aliens who might be tempted to slip in and the proposal has the enthusiastic support of all the militarists who are quick to seize every opportunity that can be used as an excuse to increase the rank and file of the army and thereby the official caste.

As for the native sons of California who stirred up the Japanese mess they are still standing pat but fate seems to be against them. In addition to the boycott on California products sponsored by the I. W. W. in retaliation for the persecution of their members, California stock has developed hoof and mouth disease and the neighboring commonwealths have thrown a sanitary cordon around the Golden State just as the tourist season is about to begin; the Japanese have also instituted a boycott and, altho the Californian capitalists may deny it, it is going to hurt the California god—business—very severely.

Manuel Quezon, head of the Phillipine independence mission, has also denounced the action of congress and the senate in totally excluding Japanese and he appears to voice the general sentiment of the masses thruout the Orient.

American imperialism may feel strong enough to antagonize the whole world, to shut its doors to the populations it is exploiting by means of huge loans to foreign capitalists and governments but from the Communist point of view American imperialism has, by its catering to the prejudices of the Nordics whose heads are supposed to denote unusual ability to rule, begun to solidify against it not only Europe but Asia as well.

When the masses of the American workers and farmers are called upon to fight the masses of eastern and western nations for the conquest of the world by American finance capital they may not look so lightly upon the hysterical outbreaks of jingoism that mark the present premier position of the United States as the financial overlord of capitalist civilization.

Aiding the Garment Strikers.

The striking garment workers will appreciate the financial support promised them by the last meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor speaking in the name of organized labor in this city but they would appreciate more and organized labor as a whole would be benefited more by a display of economic power.

The task of getting unions in other industries to strike in sympathy with the garment workers is a little too big in the present stage of the development that the American labor movement but a wholesale violation of the injunction against picketing by officials and members of the local labor organizations would, we believe, be the next best thing. The DAILY WORKER has urged the use of this tactic from the first day the injunction was issued but altho the American Federation of Labor is on record for violation of injunctions, President Gompers came to Chicago, stopped at the Morrison hotel and left again without uttering a single word against the injunction now in force. The tentative plans for a parade of labor organizations thru the loop district in a demonstration against the injunction have also been dropped; all that is left of the plan is the proposal to seat striking garment workers on a float and solicit onlookers for strike donations.

The suggestion of Sam Gordon, sentenced to 30 days in jail by Sullivan for injunction violation, that a float be run denouncing injunctions and injunction judges, received applause in the federation meeting but not approval altho it came the nearest to being anything savoring of a militant nature.

The garment workers will probably win their strike with financial assistance but nothing will have been settled. The injunction will stand to be used again whenever a strike impends.

Nothing is ever settled until it is settled right and injunctions will continue to hamper labor until labor unites against them as the bosses do for them and shows the employers and their kept courts that they will not be bound by legal red tape in their fight against exploitation.

Soviet Russia and British Bankers

We remarked the other day a change in the tone of the British capitalist press when commenting on the Anglo-Russian negotiations and expressed the opinion that the fact that Soviet representatives had shown no disposition to discuss any trade matters until all political questions had been settled, was largely responsible for the change in front.

The London Daily Herald furnishes an additional reason. W. P. Coates has issued a pamphlet entitled "Russia's Counter-Claims" which sets forth with great wealth of detail the facts upon which Soviet Russia's damage case against the government of Great Britain is based. The counter-claims presented by Soviet Russia for injury to property and loss of life during the invasions and counter revolutions engineered and financed by the British government and British capitalists exceed by millions of pounds the British claims arising out of the expropriation of British property owners by the Soviet government. Speaking of the data contained in the Coates pamphlet, the Daily Herald says:

> That Russia has, in international law, a perfectly good case, can scarcely be questioned. No state of war existed between the Soviet Republic and the British Empire. The action of our Government in sending munitions and men to the aid of the various "White" generals was a complete violation of its international duty. At the worst it was murder and piracy. At the best it was the giving of armed assistance to one of the parties in a civil war.
> The case of the Alabama is conclusive. We then admitted liability to pay damage for mere negligence in allowing a British-built ship to be used for the destruction of Federal commerce. In the Russian case the British government, not by negligence but by overt acts, was directly responsible for far greater damage done by British ships, munitions and men.
> That fact has got to be honestly faced. For any attempt to evade it could only result in the destruction of the country's moral credit. We have ourselves been instrumental in framing the international law on the question. We must accept the law even when it tells against ourselves.
> Mr. Coates' pamphlet—with a preface by the chairman of the Trades Union Congress—does face the facts. And it deserves careful reading, not only by everyone who wants to understand the forthcoming negotiations, but by everyone who wants to realize what vile work was done in the name of this country by the men who were so recently its rulers and who aspire to rule it again.

Just before the negotiations began the MacDonald government was presented with a memorandum signed by London's leading bankers urging it to make no concessions to the Soviet representatives and the British capitalist press applauded loudly. The statement in the Daily Herald is evidently a warning to the financial fraternity that in the matter of dealing on a basis of equality with Soviet Russia and the recognition of the justice of the Russian claims for the murder, ravage and rapine perpetrated by agents of British capitalism, the labor wing of the Labor party is going to stand for no nonsense.

Art and The Boss Class

Five hundred workers are on strike in Pullman and the police prevent the showing of Karl Capek's "Robots" in that industrial suburb. It is taxing our credulity a little too much to believe that the policemen themselves had discovered that the Capek play contains a revolutionary message and it follows therefore that the censorship was exercised at the behest of the industrial magnates of that community.

We hear a good deal about the impartiality of art—especially when artists for one reason or another see fit to glorify some phase of the existing system; "Rossum's Universal Robots" is art but it is not impartial; it strikes a great blow at the automatonizing process to which the workers are subjected by modern industrial capitalism and no worker can see the play without having at least a spark of hope arouse in his breast.

It was probably a wise thing that the Pullman rulers did, viewing the incident from their standpoint, but we want to take this opportunity to point out to our artistic friends who balk sometimes at the eminently practical character of the Communist movement that the emancipation of the artists of the pen, brush and chisel can be accomplished only by alliance with the working class. The artists are no more free under capitalism than are the wage-earners, as the Pullman incident shows.

A policemen, taking his orders from the master of thousands of wave-slaves, makes no distinction between a great work of art like Capek's play and the utterances of a soap-boxer if his bosses discover that art too can endanger the grip of the capitalists on the minds of the masses.

The production of Capck's "Robots" was stopped in Pullman Sunday but the process of robotising the workers there is carried on at full speed.

Perhaps "Hell and Maria" Dawes is favored as running-mate for Coolidge because they need someone who can talk language the cabinet can understa

Progressives--Liberals--and Communists

By TOM MATTHEWS.

IN the woefully reactionary American labor movement a leader need not stand far in advance of his fellows to gain a reputation for progressiveness. In fact, to differ from the trade union bureaucracy on even one fundamental issue stamps a trade unionist as being progressive.

John Fitzpatrick became an outstanding progressive thru his stand for independent political action and his implied support of industrial unionism. John Brophy became a "progressive" by supporting nationalization of the coal mines. William H. Johnson is regarded as a progressive even today because of his support in the past for industrial unionism thru amalgamation, independent political action, and recognition of Soviet Russia.

Judging by the records of such progressives as these, we may safely say that the progressive gains his reputation by taking a stand more or less in advance of the crowd on certain vital questions affecting the welfare of the labor movement. (We see this to be true equally on the political field, where La Follette wins renown thru taking a position far in advance of the Republican party, while even Hiram Johnson lays some claim to progressiveness by differing with the Republican machine to some slight degree.)

Words Versus Deeds.

Wherein does the progressive trade unionist differ from the Communist trade unionist?

John Fitzpatrick became one of the foremost exponents of the idea of independent political action in the American trade union movement. He went even so far as co-operate with the Communists in the calling of a great national convention for the purpose of forming a mass Farmer-Labor Party. Yet when the convention convened with 700 delegates and the formation of such a party became an immediate possibility, Fitzpatrick "backslid" and in so doing he "slid" so far as even to denounce the very Communists with whom he had co-operated in calling the convention. Why?

John Brophy collaborated in a program for the nationalization of the coal mines for the consideration of the Miners' Union. Yet when the time came for Brophy to put up a fight he deserted the ship and defended the Lewis administration, which had sunk a knife into his program. Why?

William H. Johnson succeeded in getting together an organization representative of over a million organized workers for "progressive political action" and was himself elected chairman of that organization, yet we see that organization refusing to move forward to independent political action, while its leaders indorse the discredited McAdoo for the presidency of the United States. Why?

Liberal Nonsense.

"If the Communists would keep their hands off and not try to force the movement ahead too fast," these liberals say, "such denouncements would not occur."

To liberals who stand off afar and study surface eruptions thru field glasses, such reasoning may seem logical, but to those who actually participate in the broad labor movement, it is nothing more than sheer nonsense.

As a matter of fact, these liberals themselves play a more important role in connection with the treason of the progressives, when such occurs, than we Communists may wish to admit. It would seem strange indeed, if a progressive, about to embark upon some great national undertaking in co-operation with the Communists, should not be affected by the continual warnings and insinuations, whispered and open, of the liberals:

"Look out for these Communists. They will try to lead the movement too far ahead."

"Be careful or those Communists will capture the movement away from you."

"Those Communists take all their orders from Moscow. Those Russians don't understand the problems you are facing. They will lead you into a blind alley if you don't watch out, etc., etc."

Rare indeed, is the progressive who is so well ballasted as to pay no attention to such underhanded propaganda as is continually being carried on by these liberals.

Fear of the Reaction.

While this poisonous propaganda of the liberals has a telling effect on the progressives, it is not always the principal cause of traitorous actions.

Every leader derives a certain pleasure and personal satisfaction from his "leadership." To John Fitzpatrick the presidency of the Chicago Federation of Labor is the "be all and the end all here." William H. Johnson regards the presidency of the International Association of Machinists no less highly.

(The same may prove true in the case of La Follette. He is not overly anxious to give up the committee chairmanships which fall to his lot as a Republican leader.)

To these gentlemen their positions are something tangible, something which they possess here and now. As one so-called liberal has unwittingly expressed it, they fear having to give up these positions to enter "the desert, full of wild tribes, with whom responsible trade unionists cannot possibly co-operate."

"Responsible trade unionists" cannot co-operate with the Communists, according to this liberal, for they might lose their positions of responsibility and be "kicked out of the American Federation of Labor."

With the proper interpretation placed upon his high-sounding words, this liberal is eminently correct. The "practical progressive" prefers his position of responsibility in the old movement to the position of leadership in the new, for the former means a regular salary as long as he "behaves", while the latter may call for that sacrifice which always falls to the lot of the pioneer. It does not matter that he may be "responsible" to the Gompers' bureaucracy rather than to the rank and file.

Communists Willing to Co-operate.

Treason and betrayal are to be expected of the progressives, yet the Communists will cooperate with them in spite of that possibility. Even tho a progressive be right on only one issue, the Communists will co-operate with him on that issue and go down the line for it. Whether it be for amalgamation of the trade unions, recognition of Soviet Russia, protection of the foreign-born workers, organization of the unorganized, or for any other issue vital to the labor movement the Communists will be found willing at all times to co-operate to the limit of their ability and patience.

But to all such progressives we Communists say: "We are only too glad to co-operate with you in any undertaking for the good of the broad labor movement, and so long as you stay true to the cause our assistance can be taken for granted. When, however, you should choose to betray the movement we have jointly initiated, we shall consider it our duty to go ahead without you. If you betray the cause, we will only feel that we must strive all the harder for its success. So far as we are concerned, the only limit to your leadership is your own ability, but we shall not hesitate to take over the leadership of the movement if you should try to betray it or lead it back into the swamps of reaction."

Communists Carry On.

When John Fitzpatrick deserted the cause of independent political action, the Communists stepped into the breach he left open and made possible the formation of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party.

When John Brophy betrayed the issue of Nationalization of the coal mines, the Communists carried on the fight and made nationalization a living issue thruout the Mine Workers' Union.

When William H. Johnson's "Conference for Progressive Political Action" declared for the continuation of the time-worn policy of "rewarding friends and punishing enemies," the Communists carried on the struggle for the workers and farmers' party within and without the C. P. P. A.

Future Treason Expected.

We can expect some of the progressives in the future to return to the camp of Reaction, just as they have done in the past.

That does not necessarily mean, however, that the progressives are hopelessly lost to the movement when they stray away. If the lost progressive is sincere in his intentions—if he has the welfare of the broad labor movement at heart—it is entirely possible that sooner or later he may realize the enormity of his mistake and again take the lead.

In fact, we have the right to expect (if our movement has the sound foundation we believe it to have) that some golden day there will appear a number of progressives who will kick over the traces and announce openly and without reservation his conversion to Communism. When that happens an entirely different complexion will be placed on the American labor.

The Communist work for the advancement of the broad labor movement must go on, with or without the progressives. We prefer to have them go along with us, and we will even make minor concessions for the sake of their co-operation, but under no circumstances will we follow them on any trail which leads away from the American labor movement.

An Arabian Night's Fantasy

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN.

Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherezade," a work in four movements descriptive of the Arabian Nights was played on the twenty-seventh regular program of the Chicago Symphony orchestra at Orchestra Hall on April 18 and 19. Few composers have written more brilliant Oriental work of the Russian composer. Thruout all the movements, binding them together, is a theme in a sole violin, representative of the Sultana Scheherezade telling her marvelous stories. The first movement describes the sea, and the ship of Sinbad. Undulating rhythms of water play back and forth across the orchestra, with a heavy, stormy figure breaking in at times.

The second movement is a magical one, containing the mystery and sorcery of many of the tales of Scheherezade. It brings up visions of genii conjured out of jars, and of the vast monsters of Arabian legend. The last section tells of a festival at Bagdad, in light, sensuous dance rhythms, and then suddenly switches to a big, culminating climax, telling how Sinbad's ship is wrecked at the foot of a mountain.

Rimsky-Korsakoff was a master of brilliant orchestration, and his mastery was exercised to the fullest in the composition of this suite. But at the same time the music he created is terrifically difficult to play.

A Victory Ball.

Following this was one of the few important musical works directly inspired by the recent war, "A Victory Ball," by Ernest Schelling, the American pianist. Schelling's composition is intended to illustrate a poem by Alfred Noyes. It might not be amiss to quote a stanza or two from Noyes.

"The cymbals crash and the dancers walk,
With long silk stockings and arms of chalk,
Butterfly skirts, and white breasts bare,
And shadows of dead men watching 'em there.

• • • • • •

"'Pish,' said a statesman standing near,
'I'm glad they can busy their thoughts elsewhere!
We mustn't reproach 'em. They're young, you see.'
'Ah,' said the dead men, 'so were we!'

• • • • • •

"Victory! Victory!! On with the dance.
Back to the jungle the new beasts prance!
Watching the fun of the Victory Ball!'"

Ernest Schelling's musical version of this text takes the form of a sort of jazz polonaise, suddenly interrupted by bugle calls and a muffled drum. Follows a weird and ghostly march, with the insistent sounding of three snare drums. This dies away, and the dance is resumed.

"Parsifal"

Three excerpts from Wagner's "Parsifal" followed. "Parsifal" was the last completed work of Richard Wagner, a music drama of religious symbolism. It is interesting to see the change in the German composer's genius as he became successful and honored. As a young man he was a close personal friend and disciple of Michel Bakunin, and author of the fiery pamphlet "Art and Revolution," on account of which he was banished from Germany. It was at this time that he wrote the Niblung cycle, big, vital music, but essentially human, into which Bernard Shaw reads an elaborate political allegory.

But the successful Wagner, at the end of his life, is not concerned with men. His genius for musical creation had in no way changed, but his subject deals with Christ, and the mystic and exalted phase of the Christ myth.

As a memorial to Charles Villiers Stanford of London, who died three weeks ago, the concert opened with his first Irish rhapsody. It is tuneful music, but rather drawn out and tiresome.

The concert of next week will be the last of the season. It will open with the Beethoven third "Leonore" overture, followed by the Brahms fourth symphony, Debussy's Spanish suite, the "Ride of the Valkyries" from Wagner's "Die Walkuere", and the same composer's overture to "Tannhaeuser".

LOOK, WHAT A MAN.

By OSKAR KANEHL.

In the court between hired-barracks.
Crammed with warlike slaves.
It bristles with arms.
Bloodthirstiness is screaming stone-walls high.
They bring a man in work-frock.
With kicks and butt-end-blows.
At the wall.
The voice of a boy commands.
Crying pell-mell.
"He has turned off the people. The instigator."
Steel-helmets swarm around him. Threatening.
"He is a robber. A Communist. Their leader."
"Are you that?"—"Yes, I am."
A hired-slave spits amidst his face.
The horde squalls.
"The Spartacist-chieftain, slay him."
And they beat him.
That his pale head of a saint is blood-overrunning.
He doesn't defend himself. He isn't angry.
He is alone. Between beasts.
Look, what a man.
At the wall. Hands up.
"Their chieftain!"
"We will divide his clothes."
Shots are cracking in the noise.
He, at the wall falls ahead on the pavement.
And lies dead.
Rankly of achievements the murderer-pack is raving over him away.
In the fourth story on the window wives are weeping.
Maria, his mother.
And Magdalen.

By PROJECTOR.

"UNDER THE RED ROBE"—NO REVOLT FILM.

This is Hearst's latest venture in the field of "heroic" film. The principal character is a down-at-the-heels nobleman who saves his own neck by turning stool pigeon against the rebels who were plotting against King and Cardinal. He tackles the job in approved style, by getting into the confidence of the conspirators thru an inn brawl brought on by indiscreet public avowal of their cause. He then vamps the sister of the rebel leader, learns from her the hiding place of her brother, and proceeds to arrest him on the Cardinal's warrant.

When he gets to the very gates of Paris, however, his love for the girl whose confidence he betrayed, impels him to another double-cross and he goes back to take his punishment. The Cardinal's sudden fall from grace has stripped him of the power to carry out his sentence, so instead the "hero" is rewarded for his "fidelity" to the Cardinal during the dark day. In thé end, the King himself engineers the clinch.

Robert Mantell invests Richelieu with a dignity seldom seen on the screen. Most of the other actors look very uncomfortable in their costumes—or is it perhaps their role? Alma Rubens, playing the conspirator's sister, is strikingly beautiful, but Mary MacLaren, from whom one might expect much in the role, is a very much ill-at-ease Anne of Austria. The only set-off against the glorification of the Cardinal and his stool-pigeon is the contemptuous role or royalty in general thru the picture. Unfaithful, cowardly, indecisive, useless appendages, the Kings and Dukes and their retinue fuss and fume while the Cardinal in building up his governmental machine, employs every art and wile dear to the ways of the political faction builder.

The picture is said to have cost a million and a half. The front page space and service of high priced cartoonists, special writers, and other hangers-on of the Hearst machine, must cost as much more. "Heroism" of this kind generally comes high. Bought and paid for.

"It's a fight for our last drop of blood!"

That's the way the strikers in the car works department of the Pullman Company label their struggle against this notorious labor-crushing corporation.

It all came out at the strikers' daily meeting, yesterday, at 158 E. 107th street, when the strikers received the report of the meeting of their representatives with the "company committee."

The spokesman for the Pullman Company, including A. B. Gunn, general efficiency and production manager, and C. D. McLaren, had proposed to the strike committee that the strikers go back to their jobs, and that they accept the cut proposed, of 15 to 45 per cent.

Urge Stop Watch System.

The fawning officials stated that they would have the stop watch system installed and that this would speed up the men so that they could make more money.

When this statement was made to the strikers at their mass meeting, one of the men spontaneously broke out with: "That's the system they've been using to get every drop of blood we've got".

And then another striker chimed in with: "And now they are trying to get the last drop".

Go En Masse For Wages.

This morning, April 23rd, is pay-day in the Pullman plant, and the strikers are going en masse to get what is coming to them. The Pullman workers are paid twice each month. The 500 strikers planned yesterday to meet this morning at 7:30 o'clock at the corner of Cottage Grove Avenue and 111th St., and march together to the paymaster's office.

They are going in a body to get their wages as a precaution against the company officials trying to deal with the strikers individually.

Hegewisch Strike Grows.

The strike at Hegewisch is still on, with new men joining the ranks hourly, the same as in Pullman.

It is reported that many other departments in the huge car works, in addition to those which the strikers left, have been crippled by the strike, so that thousands of workers are idle as a result. In fact, production in the whole plant is gradually coming to a standstill.

BIGGEST FINANCIERS, INDUSTRIALISTS, ARE PULLMAN DIRECTORS

Some of America's greatest bankers and industrialists, from the Morgans to the Vanderbilts, are to be found on the Board of Directors of the Pullman Company, against which another strike has broken out in its own home town—Pullman, Illinois. The list of financial pirates who make up the board of directors of the Pullman Company is as follows:

J. Pierpont Morgan, of the international banking house of Morgan & Co.

W. Seward Webb.
John J. Mitchell.
Chauncey Keep.
George F. Baker.

PULLMAN STRIKE ALARMS BIG ANTI-UNION COMPANY; BOSS SAYS THEY MAY COMPROMISE

The Pullman Company—for the 57 years of its existence fighting labor unions—is trying hard to hide its alarm at the spreading of the strike begun among the riveters, buckers and heaters at the Pullman plant of southside Chicago.

One of the riveters brought the strikers' grievances to F. L Simmons, Supervisor of Industrial Relations for the Pullman Company, at his office in the Pullman Building, 79 East Adams street, according to a special interview given the DAILY WORKER by Mr. Simmons yesterday. The riveter said that he had received a 9 per cent cut, reducing his wages from $12.50 per day to $11.37, by Mr. Simmons' figures.

Pullman Speeding.

The supervisor suggested that the man make up the difference due to wage cut by speeding up, putting out more work in his 9-hour day. The riveter immediately protested that this was impossible with the time he lost going from job to job in the plant. For each job he has to sign a new contract, on his own time, as he is paid only for work put out, not for hours on the job. All the men striking are on a piece work basis, Mr. Simmons stated." Of course this means keen competition among the men striving to keep up with the specially-paid fast pace-setter.

Pullman and Pinkerton.

The Pullman Company was one of the first great monopoly business institutions in this country. It played a prominent part against the workers in the great railroad strike in 1877, employing Pinkerton detectives as spies and sluggers and using the po-

KANSAS SCHOOLS FORCED TO OPEN DOORS TO NEGROES

Segregation Receives Big Set Back.

COFFEYVILLE, Kan., April 22.—Immediately upon the publication of the recent court decision here against the segregation of Negro children in Kansas schools, many towns in the state opened their doors to colored pupils for the first time.

In Wichita the colored children had been denied the use of the swimming pool and other advantages. The Board of Education has now wiped out all discrimination, according to Elisha Scott of Scott and Vandyne, attorneys who handled the case for the National Assoc. for the Advancement of Colored People.

NEW YORK, April 22.—According to the school reports from Georgia received by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Negroes are grossly discriminated against in that state in the appropriation of school funds.

WASHINGTON, April 22. — Impeachment charges against Federal District Judge W. E. Baker of the Northern District of West Virginia, were filed with the speaker of the House of Representatives today, by District Attorney W. T. Brown of the same district.

The charges were formally referred to the House Judiciary Committee by Speaker Gillett.

Brown charged Judge Baker with drunkenness, confiscation and consumption of seized liquors, illegal imprisonment of citizens, irregularities in certifying his expense accounts and other high crimes and misdemeamors.

St. Paul Meet to See 5,000 on June 17th

Gathering Belongs to Producing Masses

ST. PAUL, Minn., April 22.—Altho the official call for the June 17th convention has been in the mails but a few days, the office of the arrangements committee is being flooded with inquiries and pledges of support from all sections of the country.

One farmer from North Dakota writes, "We realize that a great National Farmer-Labor Party is the only hope of the farmers and industrial workers and you can count on the farmers in this state being present if they have to slap another mortgage on their farms to get there. We can't be any worse off than we are now."

Rank and File Convention.

The question asked most frequently is for the basis of representation for various organizations in the convention. The convention to be held in St. Paul on June 17 is distinctly a rank and file convention. In Minnesota, as well as in the other northwest states where successful farmer-labor parties are in existence, experience has shown that, to be successful, this new movement must have its roots firmly planted among the workers and farmers. As soon as the leadership is transferred to a group at the top, the interest and enthusiastic support of the workers and farmers is lost.

The basis of representation was therefore fixed so that every organized unit of workers or farmers could be represented in the convention. Every local union, central body, state federation, farmer organization, cooperative or association of professional men or women agreeing to the platform as contained in the call and committed to the building of an independent political movement in opposition to the two old parties will be given one delegate. This is expected to bring five thousand delegates here, who after participating in the nomination of candidates, will go back to all sections of the country enthused with the convention and ready to do their share in building this new movement.

State political organizations having legal standing are entitled to five delegates, without legal standing one delegate. International or national unions and national political parties are entitled to five delegates.

Farmers Given Consideration.

In order to overcome the fact that the farmers were not organized as well as the industrial workers, a special basis of representation was devised for them which provides that any group of twenty-five farmers may send a delegate to represent them in the convention, provided that they are not represented thru some other organization from their county.

Each state has been allotted a definite number of votes in the convention based on their political vote plus one vote for each five thousand votes cast for the progressive candidate receiving the highest number of votes in the 1922 elections in their state. The votes allotted to each state will be divided up equally among all the delegates present in the convention from that state. Delegates from national organizations will cast their votes independent of the state vote.

This assures a convention that will be truly representative. Yet it is arranged in such a way that it cannot be deflected from its goal of building a real farmer-labor movement. The only elements who can capture it are the producing masses and to them it rightfully belongs.

Sugar Workers In Armed Battle With Bosses In Mexico

(By The Federated Press)

MEXICO CITY, April 22.—Armed conflict between the workers and the officials of the American Sugar Co. of Los Mochis, Sinaloa, is raging. The company refuses a three-shift system of eight hours instead of two-shift system of 12 hours.

The president and his armed guards who started the attack, are barricaded in the main building to hold off the counter attack of the workers. Several deaths on both sides have been reported. Mexican federal troops are coming to the aid of the company.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS AND EMPLOYES SHOWN AS BOOZE RECIPIENTS

WASHINGTON, April 22.—More government officials and employes were named as recipients of liquor seized by the Department of Justice at the hearing of the Senate Daugherty investigating committee.

Warren W. Grimes, department attorney, told the committee that Frank Burke, former chief of the bureau of investigation, ordered large quantities of the seized liquor from a warehouse where it was stored, part of it to his home.

Special Department Agent Ahern and a "Dr. James T. Mitchell" of Washington were also named by Grimes as receivers of some of the liquor.

So far as department records of an investigation of the disappearance of the liquor show, Grimes said, none of it went to the house of E. B. McLean on H street here, while former Attorney General Daugherty and Jess Smith were living there. J. M. Boucher, a department employe, yesterday testified that he had delivered several quarts of it there.

POVERTY, MOTHER OF PROSTITUTION GERMAN SHOWS

Int'l. Workers Aid Gives Proof Of This.

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER.

(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

BERLIN, April 22.—A grim contribution to the question, Why Girls Become Prostitutes, is made by a Berlin physician, Dr. Minna Flake, who lectured on behalf of the International Workers' Aid before a local teachers' association. Citing example after example from her medicinal practice, she showed that it is almost invariably economic need that forces girls upon the streets and into houses of prostitution.

Without a word of comment, simply adding case after case, Dr. Flake gave one of the most stirring addresses ever heard by the teachers. Here are but three cases which she cited, which I give in verbatim translation:

Case I.—"A. G., aged 16. Cash girl in a store. She is found guilty of a minor theft, a ribbon or a pair of gloves, and is fired. She finds a new job but, altho reliable and satisfactory in every way, is dismissed immediately when the management hears of her previous offense. She finds no work, and is scolded at home because she increases the economic difficulties of the family by eating without earning her board. She grows despondent and disappears. She is next heard of as a prostitute."

Case II.—"A. K., aged 17. Intolerable conditions at home. Embittered by hunger, the family quarrels constantly, each blaming the other. The girl serves as maid till November, 1923, but after that tries in vain to find a position. She spends the night in the 'rescue mission,' where all her things are stolen. Then she falls ill with grippe and, as she comes home from the hospital, entirely destitute, the family denies her admission. She now earns her living as a girl of the street."

Case III.—"R. S., aged 15. A case of hopeless loneliness; the mother dead, the father blind, nobody cares about the child, she hasn't any friend and no one to counsel her. She ends as a prostitute. The money thus earned is used either to purchase food or else, since she has an irrepressible desire for something to cheer her up, to visit the movies."

NEW YORK CITY, April 22.—Wall Street's efforts to turn Western Europe into a vassal state of American imperialism, received the full endorsement of the Coolidge republican administration here today.

President Cal Coolidge, speaking before the pick of the kept editors of the nation, at the Associated Press luncheon here today, called up America's bankers to make a large loan to Germany, to assure complete success of the Morgan-Dawes plan.

"I trust that private American capital will be willing to participate in advancing this loan (to Germany under the Dawes plan). Sound business reasons exist why we should participate in financing the work of peace in Europe."

While "Cautious Cal" did not espouse the candidacy of "Hell and Maria" Dawes for the vice-presidency, he held important political conferences while in the city. It is taken for granted that the "Coolidge-Dawes" ticket to be urged at the Cleveland Republican Convention was given thoro consideration.

Coolidge tried to brush aside the numerous scandals that his administration has inherited from the Harding regime, the "most corrupt the nation has ever seen." He tried to assure the capitalist press lackeys listening to him that the era of corruption in Washington old party politics was passing.

Taking up first the scandals, Mr. Coolidge said their genesis lay in the "easy money" era begotten of the war and declared that it was not surprising some government officials had been corrupted.

"From all of this sordidness, the affairs of government, of course, suffered," said the president. "In some of it a few public officers were guilty participants. But the wonder is not that this was so much or so many, rather than it has been so little and so few. The encouraging thing at present is the evidence of a well-nigh complete return to normal methods of action and a sane public opinion."

"Law of Service."

Bloc and minorities must not expect his help, the president said, in raiding the public treasury for money to carry out their projects. Declaring that bill now before congress for projects backed by minorities would spell financial disaster to the nation if their $3,600,000,000 total was appropriated, he said:

"The law of service must be applied to this situation. At present our country does not need a greater outlay of expense, but a greater application of constructive economy."

He made in this connection a passing reference to the bonus but did not reveal his attitude on the insurance plan bonus bill now in its final stages in congress.

On taxes the president criticized congress for its failure "up to the present time accurately to comprehend and expeditiously to minister to the need of taxation reform," but said he believed in spite of this there would be tax reduction. He assailed the opponents of the Mellon plan, who, he said, were assuming the country wanted to evade the law of service and sought the benefits of government without paying for that government.

Sticks With Rich.

He said the idea that taxes on the great mass of the people could be cut and more taxes extracted from the rich was an unworkable principle.

He assured his hearers that fundamentally America is sound, its government is in honest hands and its business "including the owners, managers and employes, representatives of honorable and patriotic motives."

Turning then to foreign affairs, the president, after repeating that the League of Nations is dead so far as the United States is concerned, paid high tribute to Secretary Hughes for initiating the idea of the experts' conference on reparations and lent impetus to the Dawes vice-presidential boom by highly praising the work of Dawes and his associates in Europe.

Mr. Coolidge than warmly urged that American bankers make a large loan to Germany, to assure complete success of the Dawes plan. American gold can be of more use abroad than piled up at home, he said, emphasizing again the need of service.

JUDGE FOELL FORCES STRIKERS TO PROMISE TO REFRAIN FROM PICKETING AS POSTPONEMENT MADE

Judge Charles M. Foell postponed for at least a week the cases of the fifty garment strikers before him yesterday charged with violating the injunction against picketing.

Before Judge Foell postponed the cases he took good care to force the strikers to promise that they would not return to the picket line until their cases are disposed of.

Evidently afraid to face the issue, clearly put before him by the DAILY WORKER, Judge Foell's postponements are looked on as an attempt to escape the odium which the DAILY WORKER has been heaping on him as the employers' "Injunction Judge."

Turns to Jury Tral.

The evidence is completed in the cases of the first group of 13 strikers who appeared before Foell last week. Altho all the witnesses have been heard and the cases would have been quickly completed yesterday morning with the summing up of the two lawyers, Judge Foell declined to finish the cases, pleading he had a jury trial which was more important.

Twelve more cases come up before Judge Sullivan this morning. These are the first cases of the strikers which have come before "Dennie" since his vacation. Hyman Brothers are bringing the charges against the strikers before Judge Sullivan, and Leo Le Bosky will be their lawyer.

The cases brought by the Graceline Dress Company, which are in the hands of Dudley Taylor, and the cases of the Francine Frock Company, with Charles Hyde as the attorney, have also been postponed until April 29, by Judge Foell.

Gunmen Assault Striker.

Gunmen and thugs in the employ of the garment bosses increased their activities yesterday. One of the strikers was assaulted by a cowardly gang of gunmen on West Washington street, who were quickly driven away. Four other strikers, out automobile riding, were hailed into court on absolutely groundless charges, reported to have been brought by hangers-on of State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe. They were indicted by the grand jury.

Foell Injunction Is Unable To Hurt Strike Of The Retail Clerks

The strike of the Retail Clerks' union is progressing favorably in spite of the injunction issued last week, by Judge Charles M. Foell, prohibiting picketing. Winnick, of the Retail Clerks' union, declares that Ossey Brothers' two stores on South Halsted Street have hired scab labor, but he looks for an early and favorable settlement of the strike, nevertheless.

BELGIUM LOSES INDEPENDENCE TO J. P. MORGAN

Banker's Big Loans Give Him the Power

By A. HABARU.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, April 22.—The Morgan interests have gained control of the Belgian government as they have of France, by extending credits, I am informed. The rise of the Belgian franc is not due to a sounder economic and financial policy of the Belgian government, therefore, but is due to the extension of credits to Belgium by the Morgan banks.

The amount of the Morgan credits remains secret, and the government is denying that such credits have been extended. We understand, however, that negotiations have been undertaken with English as well as American bankers which grant Belgium the same credits that have been given France.

WEST VIRGINIA COAL MINERS THANK DAILY WORKER FOR AID GIVEN RELIEF

The DAILY WORKER has just received a letter from Local Union, No. 1425, United Mine Workers of America, at Ohley, West Va., carrying the seal of the union, and voicing the appreciation of the coal miners of this district for the aid given the relief drive by the DAILY WORKER. The letter in part follows:

Ohley, West Va., April 21, 1924.

"Editors, the DAILY WORKER: Our Miners' Relief Committee, at a special meeting, attended by delegates of the two local unions, Nos. 1425 and 3660, voted to send you resolutions thanking you for publishing our appeal, for the support of our members and their families in their long struggle.

"The situation never changes and at the present time it is very critical. There are many sick children and no prospects of a settlement with the mine owners.

"Fraternally yours, Miners' Relief Committee.

"J. Charles Bell, Chairman."

CHICAGO TRIBUNE SPITS LIES ABOUT RUSSIAN CHILDREN

Mum About Suffering In America

On Friday, April 11, the Chicago Tribune printed two pictures in its pictorial section showing the suffering of Russian children, plus the imagination of the paid newspaper liars. The captions which go with these pictures speak of the nationalization of children.

This is the latest invention of the enemies of Soviet Russia and recalls the story that had such a wide circulation about the nationalization of women. It may be true that there is still a certain amount of suffering among children in Soviet Russia. But the Tribune fails to speak of the millions of child laborers in this country who slave away in the factories and on the fields for a mere pittance, living under the most frightful conditions.

While U. S. Kids Are Homeless.

The Tribune fails to speak of the thousands of homeless waifs in this country, the wealthiest of capitalist countries. There is no mention anywhere in the Chicago Tribune about the children of the hundreds of thousands of unemployed in this country. Plenty of pictures could be printed showing the suffering of children in this country, or in other capitalist countries. It is not out of pity that the hypocritical Chicago Tribune carries those pictures of Russian children. It is simply part of the campaign of the capitalist press to discredit the first workers' republic.

The Chicago Tribune is one of the worst enemies of the working class of this or any country; it has never once suggested that the United States ought to recognize Soviet Russia. Recognition of Russia by the United States and the resultant trade would aid Soviet Russia to recuperate entirely from the last vestiges of the ravages wrought by the world war, civil war, foreign invasion, blockade, famine.

Russian Trade—U. S. Jobs.

Trade with America would mean machinery for Russia, it would mean an increase of production and further improvement of conditions. Trade with Russia would be a benefit to American workers, it would give employment to hundreds of thousands of workers in this country who are at present out of work. Trade with Russia would relieve the suffering of the children of the hundreds of thousands of unemployed in this country. But the Chicago Tribune does not speak of these things. It specializes in lies about the first workers' republic. It is true that Soviet Russia has not completely recovered, but Russia is on the upgrade, while other capitalist countries, notably Germany, are on the downgrade.

The Chamber of Commerce of Decatur, Ill., stepped in and prevented the showing on Saturday, April 19, of the film, "Russia and Germany—a Tale of Two Republics," on the pretext that there is Communist propaganda in this film, which is being shown in order to save German children from starving.

Banned in Decatur.

This film was to have been seen at the Decatur High School, but was withdrawn at the last moment by J. J. Richeson, superintendent of schools, who did not lay the matter before the board of education, but acted upon the request of John McEvoy, president of the Chamber of Commerce of Decatur. It was impossible to get another hall in the short notice given, and more than 600 people were turned away. Tremendous feeling has been generated by this despicable action, and there is a storm of indignation in Decatur, with the people there clamoring for the picture. A number of workers in Decatur, thoroly aroused by the unspeakable action of the Chamber of Commerce, and realizing that the only way to fight the chambers of commerce and the capitalist class in general is by joining the Communist movement, are asking for admission into the Workers Party.

This film will be shown in spite of any chambers of commerce. It is being shown all over the country, and this is the first time that any hindrance has been put in its way.

Nation-Wide Demand.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of Boston has rented it for the May 1 festival, and other organizations are preparing to rent the picture. It will be shown in Chicago on May 14 at Orchestra Hall. The first showing in New York will be at the Central Opera House, 205 East 67th street, Friday evening, May 9, at which occasion there will also be a musical program by the Uthman Singing Society, a splendid chorus of fifty men.

Demands for the showing of this film are coming from all over the country. The workers of America are thrilled at seeing the workers of Germany battling against the black forces of capitalist and monarchist reaction. They are moved at the sight of German workers and their families fighting against starvation caused by capitalist misrule. The workers of America are anxious also to see the tremendous advance being made in Soviet Russia which is on the upgrade and which is rapidly outstripping the rest of the world. All this they can see in the film, "Russia and Germany—a Tale of Two Republics," released by the International Committee for Workers' Aid, proceeds of which are for the benefit of German workers' relief.

Important Election Is Set for May 6th

ST. PAUL, Minn., April 22.—Two economic forces are struggling for political power in the municipal campaign now being waged in this city.

The Citizens' Alliance and the St. Paul Association of Commerce are backing the present mayor, four members of the City Council and the comptroller for re-election.

These men have all lined up with the "open shop" crowd against organized labor, and their masters are now spending a barrel of money to keep them in office.

The Farmer-Labor Federation and the St. Paul Trades and Labor Assembly are carrying on an aggressive campaign for George L. Siegel, a former member of the State Legislature with a 100 per cent labor record and a member of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, for mayor; William F. Scott, a member of the City and County Employes, for comptroller, and James Clancy, a plasterer, and Herman Wenzel, barber; C. J. McGlogan, electrician, and Edward Corcoran, printer, for members of the council.

The Labor candidates for mayor, comptroller and two councilmen lead the ticket in the primaries and all indications are that a complete victory will be achieved at the general election on May 6.

A victory in this election will mean that the two largest cities in Minnesota, Minneapolis and St. Paul, will be under control of the Farmer-Labor forces, Minneapolis having gone to the workers in the last general election. It will also assure a complete victory for the workers and farmers in the state elections next fall.

The new city officials take office on June 1. A victory for the labor forces means that the great National Farmer-Labor Convention, to be held here on June 17, will be officially welcomed by a mayor who is an ardent supporter of the Farmer-Labor movement.

Hours of 8,000 Yard Masters Cut Down to 9 Daily

Between 8,000 and 10,000 yard masters on railroads in all parts of the country will work nine hours a day instead of 12 under a decision handed down by Judge Cliffe of the U. S. District court here.

The decision was rendered in a test suit started by the Government against the Santa Fe railroad. Suit was brought under the provision of an interstate commerce commission ruling that railroad workers engaged in transmitting messages by wire or telephone regarding the running of trains shall not work more than nine hours a day. The Santa Fe held yardmasters are not in that classification, but the Government contended otherwise.

The decision will be appealed, it was stated. Federal officials said they would start suits against other lines. Judge Cliffe also imposed a fine of $3,000 on the Santa Fe.

PULLMAN STRIKERS' GRIEVANCES

McCarthy Addresses Strikers.

J. P. McCarthy, circulation manager of the DAILY WORKER, addressed the strikers yesterday, urging the necessity of organization.

"If you don't get organized, and perfect a powerful union," said McCarthy, "you will be going back to work just as divided as when you came out. That will mean that the bosses will easily get rid of the militants who are bearing the brunt of what organization work has been done. You must not permit that to happen".

McCarthy also urged the necessity of political power thru unity of the Farmer-Labor forces of the country.

John O. Holmgren, General Vice-President of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, also spoke, seeking to impress upon the strikers their necessity to industry.

"Rockefeller or Morgan might die tomorrow, but you would never know about it, unless you read about it in the newspapers", he said. "But let labor quit and all industry comes to a halt".

An Anti-Strike Scheme.

Among the many anti-strike schemes by which the Pullman Company seeks to insure itself against the walkouts of its workers is the payment of death benefits thru a plan inaugurated on Oct. 15, 1922.

Thru this plan the Pullman Company offers magnanimously to pay death benefits of from $500 to $2,500 to the survivors of workers who have been employed in the Pullman plant for one year or more. When the workers get discontented, when they protest against the low wages they are receiving, or when, as in the present instance, they protest against reductions in their wages, the Pullman Company always reminds them of the money that is waiting their widows, or orphans when they die, if they remain loyal slaves.

Strike and Its All Off.

Because, if the workers disobey the edicts of the great Pullman Company and go on strike it is all off with the death benefits.

Clause No. 13, of the proposed plan declared that:

"The death benefits provided for under this plan will terminate with the termination of employment with the Company. Employment will be held to be terminated when the employe voluntarily leaves the service of the Company, or is discharged for cause, or when for any cause except sickness he shall be absent from duty without permission for a period of thirty or more days, or when retired. Employes desiring leave of absence, therefore, should make request in the customary way upon their supervisory officer, who will refer such request to the Board of Pensions for approval. Where employes have been absent for more than thirty days for any cause except sickness without the written approval of the Board of Pensions, their employment will be held to have been terminated and they shall be classified as new employes should they again enter the employ of the Company."

Every move of the Pullman slaves are therefore, subject to the whims of the high officials of the Pullman Company. It would be difficult indeed, for a Pullman worker, to get away for a convention of his labor union, if he had one, or his political party, without his boss knowing it.

This death benefit scheme builds a Chinese wall around that little industrial czardom known as Pullman, Illinois, beyond which no worker dare stray without permission of the company.

Also Hit by Lay-offs.

The workers also lose their death benefits if the shop shuts down, if he is fired thru a reduction of the force, or thru lack of work. If the wage slave is ready and returns to his job immediately when he is called by the Pullman Company, after an industrial depression is over, he will have his death benefit restored. But no allowance is made for him if he should happen to die in the meantime.

The Call From Pullman Is "Labor Must Fight!"

Retrenchment is the order of the day in capitalist industry. Workers are being pushed into the army of the unemployed.

All along the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, skilled mechanics are being laid off. That is west of Chicago.

Mills are being closed down in the industrial heart of—Pennsylvania. That is to the east of Chicago.

• • • •

It is only under these conditions, becoming more and more general, that the big bosses of the car works of the Pullman Company, in Pullman, and the Western Steel Car and Foundry Co., in the neighboring industrial suburb, of Hegewisch, Ill., would dare announce the outrageous wage cuts they tried to put into effect last week.

The big bosses had hopes that the unorganized workers, in fear of losing their jobs, would accept any kind of a wage cut. They thought that they could slash their payroll on behalf of their bank roll.

Note their clever plan, not an unusual one. First, they had the men put on piece work. Under the sweating system the men were speeded up to earn what they thought were good wages, $50 and $60 per week, an average wage for organized skilled workers. Then came the next move. The men were given the hint that they were earning too much money. Then the announced slash.

• • • •

It is an encouraging sign of the times that the riveters, fiitters, reamers, buckers and heaters, first at the Pullman plant and then in the Hegewisch shops joined in a spontaneous walkout. No craven submission here. Only bold defiance of the bosses. The workers at Pullman and Hegewisch are standing erect in defense of hard won wage rates and working conditions. And the bosses are scared.

• • • •

The story of Pullman and Hegewisch is the story of the whole nation today. What the Pullman and Hegewisch bosses attempted, the bosses over the whole land are planning to attempt in the days ahead,—days of growing industrial depression.

Let the spirit of the workers of Pullman and Hegewisch, therefore arouse labor in other and distant industrial centers of the land.

• • • •

Labor in Pullman and Hegewisch has gone into battle to protect itself against the bosses' greed, and already the bosses are dropping to their knees.

THE CRY THAT COMES OUT OF PULLMAN AND HEGEWISCH IS, "LABOR MUST FIGHT!" ONLY THRU FIGHTING CAN LABOR WIN!

THEY WENT LIKE HOT CAKES

Teapot Special

ALLEN BLOMQUIST.

Greet Allen Blomquist of Pocatello, Idaho, who was one of the best sellers of the Teapot Special of the DAILY WORKER. Blomquist disposed of several hundred copies of this excellent and valuable issue of the paper. He writes that they went like so many hot cakes. Who will outdo him on the May Day DAILY WORKER?

ST. LOUIS, April 22.—Union stone masons and helpers here have a won a wage increase of 12½ cents an hour, by which about 200 workmen will profit. A strike of the craft had been on for more than a month for an increase of 25 cents an hour. The new rate is $1.12½ an hour.

CARSHOP STRIKE SPREADS

lice and militia forces of government to assist their strike breaking. Workers were plentifully clubbed and shot when the armed forces attempted to break up their meetings. The Pullman Company was equally infamous in the strike of 1894 which brought Eugene V. Debs to the fore.

"Many Union Men."

No wonder Simmons, the Industrial Relations supervisor, said that the Pullman Company has always maintained "open shop," considering the worker's union affiliation his "personal affair." Simmons claimed that he knew for sure that many of the Pullman empolyes were union men.

In trying to play down the seriousness of the present strike at Pullman, Simmons said that only 169 men were out. He said that in view of their 35,000 employes all told, he didn't consider the riveters' demonstration important. He wouldn't show his alarm that the strike might spread among the other workers, and denied that other wage cuts were contemplated. Most of the 35,000 employes of the Pullman Company are not in the shops but in their offices and on the roads. This company monopolizes the production and operation of Pullman cars on all railroads of the North American continent.

Expects To Compromise.

"We expect to make some compromise with the riveters, buckers, and heaters within a day or two," Simmons announced. "We pay a little more than any of our competitors now and the men know it."

Simmons claims that the company was merely making certain necessary rate adjustments among the riveters, buckers, and heaters. Some of the rates were left untouched, some were decreased, and "some, even for men on strike, were actually increased," stated Simmons. The largest decrease that he had heard of, he asserted, was a 9 per cent cut. The information given the DAILY WORKER by strikers was that cuts varying from 15 to 45 per cent had been announced. Simmons did not estimate what proportion of men were affected by the decreases.

Simmons Talks Peace.

"These men are still on our rolls," remarked Simmons. "We do not consider this a strike. We feel sure that some compromise can be made within a couple of days." The men out have not yet forfeited their insurance, pension, and seniority rights, according to Simmons.

Officials of the Western Steel Car Foundry Company denied that any of their employees were not working. They said that there was no disturbance at Hegewisch, that they had nothing to say, that they were not "publicity seekers." (What have they got to conceal?)

None of the bosses want to admit the possibility of trouble in any part of their "sensitive" organization. They are too confident that their railroad and banker affiliations, interlocking directorates, and criss-cross stock holdings, will back them as much as necessary in their efforts to intimidate the workers.

BELGIAN FASCIST MOVEMENT GAINS WITH BANKS' AID

Middle Classes Falling For Its Dope

By A. HABARU.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, April 22.—Fascisti organizations have made much progress in Belgium recently due to the interference of Morgan banking interests in the French and Belgian governments.

Since the beginning of the military occupation of the Ruhr, the Belgian franc has fallen continuously, and this movement has considerably increased in the last few months. Notwithstanding the actual stablization which appeared when Morgan entered the scene in France, prices remain very high and the cost of living has reached a level never known before.

Many Local Strikes.

As a result great anxiety is spreading in the working class and the petty-bourgeois. Wages are not sufficient and many local strikes have been proclaimed by the workers. The strikes, however, are not united into a big revolutionary struggle of the entire Belgian working class, because of the great influence of Social-Democrats, who are preaching class peace.

As an effect of this Social-Democratic influence, workers remain confident in democracy and parliamentarism. The middle class, however, who are suffering from the economic crisis, have lost much confidence. This situation favors the growth of Fascist organizations.

The Fascist groups are being paid by large trusts and banks. They have made important progress in the last few months. Many anxious middle class members are enrolling in their army.

The Belgian Fascists and the Belgian Legion are the two big Fascist organizations here. They are developing propaganda in the towns and have already begun to act. Protected by official police, they are operating on the land markets, where they oblige peasants to sell their produce at lower prices. In doing this they have succeeded in obtaining the collaboration of the middle class organizations like the Federation of War Veterans.

Thousands of middle class bourgeois youths are now enrolled in the Belgian Fascisti. They compose an army, active and reserve, and of secret "supreme councils."

The Fascist danger in Belgium is not yet such an immediate one, but should the economic crisis continue it shall become a prominent factor with which the laboring classes will have to deal.

COOLIDGE REGIM GIVES SANCTION TO MORGAN PLAN

And with stability assured abroad the president said, a new opportunity for American leadership for world peace may present itself. When i does, he will call another world co ference on limitation of armaments, h said. The present is not the time fo this, he added, but as soon as i seems such a parley would be par ticipated in willingly by Europe and would have a chance of success, he will urge that it be held.

Same Old Bunk.

He again perfunctorily commended the Harding world court, but said other measures are necessary, including codification of international law and the holding of frequent international conferences to take up specific problems as they arise.

America first of all must be true to herself and order her course rationally and peacefully at home, he said, in order that her leadership for world peace may be strengthened. And he warned that tho America be ever so peaceably inclined, this nation cannot force the millenium on other nations if they are not willing for it. World peace, he said, must come, finally "from the heart of the people."

The strikers declare they are encouraged by the increased lawless practice of the garment bosses and their tools. They see in the activities of the thugs that the bosses are desperate at the continued solidarity of the strikers, and are making their last gasp before coming to terms with the union.

The agreement has not yet been reached between the Cloakmakers' Union and the cloak manufacturers. According to Meyer Perlstein, of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, a meeting was held Monday night at which the Joint Board decided to postpone negotiations with the manufacturers until the agreement is reached in New York. In New York, Perlstein told the DAILY WORKER, there is likelihood of a strike of the Cloakmakers' Union.

Strikers See Movies.

"However," said Perlstein, "the cloakmakers in New York have a more difficult situation than here in Chicago. There are not many jobbers in this trade in Chicago. Most of the jobbers who sell goods in Chicago deal with New York manufacturers. That is another reason for postponing negotiations here until the New York situation is cleared up."

Gompers is still in Washington agitating for stronger beer. Nothing has yet been heard from him relative to his support of the garment strikers, altho one of his latest hobbies has been the study of women in industry. The garment strikers are 80 per cent women.

While the bosses are panic stricken, and are getting their thugs busy, the picket lines are holding firm. The increase in the strike benefit was in effect this week, and Meyer Perlstein has announced that if the garment bosses continue obdurate the strike benefit will again be increased when necessary.

MYERSCOUGH IS WRITING ABOUT ILLINOIS MINES

Shows Effect of the Lewis Policies

The sub-district convention of the United Mine Workers of America convenes here today. Thomas Myerscough, of the Progressive Miners' Committee, will make specal reports on this convention to the DAILY WORKER. Myerscough has been covering the southern Illinois mine district during the last week and sends the following interesting article from Benton on the effects of President John L. Lewis' policy of "stabilizing" the mining industry.

By THOMAS MYERSCOUGH.

BENTON, Ill., April 22.—"Shut down for a hell of a long time"; "Been shut down for a month"; "Going to shut down next week." These are the answers one gets when he asks the question, "Are you working?" of the miners here in southern Illinois.

At Indianapolis, in the international convention last January, Lewis said the industry "needed a breathing spell and security against strikes," so as to enable the miners and operators to recover from the effects of too many strikes. All kinds of bunk was used by Lewis and his henchmen to put over the government demand for a long term agreement. They said it was necessary in order that the industry could be stabilized. Lewis made a pretense at being alarmed, because many miners were still in debt as a result of the strike of 1922, claiming that another strike would be disastrous.

The average miner, so far, has been unable to discover any difference between the effects of a strike and the effects of a lockout or shutdown. There is no envelope on pay day in either case, and all will frankly admit that, if the present situation in the mine fields is the definition of stabilization, they would far rather have struck for some improvement of the conditions.

Even tho the scale committee of high salaried officials could not see the benefit or the wisdom of a move for the shorter work day, the men of the mines, who are forced to look for days at a siding of coal which they produced in one day, can see not only the wisdom of the move, but also the absolute necessity of it.

The men of Illinois are apprehensive of what the result of this three-year agreement will be, for they know what the results of the previous years have been. They truthfully say, "We've had it for four years and it has left misery and starvation in its wake, so what can we hope for with another three years of it?"

What with the strikes and shutdowns now in effect, with approximately 200,000 miners totally unemployed, while most of the rest of those who man the mines are working but little, the future holds very little in store for the diggers of black diamonds.

What are you doing, Mr. Lewis, on your frequent visits to oily Washington? What are you trying to "stabilize?"

Dillonvale, Ohio, Has Big Plans For Its May Day

DILLONVALE, Ohio, April 22.—May Day, the International Labor Day, will be celebrated all day in this town with workers of all nationalities participating. A monster parade will march thru the town at 11 a. m. Lunch will be served in Bohemian Hall at noon and a great mass meeting will assemble at 1 o'clock. In the evening the Young Workers League will entertain with an international dance in the hall.

"Speakers in American, Italian, Hungarian and Slavish," are advertised in the brilliant posters the Dillonvale workers display. The Workers Band plan to furnish an elaborate musical program; so that the great May Day celebration should be triumphal with all these organizations co-operating.

All mine workers of Dillonvale and vicinity are especially invited to join their comrade workers in making this May Day the longest-remembered Labor Day.

COMMUNISM OR CAPITALISM IS DEBATE SUBJECT

Toledo "U" Students Greatly Interested

TOLEDO, O., April 22.—Three members of the local Workers Party will debate with three students from Toledo University on the relative merits of Communism and capitalist reforms as methods of benefiting society. The debate will be held on Sunday, April 27, at 8 p. m., in the Labor Temple Auditorium. Tickets are on sale at the Workers' Bookshop, 131 Michigan street.

Toledo University students have become quite interested in Communism of late and are demanding all the Workers Party literature they can get. The Teapot Dome Special of the DAILY WORKER was distributed on the campus and created considerable excitement. The students were eager to learn more of the truth about the capitalist "democracy" under which they live. Jay Lovestone's book, "The Government Strikebreaker," has been a popular seller among the students, and Lenin's "State and Revolution" is much sought.

Interest in the forthcoming debate is keen among students as well as in Workers Party groups. Both sides expect to turn out in full force, not so much to cheer, but to learn. Toledo local of the Workers Party is offering all assistance to the interested University students to help them get a real understanding of capitalism and Communism.

MINE INSPECTOR'S APPOINTMENT IS ISSUE IN KANSAS

Operators Try To Oust Workers' Man.

PITTSBURGH, Kan., April 22.—A lively fight is being waged over the appointment of Leon Besson as mine inspector. Besson was appointed thru the influence of the union miners, and the coal operators are demanding that his appointment be cancelled and their man, John Crawford, be appointed.

Governor Davis stands pat on the Besson appointment, but the attorney general has ruled that Besson must take an examination—before an examining board which is framed against him. The Industrial Court is dead against the miners' selection, too.

All this struggle over the appointment of a mine inspector comes because his job is a most strategic one during strikes. The mine inspector can rule during a strike that untrained scab miners shall not go down into the mines because they are a menace to industrial safety and human life.

The clash between the Industrial Court and Davis is becoming keener. The court, which was the issue that defeated Allen's side in the last election and installed Davis, is trying to keep the deputy mine inspectors appointed by Allen. It is not likely that Davis will stand for this.

Hearing the names of these deputies called off is like hearing a roll call in the Irish Parliament, with the O'Dougans, O'Harrigans, etc., nearly all of them wearing either a Knights of Columbus pin or ring.

SOCIALISTS WILL BETRAY, SPEAKER TELLS MILWAUKEE

Trachtenberg Warns By German Situation

MILWAUKEE, Wis., April 22.—"Your Socialist will betray you in the same way that Socialist democrats betrayed the German Workers," Alexander Trachtenberg told a large audience in the Freie Gemiende hall.

Interested Audience.

For two hours the assemblage of workers listened with an intense attention to the splendid lecture on Russia and Germany. In a masterful and vivid manner the speaker outlined the industrial achievements of Soviet Russia in the period of reconstruction; and the notable other accomplishments of a fundamental nature in cultural, military and political field. The gains of Russian industry is not achieved thru the sacrifice of the workers, but on the contrary, every year witnesses the improvement in the standard of living of the workers.

In picturing the misery of the German workers enslaved by international capitalism, the speaker pointed to the ray of hope which can be seen in the militant spirit of the workers. The next struggle of the German workers will not be a "Putsh" but will be a final and decisive struggle, which will lead to victory and the proletarian dictatorship.

Betrayed German Workers.

"Here in Milwaukee," said Trachtenberg, "you have the same elements that have betrayed the working class of Germany. The American Socialists are twin brothers of their German party.

"The problems of the American labor movement and the rapidly developing events in Europe place particular responsibility upon the American workers. You must join the Workers Party in order that you may do your duty to the international proletarian movement.

MAY BE LAST TIME FOR ROBOT PLAY IN CHICAGO

Scheduled for the Wilds of Milwaukee

(By Labor Defense Press Service.)

For the last time before quitting Chicago for the wilds of Milwaukee—and mayhaps, Detroit—The Labor Defense Council's now-famous Robots will present the four-act play, "R. U. R" here tonight, in C. S. P. S. Hall, 1126 W. 18th Street. All seats are seventy-five cents.

The opening performance on Sunday was such a success that it is expected the house will be sold out early. The audience received the play with marked signs of appreciation. It was remarked on all sides that the acting and settings were beyond all expectations. The Labor Defense Council has taken pains to make the production complete in every detail in order that "R. U. R." might be a success from the artistic point of view as well as the financial.

Robots, Unite!

There are differences regarding what Karel Capek had in mind in writing his extraordinary melodrama but the Labor Defense Council's experiment proves there can be no doubt of the effect of the play upon working class audiences. The anology between the Robots and the modern wage slaves is clearly drawn. The revolt of the Robots and their rallying cry, "ROBOTS OF THE WORLD, UNITE!" carry a prophetic significance to the end.

The Labor Defense Council is going after the owner of Strummel's Hall, Roseland, Illinois, for not producing his special temporary permit when the police interfered with the production of "R. U. R." last Saturday. The owner had a license to run his Pullman hall but claimed that he could not find it. The police looked up the matter in their records and then gave the Labor Defense Council permission to give their performance of the Capek play. By that time the audience had dispersed, which was all the Pullman police robots had hoped for.

Who's To Blame?

No further attempt to put on "R. U. R." in Pullman will be made, because of the great expense of producing. The Labor Defense Council will not, however, stop until it gets satisfactory remuneration from the hall owner for the closing of their Saturday performance. The seats had all been set up and everything was ready for the curtain's rise when the police stopped the show.

Deliver Smashing Blow At Fascisti Dictator.

BERNE, Switzerland, April 22. "We feel nothing but contempt for the tyrannical Fascist government of Italy." This is the answer of the Swiss Federation of Trade Unions to an ingratiating invitation received from the Mussolini government to send delegates to an international emigration conference to be held in Rome in the near future.

The Fascist government is trying to create the impression that it is deeply interested in social questions.

The Swiss workers replied to the Italian dictator: "We beg to inform you that we are very much interested in the emigration question, but we are unable to take part either in the preparations for the conference or in the conference itself, in view of the fact that the Italian bona fide trade unions . . . . . . are persecuted and oppressed by your government. You must not count upon our co-operation until a complete reversal of this policy has taken place."

GENERAL STRIKE TIES UP HAVANA; PAPERS SUSPEND

Walkout Called To Aid Harbor Workers.

HAVANA, Cuba, April 22.—The general strike here in support of the striking dock workers widened when the entire street car service of the city was stopped by the walkout of all the motormen and conductors. Some of the Spanish language papers have suspended as the printers have quit with the other strikers.

A wire from the Transport Workers Union of Havana, has been received by Solidaridad, Spanish language organ of the I. W. W., appealing for support in the succinct words: "A general strike in the harbor. Try to stop treason." In reply the general administration of the I. W. W. sent a pledge of solidarity, signed by Secretary-Treasurer Tom Doyle, and Executive Board Chairman Joe Fisher. The message declares that the Marine Transport Section of the I. W. W. is standing loyally behind the striking longshoremen and promises that no I. W. W. seaman will work cargo or assist the bosses in any way.

3,000,000 JOBLESS, 5,000,000 ON PART TIME IN GERMANY

According to the latest figures received by the Committee for International Workers' Aid, 32 So. Wabash Ave., unemployment and part-time work have increased so tremendously in Germany that not less than a quarter of the whole population is suffering from one or the other. There are now about three million wholly unemployed and about five million short-time workers. If dependents are also taken into consideration, there are some 24 million persons living in penury and semi-starvation.

The distress of strikers and locked-out workers is especially great. The fight for the eight-hour day is in full progress. Employers are forcing an almost general eleven and twelve-hour day on the workers. The German workers need the help of workers in other countries in the fight they are waging. The Committee for International Workers' Aid is rallying the workers of America to send help TO THE WORKERS OF GERMANY.

STATE POLICE FIGHTING STRIKE IN CABIN CREEK

Guns and Injunctions Used on Miners.

By TOM TIPPETT
(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

ESKDALE, W. Va., April 22.—There are still 2000 members of the United Mine Workers of America on strike on Cabin Creek. They, together with their wives and children, number 10,000 people, and are all living in tents or barracks and have been since 1922. Wreckage of the national coal strike.

Cabin Creek is in the Charleston territory of West Virginia and was solidly organized in 1912 by Mother Jones after much trouble. The "Bull Moose special," an armored train, played an important part in the 1912-13 Cabin Creek strike. This train passed slowly thru the valley and fired a machine gun broadside into a tent colony occupied exclusively by striking miners' women and children at Holly Grove on Paint Creek. On Cabin Creek the men were not bluffed by the armed monster. (Chief Justice Wm. Howard Taft was then president.) A fort was erected on on the mountain side and a war began that ended with the Kenyon congressional investigation.

The publicity surrounding this trouble and the cry of protest from outside contributed much toward success for the miners. After a year the strike was won in 1913. Peace reigned on the creek with the union firmly established until the 1922 national coal strike. No settlement has been made since and the mines are operating with strikebreakers.

The inevitable tent colony, erected to shelter the families, thrown out of company houses on the roadside, still houses these unfortunate people tho they are badly dilapidated after standing the elements two years. District 17, U. M. W. A., is supporting these strikers, as well as thousands of others similarly situated thruout the state. The strike relief provides coarse food and nothing more.

Huddled Like Cattle.

The suffering is indescribable. The badly worn tents stand all along the creek on odd patches of land not owned by the coal companies. One colony is exactly like another. Hundreds of women and children huddle together like cattle. In the Eskdale colony alone 12 children died last year—all under three years old. The living ones seem to be half starved, tho they declare they have enough to eat. There are a few barracks but most families live in tents. The countryside bristles with state police with huge searchlights mounted thruout the valley. Guns of every description are everywhere in evidence against the evicted mine workers and their families.

Injunction and State Police.

An injunction rigidly enforced by the state police provides six months in jail and a $50 fine for a striker caught "speaking with" a strikebreaker. The strikebreakers here were shipped from Alabama, most of them.

In the face of what already seems defeat the sufferers say they will fight on to victory. And they have won victory after victory in this fashion in previous struggles. The history of their union is an uninterrupted chapter of that kind of misery.

Tent Colony Needs Clothing.

The tent colonists need clothing badly and will appreciate any old castoffs of any size for men, women or children. Such things should be sent to William Bowring, Eskdale, W. Va.

You Can Do What Goldberg Is Doing

The DAILY WORKER, just the other day, carried a news story of the painters' strike at St. Louis, Mo. It was a good story. It was the kind of stuff that the DAILY WORKER likes to get and put into its columns. It was a story of a workers' struggle. The story was written by H. L. Goldberg.

But Goldberg did more than write the story. Two hundred and fifty copies of this issue of the DAILY WORKER were rushed off to St. Louis, and Goldberg saw to it that these copies got into the hands of the strikers. There will be other stories by Goldberg about the St. Louis strike. There will be other bundles of the DAILY WORKER going to St. Louis. That is the kind of work that counts.

The painters in St. Louis, who read the DAILY WORKER while out on strike, will subscribe and continue to read it after the strike is over. That is the way to build the circulation of the DAILY WORKER among the workers of the nation. That is what you ought to be doing to help. What about it?

NOISY STEEL TRUST PREACHER ASSAILS "REDS" AS GRAND JURY GETS SIX SYNDICALISM CASES

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, April 22.—The Labor Defense and Free Speech Council will devote Saturday and Sunday to canvassing the Ohio and Pennsylvania steel district for the six Farrell syndicalism cases which are now going before the grand jury at Mercer, Pa. Workers Party branches are co-operating. House to house canvasses will be made in all the steel towns surrounding Farrell, with Youngstown as the headquarters. The case of these six Workers Party members involves the right of workers to assemble in Steel Trust towns.

Sky Pilot Organizes Fascisti.

FARRELL, Pa., April 22.—The battle going on in this city between the defense in charge of the Farrell cases was given a sudden twist today when the plute press came out with scare lines announcing that Rev. Leo J. Medic, pastor of the United Presbyterian Church, here only a few weeks from Lackawana, N. Y., has found it necessary to organize what he is pleased to call the "American-Croatian Protective Society" to save himself and congregation from the "Red Terror."

Meeting behind closed doors with five of his vestrymen the holy sky pilot mapped out plans to combat the spread of Communism which he charges is preventing the work of his holiness in Farrell. Medic's story to the plute press about the alleged red terror is but part of the campaign instituted to poison the public mind just before the grand jury acts on the Farrell cases. . .

A Hot Time Coming For Medic.

Medic's story runs like fiction and if he lies to his God as he does to the workers in Farrell he will need something better than an asbestos overcoat when he comes to wade the river Jordan.

He charged that Workers Party members refused to stand up when the band played the Star Spangled Banner and that they would be expelled from the Party if they attended church; that the youngsters in Farrell went around on Palm Sunday with palm leaves hitched to their coat tails and that women scoffed at him, compelling him to have Squire Franek and the great sleuth, Chief Leyschock, come to his rescue. The Mussolini of Farrell further tells the good people that the Croatian Society voted overwhelmingly against the erection of a new church and that the reds were responsible for this.

The sky pilot completes his yarn by asserting that his life has been threatened by the Communists.

D. of J. Fink Framed Yarn.

The defense has investigated his yarn and lo! and behold! the servant of the Lord admits that Department of Justice Agent Lennon of Pittsburgh furnished it to the press.

It seems that Medic made his complaint to the Department of Justice who rigged up a nice story of bombs and red terror and after decorating same up with Palm leaves and the Star Spangled Banner dished it out to the people in Farrell and Sharon.

The prosecution is doing every dirty, contemptible trick it can to railroad the defendants.

Medic was compelled by the attorneys for the defense to visit the Sharon and Farrell newspapers and deny most of the statements given by Department of Justice Agent Lennon and credited to Medic.

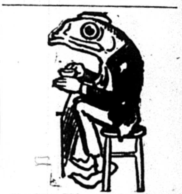
D. of J. Pressing Case.

SHARON, Pa., April 22.—Farrell newspapers come out with new scare lines calling for the deportation of the Farrell defendants and charging that red schools are being operated in Farrell advocating the overthrow of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

"Hawkshaw" Lennon discovered these new plots hoping thereby to influence the grand jury now in session at Mercer handling the Farrell cases.

The Department of Justice promises to have a fine array of legal talent present at the trials and once the six defendants are found guilty by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania they are to be turned over to the immigration authorities for deportation.



The Poor Fish says that the soldiers would have got their bonus a long time ago but that they thought the war was over when the kaiser was licked.

Fall's Successor Hands Out 800,000 Acres.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22.—Coal land to the extent of 800,000 acres in Utah and 100 acres in California and Washington has just been restored to entry by private interests by order of the United States Department of the Interior, under Secretary Work. At the same time the Geological Survey reports that 19 applications for coal-prospecting permits and 20 applications for coal leases were answered during the month of March. Oil prospecting applications, under the leasing act of Feb. 25, 1920, numbered 234 during the month.

More than 150,000 acres of public land in Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, South Dakota and Utah were designated as non-irrigable under the enlarged homstead acts by the Geological Survey of the Department of the Interior during the month of March, 1924, and made subject to entry as homesteads of 320 acres or less. Over 250,000 acres of the public domain in Arizona, California, Colorado and Montana were also classified under the stock-raising homestead law and designated for entry in tracts of 640 acres or less. Much of the acreage involved in those designations is included in original entries or in applications under the enlarged and stock-raising homestead acts which confer a preference right.

About 100,000 acres of land in California were withdrawn as public water reserves. Nearly 6,000 acres in California, Colorado, Washington and Wyoming were classified as power-site lands and a little more than 3,000 acres in Wyoming previously included in power-site withdrawal and not valuable for power were restored to entry. The area of land withdrawn as valuable for power was increased nearly 2,000 acres in Colorado and decreased nearly 2,000 acres in Washington.

Fake Teacher-Liberal Supports Ettinger.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, April 22.—With an oratorial appeal for the maintenance of the "merit system," Abraham Lefkowitz, of Teachers Union No. 5, so-called "Progressive" and handy-man of the Socialist Party, put across a resolution before the Central Trades and Labor Council, indorsing the reelection of William L. Ettinger, a Tammany Democrat, as Superintendent of Schools of the City of New York. The resolution was presented by Mr. Lefkowitz, as part of the report of the Committee on Education. He was the only spokesman on the resolution. There was no further discussion and no objection, and it was therefore declared carried.

Ettinger Plan Like Gary's

William L. Ettinger, is well-known in this city, and thruout the country as the initiator of the Ettinger Plan, a half brother of the notorious Gary Plan. Under the Ettinger Plan, the city and the real estate sharks save a tremendous amount of money which would ordinarily have to be spent on new schools. Instead of a seat for every child, we have but one seat for two and sometimes more children. The schools are run in shifts, like a factory, at all hours of the day, whether the time is suitable for study or not. Labor has consistently opposed every attempt to limit or curtail educational opportunity. The extension of the "platoon" system was recently condemned before the Chicago Federation of Labor. And yet we find a labor man, and so-called progressive, in support of the founder of the Ettinger plan.

A Prime Red Baiter

Mr. Ettinger was Superintendent of Schools at the time of the expulsion of Samuel Schmallhausen, Benjamin Glassberg, Henry Schneer, Ray Ragozin and Thomas Mufson from the public schools, for their opinions. Not only has Ettinger made no move to restore these teachers to their positions, but he has recently declared himself opposed to the granting of a license to David Berenberg. On the ground that he is a Socialist.

In climbing on the Ettinger band wagon, Lefkowitz has practically turned his back upon his felow Union members who were expelled for their ideas.

Some weeks ago Ettinger spoke in support of a by-law under which teachers might be dismissed for "conduct unbecoming a teacher." So broad and sweeping is this provision that it completely does away with any possible security of tenure.

Mr. Ettinger's term expires on April 30. He is having a hard fight for re-election on account of a dispute within the Democratic machine. He has been fishing for labor's support for a long time and Lefkowitz has "brought home the bacon."

Soviet Government Gives Church Lands To Jews For Farming

MOSCOW, April 22.—Eight hundred thousand acres of the most fertile land in Europe, former czarist estates and church lands in Southern Ukraine and Northern Crimea, have been offered to the Jews for agricultural colonization purposes. The Ukrainian Soviet government has recently passed resolutions favoring this move.

Many thousands of Ukrainian Jews whose business interests have been destroyed and who have suffered in the old pogroms are now turning to the land in a serious endeavor to become agriculturists. The Soviet government recognizes the grave need for assisting this urban Jewish population to adapt itself to the economic conditions.

Zionists both in Russia and America approve the colonization plan. The Russion Zionists appealed to the American Jews to raise a $1,000,000 fund for the establishment of these colonies in the Ukraine and Crimea. The Soviet government has already granted transportation rates and other privileges to the Jews.

CALIFORNIA BAY DISTRICT UNITES FOR FOREIGN BORN

30 Organizations Form Council To Fight

SAN FRANCISCO, April 22.—At a mass meeting of representatives from thirty different groups, including Serbian, Greek, Hungarian, Lithuanian, Italian, South Slavic, Finnish, Lettish, Esthonian and German language organizations the local Workers Party branches and the Socialist Party, and five unions of this district, held here in the Workers Party hall last Wednesday, a Bay District Council for the Protection of the Foreign-born Workers was formed.

After a short explanation of the danger still facing the workers thru the immigration bill now before Congress with its registration and identification clauses and its provisions allowing for the entrance into this country of immigrants under contract to work in certain industries and localities at the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, the temporary chairman urged the carrying on of an aggressive campaign, in connection with simiiliar councils in other cities, for the purpose of making the strongest possible fight against such exception legislation.

For Farm-Labor Party.

An Executive Committee of five was elected to plan the local campaign, which is to include the holding of mass meetings of the language groups as well as a big joint protest in which all will unite. In order to make the protest as forceful as possible, the council voted unanimously to participate actively in the agitation for the formation of a farmer-labor party in this state and thruout the nation. This places the groups represented squarely behind the movement for an independent political party of the industrial and agricultural producers as the most effective means of protection against such discriminatory laws.

Hit Registration Plan.

The resolution to the Council points out that the Johnson bill's provision for the filing of photographs of immigrants at Washington, would lead to the introduction of a nationwide registration and espionage system. By a "joker" in another paragraph this measure would require the alien to prove his innocence of charges made against him by immigration officials, thus reversing the whole basis of our legal procedure. The proposed legislation is also attacked on the ground that it would permit the revival of the contract labor system and because of the wide exercise of discretionary power granted consular officers abroad in their certification of immigrants.

State F.-L. Convention Coming.

The resolution, besides calling on the foreign-born to aid the movement for independent workingclass political action, endorses the call for a state convention on May 31 to establish a farmer-labor party in this state and similarly endorses the call for the June 17 convention at St. Paul.

Members of language organizations or workingclass groups not represented at this conference are asked to get in touch with the Council's organizer at 225 Valencia street. The office is open from 8-10 p. m., and by appointment during the day. Address all communications to "Council for Protection of Foreign-Born."

Brookwood Summer Courses.

Short summer courses are offered this year by the Brookwood Workers' College at Katonah, N. Y. A "labor institute" of one week will be held June 23 to 28 especially for delegates to the annual convention of the Women's Trade Union League, altho attendance will not be restricted to them. A two-week course will be given July 7 to 20, which is designed for officers, organizers, business agents, and members of unions. Current labor problems will be the basis of this course

RUSSIANS WILL HOUSE 10,000 ORPHANS IN MODEL CITY NEAR MOSCOW WITH LENIN FUND AID

A children's model city, where all the best educational and mechanical and agricultural equipment will be provided, will be built for the 10,000 homeless orphans in the environs of Moscow, states a report from the American delegate of the Committee for International Workers' Aid.

The report goes on to tell of the tremendous efforts which are being made on behalf of the children. Thousands have been taken from the streets and placed in institutions. The Lenin fund for children organized recently by the All-Russian congress of Soviets will solve the problem of the homeless waifs.

Krupskaya, Lenin's wife, has opposed any memorial to her husband except the fund to be used for the care of delinquent children. Lenin loved children and always insisted that the children shall be provided for first. Krupskaya carries out his wish.

Lies About Russian Children.

The Soviet Government is not suppressing any news about conditions in Russia. The reports state that there is still a certain amount of suffering among the children, that there are still scars left by the various occurrences of the last ten years in Russia, such as blockade by the capitalist powers and invasions by foreign armies or attacks by counter-revolutionary armies financed by the capitalist governments. Hoover and the American government with the aid of the counter-revolutionary general Yudenitch, are in part responsible for the remnant of suffering that is still left.

But the capitalist press is howling about nationalization of children in Soviet Russia, about the neglect of children, about Soviet Russia being over-run with homeless waifs. This is not out of pity for the children, but out of hatred for the first workers' republic. Now that the workers all over the world are clamoring for the recognition of Soviet Russia the kept press is intensifying its campaign for discrediting the Soviet republic.

How About U. S. Child Slaves?

Nothing is said by the capitalist press about the suffering of children in this country, where there are two million five hundred thousand child laborers, more than in any country in the world.

Recently a case has come to light of an orphan boy in Canada who was kept in practical slavery working on a farm from early morning to night without receiving any wages at all. He was then sent away penniless and had to walk for miles to the nearest city. This is only one case of cruelty to child laborers on the farms, and there are thousands of such cases in Canada, and in this country. In New York City children under ten years of age in over two thousand families are doing sweat-shop work in homes which are hovels rather than homes.

But the capitalist press does not proclaim these facts and only digs up reports about suffering of children in Russia and distorts these reports in its campaign of slander. Instead of suggesting that Soviet Russia be recognized, the kept press is intensifying its campaign of hatred.

Liberals Balk Labor Education.

LONDON, England, April 22.—Liberal members in parliament are not going to let the Labor government run any startling educational bills thru the House of Commons. The Liberals have just formed a special committee to keep special watch on all educational measures introduced.

Moron Kansas City Censors Play Their Tricks On Fifth Year

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 22.—Almost the entire film of "The Fifth Year" was ruled "immoral and obscene" by the movie censorship board of morons here; so that this picture had to be combined with "Polikushka" to make an evening's program.

One of the censors, named Flynn, backed by a Chamber of Commerce "red" spy named Boyle, an illiterate ex-intelligence officer, ruled "immoral and obscene:" Lenin, Zinoviev, and other Soviet officials; the Red Army; all Russian mass meetings; all meetings of the Communist International; and all Russian factories. All that was left uncensored was the scenery and the Russian children. When the ruling was appealed the two women from the Parent-Teachers Association and the liberal who made up the appointed board, unanimously upheld the censor.

Business Confers With Teachers On Control of Youth

NEW YORK CITY, April 22.—The third annual conference of business men and teachers has been meeting in this city. The Eastern Commercial Teachers' Association sponsors these meetings, which are directed by a specialist in commercial education.

Prominent speakers from the business world discussed commercial occupations, preparation and placement with the teachers. Big Business thinks there is nothing like having the teachers inculcate the philosophy of success in the nation's youth.

DAUGHERTY DIDN'T SHOW HONESTY WITH HIS FELLOW THIEVES

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, April 22.—Gaston B. Means, praised by Wm. J. Burns as "one" of the best investigators I ever knew," has given the Brookhart committee further testimony as to Jess Smith's taking of graft from the whisky ring. He told the senators that on the day before Jess Smith—"friend and bumper" of Harry Daugherty—committed suicide in Daugherty's apartment, Jess told Means that Daugherty had refused to return his split of a big fund which the whisky ring had paid Jess for removal permits.

Still more sensational was Means' statement that A. Mitchell Palmer was called in by Daugherty, and went away "looking scared to death," and that Jess Smith told him that Daugherty and Burns had intended at first to indict Palmer and Francis P. Garvan, former alien property custodian, for their sale of the Bosch Magneto property to an alien felon, Kerns. Means declared Smith informed him that Daugherty decided to hold Palmer under blackmail, and make him manipulate the Democrats in congress in accordance with Daugherty's wishes.

George W. Storck, accountant for the department of justice, testified outrageous frauds in the sale of seized German properties in the Philippines, under Governor General Harrison. Storck said that former Assistant Attorney General Crim was blocked in trying to proceed with these and other cases requiring prosecution, and that in the Philippine cases no prosecution ever was started.

AS WE SEE IT

O'Flaherty Coming Back

The DAILY WORKER has just received a letter from a reader at Port Clinton, Ohio, reading in part as follows:

"What has become of Thomas J. O'Flaherty's "As We See It" column? That is the first write-up I look for each day. There is something lacking without it. Please give us more of it, and I am sure the readers will enjoy and learn more from it."

This gives us an opportunity to assure all of our readers that O'Flaherty will soon be back with us again. Our columnist was forced to undergo an operation recently, which we had hoped would incapacitate him for only a few days. Instead of being able to return, however, O'Flaherty was forced to take a more extended leave of absence. We are hoping that this will terminate as soon as possible, however, and that his "As We See It" paragraphs will soon be back again in in the last column on the last page. We know that all of our readers will join us in this very earnest wish.

Philippine Leader Says Congress Is For Independence

TOKIO, Japan, April 22.—The bill now before the insular affairs committee creating Philippine independence will receive a majority in both Houses of Congress, Manuel Quexon, President of the Philippine Senate said when interviewed here. "I believe the majority in both houses of Congress favor Philippine independence," Quezon declared.

"I hope, that the independence bill will be passed by the present session. I have every reason to believe that a majority in both houses of Congress will favor the measure."

It is believed in the United States that President Coolidge and the oil gang will use their influence to defeat Philippine independence.

American Finance Imperialism in Action

By JAY LOVESTONE.

ARTICLE II.

Mexico.

Under the giuse or protecting the weaker nations of South and Central America the United States has assumed the undisputed hegemony over this territory. The Pan-American Union growing out of the Monroe Doctrine is completely dominated by American imperialists.

American bankers are the dominant figures in the International Committee of bankers in Mexico. Thomas W. Lamont of J. P. Morgan & Co. is chairman of this committee. Mortimer L. Schiff is the vice-president of the American sections. Charles E. Mitchell of the National City Bank, John J. Mitchell of the Illinois Merchants Trust Co., Charles H. Sabin of the Guaranty Trust Co., Albert H. Wiggin of the Chase National Bank, and Robert Winsor of Kidder-Peabody & Co., Boston, are among the other leading figures in this group of international exploiters. Foreign investments in Mexico indicate that American capitalists lead in oil and mining. United States investors have twice as much capital ($130,000,000) invested in oil and five times as much capital invested in mining ($250,000,000) as does Great Britain. Over $150,000,000 of American capital is invested in railroads and more than $120,000,000 in agriculture. American capitalists hold more than $25,000,000 of the Mexican national debt bond issue. Wall Street is planning to spend upward of $150,000,000 in new oil investments. There is a tendency for a heavy flow of American capital southward. New York and Philadelphia bankers have announced the floating of a new loan of $40,000,000 to the Mexican government.

In South America.

The nitrate beds of Chile; the oil, meat and wheat of Peru; the coffee and rubber plantations of Brazil; and the packing industry of the Argentine Republic; are steadily falling into American control. Speaking before the Investment Bankers' Association, on October 20, 1923, Dr. L. S. Rowe, Director General of the Pan American Union boasted that "American investments in Latin America has passed from the period of adventure to the period of helpful, productive and permanent investment. American companies are securing to an increasing extent contracts for the construction of public works in Latin America. Port works, drainage works, water works and street railway systems constructed by American companies are now in evidence in almost every country of South and Central America. Since the close of the Great War the American people have loaned to Latin America in public loans, disregarding the loans of all private enterprises over a half billion dollars. The precise amount is $529,580,000." Since 1921 American investors have purchased Chilean external bonds to the extent of $62,000,000 and internal bonds totaling $5,000,000. American investments in Chilean iron and copper mines have materially increased. Our Latin American trade has risen from $1,073,000,000 for the ten months ending November 1, 1922 to $1,440,000,000 for the corresponding period of 1923.

Our total Latin American trade amounted to only $750,000,000 in the year preceeding the war. The most notable growth is in exports, which alone will probably total close to $700,000,000 as against $208,000,000 in 1924. The Latin American countries now take 45 per cent of their imports from the United States as against less than 25 per cent in the year before the war. The official custom house returns of the 20 countries forming the Latin American group show $834,000,000 in merchandise imported from the United States in 1921 as against $319,000,000 before the war. This is an increase of over 150 per cent.

To illustrate. America's share of Mexican imports in 1913 was 48 per cent; in 1921 it was 76 per cent. Its share of Cuban imports in 1913 was 53 per cent; in 1921 it was 75 per cent. Our share of Argentine's imports in 1913 was only 15 per cent; in 1921 it rose to 28 per cent. Our share of Brazil's imports rose from 16 per cent in 1913 to 31 per cent in 1921. In 1913 Uruguay's imports were only 12 per cent from the United States; in 1921 it reached the figure of 26 per cent. The outstanding feature of this tremendous increase in trade in both exports and imports is that manufactured articles constitute approximately 80 per cent of the total purchased from the United States by South America.

Several months ago there was formed the Bank of Central and South America to specialize in Latin American investments. The importance of this organization is clearly seen when one analyses the personnel of the Board of Directors. M. Anderson, of J. P. Morgan & Co., James Brown of Brown Bros. & Co., W. Palen Conway of the Guaranty Trust Co., Walter E. Frew of the Corn Exchange Bank, G. W. McGarrah of the Mechanics and Metals National Bank, Maurice A. Oudin of the Marine National Electric Co., and E. R. Stettinus of J. P. Morgan & Co., are among the leading directors in this organization of financiers.

American capital is rapidly tightening its grip on Brazil. According to the Wall Street Journal, there is today invested close to $300,000,000 of American capital here. Federal, state and municipal bonds, railways, navigation, packing, mining, cable, coffee, and mercantile and public utility concerns form the bulk of American investments. The United States is also playing the leading role in the electrification of South America. In the last decade over $100,000,000 have been invested in this field alone, in Brazil, Argentina and other South American nations. It is safe to say that at least one-quarter of a billion dollars of American money is now invested in Argentina.

Mr. Samuel Insul and ex-Senator Lorimor preside over a corporation capitalized at more than a billion dollars controlling the main industries of the Republic of Columbia. As a reward for building a national railway this group has secured the right to exploit for fifty years more than 200 acres of proven petroleum lands for each mile of railway constructed. Our capitalists are planning to develop the iron, coal, lumber, oil, chemical, limestone, and packing house industries.

The Standard Oil Co. is getting great concessions in Ecuador, Bolivia, Peru and Argentina. In Argentina American capital is coming into conflict with British capital. The contract recently closed between Bolivia and Standard Oil gives the American corporation 8,500,000 acres of petroleum land for 55 years and the right to build and run railways, tramways, harbors, telephone and telegraph and all other public utilities.

The International Petroleum Company, 60 per cent of whose stock is owned by the Imperial Oil Co. of Canada, which is in turn 80 per cent controlled by the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, owns the huge De Mares concession of 2,000,000 acres in Columbia. The same corporation owns 400,000 acres in Peru, which has the highest grade of oil known today.

American bankers have concluded successful loans to Guatemala, Costa Rica, Salvador and Honduras. In Guatemala an American bank has just been set up to draw all paper money out of circulation. Haiti has just borrowed $7,500,000, Chile $44,000,000, Uruguay $13,000,000, Brazil $55,000,000, Argentine $250,000,000.

American banking interests and the United Fruit Company have just bought the International Railways of Central America, valued at $60,000,000. This is the largest American owned railroad outside the United States. It gives direct access from the east coast to Fonseca Bay where the United States has concessions for the construction of a naval base to guard the Pacific end of the Panama Canal.

The significance of this sweep of American control cannot be over-estimated. When Dr. Rowe pointed out that American investment has passed from the "period of adventure" to the period of "productive and permanent investment" he had unconsciously touched the pitch of the whole imperialist problem and its vital import to the working class. When American capitalists invest their millions wrung from the workers in such permanent fields as mines, railways, and public utilities, they avoidably secure complete control of the country and shape the policies and politics of the governments of these weaker nations. Out of this economic condition there grows numerous alliances, ententes, and conflicts. No sooner had the United States declared war against Germany than there was an echo of American hostility in the Latin countries south of the United States.

What is more, the balance of class power and class relationships in these backward countries is tremendously influenced and colored by the fact that the basic industries are dominated and owned by foreign investors having at their beck and call the most powerful government in the world to guarantee the safety of their investments and the stability of their profits. In the words of General Leonard Wood, a stable government is a "government under which foreign capital invests at ordinary rates of profits".

Towards The East.

It has oft been said that the Pacific will be the scene of the next world war. The United States is fully aware of this political truth and has taken financial, military and political measures to prepare for such a war should it occur. American commerce with the Oriental countries is now three times what it was ten years ago, and accounts for almost 25 per cent of our total trade. Within the last year alone American trade with the Far East has increased 25 per cent. Here, as in the Latin American countries, our exports are largely of manufactured goods.

In China, American shipping and railway interests are extending their control. Wilson's withdrawal from the Six Power group has not hindered the extension of American interests. The Robert Dollar Co., the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., the Admiral Oriental Line, and the Green Star Steamship Corporation are among the leading shipping firms plying between China and America. When the foreign governments concentrated warships at Canton in order to prevent Dr. Sun Yet Sen from seizing the customs funds, an American flotilla of five destroyers participated and an American admiral was put in charge of naval operations. The Department of Commerce is now proposing several amendments to the China trade act of 1922 so as to remove the federal tax and other penalties and thus aid American corporations in Chinese business.

It has been estimated by the Union Trust Co. of Cleveland, that the recent Japanese earthquake has resulted in the destruction of 2 per cent of the wealth of the entire empire in an area covering one-seventh of the country. This has enabled the American capitalists to extend their influence in Japan. The United States is proving to be the leading banker and manufacturer in supplying the funds for Japanese reconstruction. It has been estimated that about $300,000,000 will be needed to help Japan restore its losses.

A group of American capitalists, amongst whom are found such powerful concerns as J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the National City Co., the First National Bank of New York, Brown Bros. & Co., Philadelphia, Lee, Higginson & Co., have just gotten together with about fifteen other banking firms and floated a loan of $150,000,000 to Japan. This is the largest long term foreign loan floated in the United States since the armistice and marks a positive step in advance towards American financial and commercial supremacy in the Far East.

At the close of last year there was organized in Tokio the Japanese-American Engineers' & Contracting Corporation, capitalized at $50,000,000, which is to be financed and controlled jointly by American and Japanese interests. Thru the organization of this company American capitalists have assured themselves the role of the dominant group in the reconstruction of Japan. The Tokio Electric Co., which has recently absorbed nine competing companies, has formed a combination with the Westinghouse Electric Company of America. Likewise, the General Electric Company has concluded a combination with the Shibaura Electric Works; the Western Electric Company has formed a combination with the Nippon Dento Electric Works. The hand of American capital is also suspected in the recently announced union of flour mill companies in Japan. Thru this merger six of the biggest companies with a combined daily producing capacity of close to twenty thousand barrels united. This corporation is now planning to swallow up fifteen smaller companies and organize itself into a national federation.

In China our imperialists are on their guard. At the conference of the Associated American Chamber of Commerce of China and Manilla, recently held at Shanghai, our capitalists passed a resolution demanding that Washington immediately strengthen the American marine, naval and military control in China to the fullest requirements. It is said that this was "the most important meeting an American commercial organization in the Far East has ever held". The fact that Japanese imperialism has not yet been able to collect dividends in its Siberian and Korean ventures, coupled with the fact that American capitalists are steadily extending their influence in the Far and Middle East, only accentuates the points of conflict between the United States and Japan.

In the Near East, American imperialism is also making itself felt. The famous Chester concessions, the drive for oil in Mesopotamia, and the growing interest of American investors in Palestine and Syria, indicate the direction of the trade winds here.

The Yankee imperialists have their eyes on Europe also. Wall Street has done more than its share to turn Austria into a coolie colony. Our capitalists are now landing heavily on Italian resources and bolstering up the Fascist tyranny of Mussolini. At the close of 1923, there was announced the organization of the Italian Power Co., a 100 per cent American corporation organized to finance light and power enterprises in Italy. Among the directors of this new American imperialist output are Morgan, Mellon, the Bankers' Trust, General Electric and Rockefeller interests, displacing French and Swiss interests.

Our capitalists are interested even in the wildest thickets of African investments. In the recent Tangier controversy, involving about half a dozen European countries, the United States, that is the Stone & Webster Electric & Power interests, were represented by Father Denning, who was supposed to be bringing the light of Christianity and the power of the Savior to the backward tribesmen.

To the DAILY WORKER: Someone has placed my name on the subscription list to the DAILY WORKER. I wish to thank that one, whoever it may be. I immensely enjoy perusing its columns. The DAILY WORKER staff most certainly are waging a beautiful fight and instilling a wonderful spirit of solidarity for and into the ranks of the striking International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

These striking garment workers are putting up a good fight. I wholly agree with them that strikes are won on the picket line, altho the organization in which I hold a membership card (I. W. W.) believes that strikes are won on the job. That is scientific, there is no doubt. It is too scientific for the amount of real class education that we, the masses have had. We've had the fear of the boss instilled into us even before we were old enough to walk and to expect us to very suddenly lose that fear is expecting too much. It takes more class education to successfully strike on the job than the masses will have in the next 25 years.

We are class war prisoners, victims of a war between the working class and the employing class. I am yours for ours, Bert Bland, No. 9411, Walla Walla, Wash.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—Twenty-five states have responded thus far to the call for delegates to a meeting to be held here early in May to formally organize the Woman's Committee for Political Action. Delegates to the national convention of the Conference for Progressive Political Action will be elected, and a program will be adopted. The movement is similar in general purpose to the C. P. P. A.

MONROE, Mich., April 22.—A typewriter came to the rescue when two deaf mutes appeared before Justice Lee Smith today to be married.

The justice pounded out the ritual, an interpreter translated it into the sign language as the justice recited it and Jacob Kaler, 35, and Mildred Comer, 21, both of Bucyrus, Ohio, were married without saying a word.

RUBBER SLAVES RAID HOMES OF WHITE MASTERS

(Crusader Service.)

GEORGETOWN, Demerara, April 8.—(By Mail)—Exploited beyond endurance on starvation wages, the colored workers of this British colony staged an armed demonstration here on April 7. The demonstration began as a workers' parade and ended in the raiding of the homes of the bourgeoisie, the wrecking of street trams, the turning off of the electric power and the general demoralization of the scared bosses and colonial authorities.

As the great workers' parade, called in protest against working conditions and wages here, passed McInroy's building, many of the participants left the line and rushed the tram cars, demanding that the motormen and conductors join the demonstration against labor's exploiters. The idea spread and many workers now drew from the lines and stores, were closed and the clerks invited to join the demonstration or go home.

Chief of Police Thrashed.

Chief Ticket Inspector Phillips, a Barbadian, got a good licking for attempting to take the place of a motorman who was ordered from his post by the demonstrators. The workers then marched upon the water tanks and power house and forced the workers to quit and join the demonstration.

Many of the homes of the rich were entered and the luxurious furnishings torn down and thrown out into the yards or on to the sidewalks. The workers made no effort to loot. They just threw things out. Among the homes entered was that of Cados, manager and local representative of the Demerara Bouxite Co. and Sprosone, Ltd. All of the expensive furnishings were torn down and destroyed, and many a box of fine cigars and cases of champagne and other high-priced wine were destroyed by the starving workers.

The demonstrators experienced little opposition from the police who are, indeed, in sympathy with the poor starving wretches. However, reprisals may be attempted by the bourgeoisie as war ships have been cabled for and several are now on the way.

Object to 6-Cent Wage.

The workers of Demerara have been existing in precarious condition for some time past. Unemployment is rife and wages are extremely low. The bosses want to give a man only six cents a day for arduous work in the jungles gathering rubber.

SIOUX FALLS IS STAGING FIERCE ELECTION FIGHT

Old Party Pols Strike For Workers' Vote

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., April 22.—The great American democracy is on trial in Sioux Falls. The most spectacular and bitterly contested city election ever held in Sioux Falls turned out to be a "stalemate." Mayor Burnside, "friend of labor", who graduated from a hack driver to the chief magistry of South Dakota's largest city, which he has held for 21 years, was up for re-election. He was opposed by George W. Egan, four times unsuccessful Republican candidate for Governor, twice dis-barred for swindling his clients, and now under a two-year sentence to the State Penitentiary, charged with making false affidavits in connection with an insurance loss. The third candidate was Thomas McKinnan, a contractor.

Egan received 550 votes out of over 11,000, but did not receive a majority, and the final battle is to take place between Egan and McKinnan today. Practically all of the unorganized labor of Sioux Falls, support Egan, who is an actor orator and a 100 per cent "boob-charmer." The "best people" and the business interests generally, are supporting McKinnan. The vote for Egan is regarded—not as an endorsement of him or his record—but as a mass protest against existing conditions—locally and nationally.

As an aftermath of the election last Tuesday, charges of wholesale illegal voting are being made by a Citizens' Committee, and about 1500 votes cast are being investigated. It is charged that Egan's supporters ransacked the country towns surrounding Sioux Falls, and ran in several hundred votes for him.

Imperialism In The Open

President Coolidge, in his speech before the editors of the Associated Press, in New York, the choicest collection of capitalism's paid publicists, comes out openly for the establishment of the hegemony of the House of Morgan over Europe backed by the full power of the United States government.

He dismissed the fact that the capital has been found to be peopled with thieves large and small with a wave of his hand. Corruption, he said, was to be expected following such an outburst of patriotism as American participation in the world war for the rights of small nations, and most of his speech was devoted to a glorification of the lords of finance and industry who, according to the Coolidge code, are the backbone of the nation and for whom the American masses should be grateful seeing that an all-wise providence had provided them with such far-sighted and generous rulers.

On the matter of taxes the president was quite positive. The rich must not be discriminated against in favor of the poor; that, he opined, "was an unworkable principle."

Having settled the question of who owns America the president then gave more than a hint that this ownership should be extended to other lands. He spoke highly of the Dawes plan which turns the European nations into slave states upon which the House of Morgan levies tribute and hoped for the endorsement of this scheme by the electorate.

The fact that such a speech was delivered to such a gathering, at a time like this, is not without significance.

President Coolidge appeared before the Associated Press editors, not as the spokesman of the American people, but as the mouthpiece of the House of Morgan and every editor present knew it. It is in this manner that the editors of the capitalist press are informed of the tasks they are expected to perform. In this instance the task is that of convincing the American masses that civilization in Europe can be saved only by the assurance to the House of Morgan that the armed forces of America are behind it in its project of establishing a receivership of European industry.

It is a glorious plan that the House of Morgan has devised. It is a dream of conquest that would have made Napoleon turn green with envy; it is the most ambitious and unscrupulous use of mighty financial power that the world has ever seen.

For five and one-half years the financiers that made billions out of the world struggle have watched the peoples of Europe sink lower and lower into the pit of misery their rulers dug for them. The international bankers have peered with a cold and calculating eye at the convulsions of diseased and starving men, women and children and have computed with seeming accuracy the exact moment when it would be possible without a great risk to bind them for unnumbered years to the chariot of the finance-capitalists.

The gold of the European nations has been flowing in a steady stream to the shores of America: our financiers have aided with it every band of cut-throats whom they believed could weaken the powers of resistance of the European working class. They have made common cause with any and every national capitalist group that showed unusual ruthlessness and virility.

The time is ripe to strike, they think, and so the masses of America will again be deluged with cleverly written news-stories and articles eulogizing the unselfish purposes of the House of Morgan and blaming all the evils of which the masses complain upon the "unsettled European situation."

Once again the American masses will be urged to come to the rescue of a suffering world and to place its salvation in the hands of Coolidge, Dawes, Hughes and other spokesmen of the House of Morgan.

It is more than probable that the nominee of the democrat party will also be committed to such a scheme but not quite so openly. The bandits of American imperialism will have more than one string to their bow and if a candidate of either of the capitalist parties is returned in the coming election the American workers and farmers will be cast for the role of international policemen—a police force that will be expected to enforce the dictates of the rulers of America upon any people that revolts against the payment of tribute to House of Morgan.

The answer of the workers and farmers of the United States to this brazen scheme must be the organization of a mass party of workers and farmers on June 17 and the prosecution with renewed intensification of all organization—on both the industrial and political field.

It Pays to be Crazy

Our leading dailies that have of late been complaining that their delicate esthetic senses are being outraged by the Teapot and Wheeler disclosures of corruption and rottenness in the government are getting back to normalcy. For these well-kept mouthpieces of the employers, normalcy means but one thing in the code of newspaperdom. This is: feed the readers scandal stories, murder tales, divorce mysteries, and lurid exposures of sex depravity. Thus, recent days have brought the old Harry Thaw case on the front pages of our metropolitan press in place of some Teapot Dome testimony.

Napoleon once said that "one newspaper was worth 100,000 bayonets." He knew whereof he spoke. Even in taking up the Thaw trash instead of the Washington exposures, the capitalist press has hidden certain facts which, if given adequate currency amongst the masses, might harm the existing order.

For instance, while the newspapers were filling up acres of print refreshing the memories of the informed and educating the uninformed, they significantly omitted saying a word about the huge estate of Harry Thaw. But on taking pains to scan carefully the financial press, not printed for or read by the workers, one finds that "Harry Thaw's share of the hundred million dollar estate left by William Thaw is estimated to have quintupled to $5,000,000 in seven years since his incarcerations as insane."

This is interesting as well as instructive. How comes it that a man who has been adjudged insane by the highest medical and judicial authorities of capitalism can have his fortune quintupled without doing a stroke of work? What magic was employed by this wizard of lunacy that his wealth increased five hundred per cent while he was in the crazy house?

Offhand it would seem that it pays to be crazy. It has never occurred that a member of the working class, a miner, a steel worker, a railroader, should become a millionaire by the most arduous work. Yet, Thaw, doing nothing became a multimillionaire. It surely must be a crazy system when individuals who are incarcerated in insane asylums and do no productive work at all can become multimillionaires in less than a decade merely because they own the means of production and exchange socially used, while the overwhelming mass of the workingmen and farmers are condemned to intolerable living conditions and bankruptcy tho they are engaged in industry and agriculture from sunrise to sunset every day thruout the year.

Recognition Creeps Closer.

The Soviet Recognition tide draws ever closer to the borders of the United States. Like the tide that overwhelmed King Canute, it is restless, ever rising, irresistible.

In spite of the avalanche of abuse hurled at Soviet Russia these past years, in spite of the open and continuous assault of the kept press, Alexander Yazikoff, official representative of the Union of Soviet Republics, is at Montreal, ready to open negotiations for trade relations and recognition with the Canadian government.

That is getting pretty close. That is the closest that any Soviet representative has been to the borders of the United States since Ludwig Martens was deported from this country.

No wonder then that the kept organs of the international bankers should be on the job. They have discovered "red propaganda" in Yazikoff's baggage. To be sure, it consisted of only a few harmless books in the Russian language that no "honest-to-goodness" Canadian could read, but the yellow press can't be expected to be too careful about details.

If an ignorant policeman can report Lester F. Ward's "Dynamic Sociology" as a treatise for making dynamite, then a capitalist editor can surely discover in one Russian book, in the possession of Yazikoff, a force potent enough to wreck the whole capitalist structure in this western world.

But this form of Soviet baiting has worn itself out. No matter how much the kept press screams, the noise it makes is drowned in the demand for Soviet recognition. The workers of the United States welcome Alexander Yazikoff to this side of the Canadian border. Soon even the capitalist politicians in Washington will be doing the same thing, in spite of themselves, and the subsidized press will applaud, because it will be compelled to.

Pinchot--Penitent Prodigal

Says Pinchot, the progressive: "Nobody questions that, I, as a loyal republican will support him (Coolidge) in the campaign."

Will the labor leaders of Pennsylvania and the liberals in and out of the state who have been singing the praises of this "friend of labor" now rise and explain upon what their appraisal of the attitude of Pinchot was based?

To be a "loyal republican" after the nauseating disclosures of crass corruption and criminality in the republican cabinet that have been made means but one thing—that Pinchot is loyal to the reactionary capitalist interests the republican party represents.

The Pinchot position is, we believe, a trying one for the band of progressives who were cheered by the thought of the millenium that was close at hand as the result of his election.

Whom Shall We Organize--The Workers or The Bosses?

By the Needle Trades International Committee.

Should you ask the average union member of our needle trade the question, "Wherein lies the present chaos in the industry and what caused the recent growth of the great distress of the workers?" he would certainly answer you in the following manner:

The chaos is the result of the fact that the entire industry has been transformed into a network of contracting shops. The sweat shop disease has spread to all corners. Cloaks, men's clothing, caps, embroidery and many other products are being manufactured in all sorts of hidden dens. The union cannot have any measure of control over these hidden places. The union has even lost its control over the so-called legitimate shops, which they did control some time ago.

Many Non-Unionists.

A large part of the workers in the needle trades is unorganized. The union has seldom taken special measures to organize the workers in those factories which are found in small places surrounding the larger needle trade centers of the country. The large numbers of unorganized are instrumental in spreading still further the sweat shop system. Because of crumbling politics of the union, the employers are in a position to take still more advantage of the disease. Their hunger for ever increasing profits has no bounds. They therefore use to the utmost all possible scab holes, with the result that the disease affects the workers to an even greater degree. The employers profit by this epidemic, while the workers suffer. Their misery is constantly increasing because of it. Unemployment is large, the season short, wages miserably low, tho speeding up in the shops is unbearable. The sanitary conditions in the greater number of the contracting shops are horrible, etc.

It may be that not every worker whom you ask will answer you in this manner, but it is, nevertheless, certain that the average worker sees the problem in this light, and that is simply because there are no other factors that can have caused the present chaos and the present miserable conditions. And one does not need to be a specialist to understand whence have come our present sickness in the needle trades.

What Is To Be Done?

Then what is to be done to cure the disease? It seems to be quite clear that among the most important tasks before us, two main points stand out: First, to exert all our energy to organize the unorganized workers, and, secondly, to carry on a strenuous campaign to uproot the newly planted sweating system. Where there is a will there is a way.

In the year 1910 the New York cloakmakers revolted against the sweating system then existing, and as a result of the revolt, we have built up a powerful union. Many other branches of our needle trade unions have also been built up as a result of the revolt against the sweating epidemic. Certainly at the present time we are not any weaker than in those days when we had almost no union at all! And is the sweating system any less evil today than it formally was? We have the strength to put up a fight against this evil. There are several means open to us by which we can start a real fight against the sweating holes and the sweat shop bosses. If we wish to cure our disease we must start by organizing the unorganized workers, and destroy all the germs causing the disease.

Difficult But Necessary.

Of course it is a difficult task, but it is a necessary task and no matter how difficult we must and we can accomplish it.

But our leaders have lately been mainly concerned with making their work easier. We have become as accustomed to settle our difficulties by artful means, that we have almost forgotten that labor organizations must, at all times, still carry on a fight for better conditions. As the old fashioned grandmothers we have become so accustomed to look for a magic cure for every illness, that we have already forgotten that certain diseases must be operated on at the roots.

Our leaders claim that it is difficult to organize the unorganized workers. To be sure, the workers are not as yet class conscious. The bosses, and even all sorts of small contractors are more class conscious than the unorganized workers, so our leaders have undertaken to organize the bosses rather than the workers, and instead of working to wipe out the nests of the sweating contractors, they are working to organize the sweating contractors.

A short time ago, for instance, Feinberg, the manager of the N. Y. Cloakmakers' Joint Board, brought forth a plan whereby the union might organize the small contractors that supply bundles of cloaks to all bedroom and kitchen holes in different parts of the city.

Organizing Contractors.

In the New York branch of the Amalgamated the union leaders have been quite chummy for some time with all sorts of organizations of small contractors. Lately their relations have become still more friendly. Some jesters say that even the lock-outs made by the contractors against the tailors were inspired by certain union leaders. We have become accustomed to a policy of concessions—you contractors give me something and I will give you something, too. It is understood that neither gave up anything of their own, except at the expense of the worker, but their unio leaders believe that with this sort o policy they accomplish a great amou of good for the worker.

Several weeks ago there was i New York a strike of tuckers, hem stitchers and pleaters, and the unio organizers of the International worke hard to organize the employers int an association.

And now we hear that some of th leaders of the capmakers union als have a plan to organize. Whom?—the contractors. Why? Well, that i the style, and it is impossible to con vince these leaders that this style i not for the interests of the worker.

A Confused Strategy.

Only last summer have the cap makers carried thru a strike with th end in vew of cleaning out th leeches and the sweatshops. Th workers gladly entered the struggl when called by the union for this pur pose. According to the report of th leaders the strike ended successfully And what have we now?

We confess that we cannot under stand the depth and the wisdom o the strategy of our leadership, bu from the depths of the heart the cr must needs come: to the devil with such strategic wisdom! We still hav our senses and have not yet lost con sciousness. We cannot find in th afore mentioned strategy any wisdo that works in the interest of the work er. We understand that when it i necessary to organize the workers and root out the nests of the sweat shop bosses, we cannot work it back wards. Don't bother us with you maneuvers. We have had enough o your "Grandmother" medicines. Th disease in our midst is already ful grown.

The workers—them we must organ ize, but not the employers. They ca take care of their own affairs withou the aid of the working class leaders

Children's Concerts Close

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN.

Children's concerts of the Chicago Symphony orchestra came to a close for this season at Orchestra Hall on April 17. In order to test the quickness of ear which his audience had developed during the season Stock had the principal player of each wind instrument stand behind a screen and play a phrase or two. The tone qualities of most of the instruments were readily recognized, tho the clarinet and oboe did not prompt as quick and as loud response as the others. This is good music education, for many a veteran concert goer who has not had this sort of training has not so quick an ear.

The program opened with the prelude to the third act of Wagner's "Lohengrin" followed by the world's second most popular tune, the bridal chorus in the same opera.

Then followed the second and third movements of the Beethoven eighth symphony. As customary Mr. Stock had the themes of these thrown on a screen in notation and gave his listeners a beautifully foolish text to sing them to. The text of the opened theme of the second movement has changed in four years. When this work was played during the first season of children's concerts the text was "Oh Henry, Oh Henry, where did you get that billygoat", while last Thursday it was "Oh Lizzie, Oh Lizzie, where did I put my monkey wrench". Beautiful poetry, and of the sort that sticks with the music, so that one does not easily forget words or tune.

The Saint-Saens "Danse Macabre", a symphonic poem describing the dance of ghosts on their gravestones at midnight, and the brilliant festival march "Pomp and Circumstance" by Edward Elgar closed the program.

The children's concerts of the Chicago Symphony orchestra are beyond doubt the best means of music education in the city. If music courses in all the schools of Chicago were abolished, and the pupils sent to these concerts instead, they would know and appreciate music better than any long school courses in singing could teach them.

The only regret is, as many Symphony devotees could tell you, that there are no concerts of this kind for adults.

Mendelssohn Club Farewell

The Chicago Mendelsohn club, a men's chorus directed by Harrison Wild, gave its final concert of the season at Orchestra Hall with John Charles Thomas, baritone, as guest soloist. The concert brought to performance a great deal of music, some good, some not so good. The best of the concert, in singing and in music, was an old English ballet "Thru Bushes and Thru Briars," arranged for part singing by R. Vaughan Williams. It is a quiet, rustic bit, and excellently sung.

An unusual arrangement of symphonic music was the second movement of Dvorak's "New World" symphony set to a Negro spiritual text. In the symphony the music is a slow, idyllic solo for English horn. The text fitted the music well, but one may question a bit the application of a text to a composition intended as pure music.

"The Farewell of Hiawatha," set from Longfellow by Arthur Foote, is a trifle long and bombastic. But the pure delight of such composition as the Negro spiritual "Wait 'Til Ah Put On Mah Crown" by William Reddick, and the comic song "But They Didn't" by Rogers as performed by the Mendelsohn club amply makes up for it.

John Charles Thomas sings the English language so that one can recognize and understand it as such. This alone is a high art, but Thomas has a great deal more. A big voice, superb quality, interpretative ability are some of them. The compositions he sang were mainly of the French impressionist style of concert song, but the one Russian work he sang got his audience and this writer more than the French compositions. That was "The Evening Prayer" by Musorgski, which tells about a little child, half asleep, forced to pray for his parents and all his sisters and his cousins and his aunts, whom he reckoned up by dozens. If it were not for the fact that it takes a most wide awake singer to sing in a manner that gives one the impression that he is all but dozing, one might have thought that Musorgskis' song was written about John Charles Thomas, saying his prayers in a dress suit, standing before a piano on the platform of Orchestra Hall, with a large audience and the Mendelssohn club looking on.

Noted Musician Has Composed Music For New Motion Picture

Fully as great care has been exercised in the selection of the music which will accompany the new motion picture of the International Workers' Aid, Friends of Soviet Russia, as in the selection and titling of the picture itself.

The Russian half of the picture shows the contrast between the old production methods and the new social order so it is comparatively simple to carry the theme of the former in the beautiful old Russian folk-songs while the latter is served with the gorgeously inspiring new music of the revolutionary movement. Many of these new selections will be played in this country for the first time, and the services of a noted musician, Franz Beidel, have been employed to make orchestrations of these tunes.

In the German half of the picture the task was much more difficult notwithstanding the reputed wealth of German folk music. The arrangers found that practically all German non-operative music consisted either of folk tune or nationalist patriotic airs. The sweetly sentimental, contentment loving folk music was found to be expressive of a "Golden Age" Germany that no longer exists This labor film shows the actual Germany of today, the Germany of reality, and the old folk tunes, with very few exceptions, were actually incongruous.

The nationalist tunes were obviously out of the question. For the accompaniment to the pathetic conditions of the German worker, recourse had to be taken to Tchaikovsky and other Russians of the old school, showing the reversal of conditions in the two countries. For the labor revolt sections of the film, special medleys of German labor songs dear to the hearts of the "Liedertafeln" were arranged, topped off with the magnificent new "Hundertschaften Marsch" of the Workers' armed guards. Thus "Russian and Germany" becomes a musical as well as a pictorial treat.

WHAT, O WHAT SHALL THE HARVEST BE?
I WAS TALKING TO A STORE MAN,
WITH RUBBER tire goggles
ASTRADDLE HIS long nose,
AND HE told me
HIS PLAN to settle
THE FARM question,
WAS TO PAY the farmers
FIXED PRICES for all crops
AND LET the old hayseeds
ROOT HOG or die.
JUST LIKE union workers
WITH WAGES by the scales.
A CHEWING GUM fellow
WITH MONEY to burn
AND HIS lunch tablets
IN ONE CORNER of a
SMALL VEST pocket
BROKE IN on our talk.
HE WANTED to see
ALL FARMERS move to cities,
SO LABOR would be cheap
THAT MAN would have
GAME PRESERVES instead of farms
TOURIST PARKS in place of dairies
AND FARM products ruled off
THE PUBLIC markets
AS UNFIT for human food
I WAS just thinking
WHAT FUNNY old birds
THE MEN and the women
OF THIS NATION will be
WHEN FARMS and gardens
ARE MEMORIES of the past
AND ALL PEOPLE wear nose bags,
TO CATCH food calories
DRIFTING IN the air
AND EVERY one will dress
IN FIG LEAF robes
BUT YE OLD politicians
WITH WEAK KNEES and sore gums
WHY DON'T YOU do something
TO HELP the farmers
OWN THE LAND and be FREE AMERICAN citizens?

THE VIEWS OF OUR READERS ON LIFE, LABOR, INDUSTRY, POLITICS

A STRANGE ANIMAL.

I met a unique specimen of the Furriers' Union today. I spoke in an I. W. W. hall on boring from within and mass union idea vs. dual union idea. He took the floor and asked for further advice. I joined him at end of meeting and his philosophy was as follows: "I know all the ideas of the Communists and the Socialists. I don't care for their papers, as they give a biased view. The capitalists are biased the other way. So I take the liberal-labor papers—the Dial, the Nation, the New Republic and the Manchester Guardian. They are just as much against capitalism as the Communists, they fully understand the labor movement and they give the Absolute Truth without bias."

I can understand a bourgeois being a pacifist and a liberal, but a worker! He says he has studied Communism—and he still believes in Absolute Truth divorced from any materialist foundation! The New Republic recently wrote up John L. Lewis of the Miners', as an "honest and pugnacious fighter"! Hard, in the Nation, said that Foster wants to "convert the A. F. of L. masses into leaving their unions and forming perfect, industrial unions." And none of these papers deigned to mention the recent slugging campaign of the N. Y. Forward crowd in the speaker's own union—the Furriers!

This is all true. I would not have believed yesterday such a man could exist.

To the DAILY WORKER: The view expressed in Monday morning's DAILY WORKER that the epilogue to the play, "R. U. R.," to be shown at the C. S. P. S. Hall on Wednesday night, supplies the play with a weak ending, has many adherents.

However, I believe the ending to R. U. R. is fully as strong as the rest of the Robot play if properly interpreted. Those who consider the ending weak claim that the epilogue does not carry out the revolutionary philosophy of the other acts. According to my interpretation it does.

Primus and Helena are reformed robots, that is, they represent workers just after the proletarian revolution. The robots previous to the uniting of the "robots of the world," represented the average worker. The robots mind was not perceptible. He was the worker who was so busy coining money for his masters and fighting the wars of another class that he had no time to think.

But after the revolution, the robot or worker for the first time had leisure for a little introspection. He no longer needed to spend all his time for others. Among his first thoughts were thoughts of self. The revolutionary robot said, "Lo, I have a soul. I have time for a real education, for romance, for the art of living."

This revelation of the spiritual self is my interpretation of the epilogue. As soon as the once lowly minded, dulled and stolid worker came to the realization of the joy of living the future of the race was secure.

PULLMAN STRIKE SPREADING TO YARDS AND SHOPS

BONUS FOR DEAD VETS IS VICTORY

Senators Vote For The Insurance Plan.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 23.—Soldiers won their bonus in the Senate yesterday after a long fight. The cash bonus was lost early, giving the majority to the insurance policy plan. The vote was 67 for; 17 against. The house has passed the bonus bill which will be up to Coolidge after conferences between the house and senate.

During the fight for the cash bonus Senator Neely, West Virginia democrat, said that the railroads had been given $2,000,000,000 in adjusted compensation and that the war profiteers had secured even more. Neely allied himself with the cash option proponents.

20 Year Insurance Policies

The bill offers cash payment to veterans not entitled to more than $50 in adjusted service compensation and 20 year endowment insurance policies to others. To meet the cost of the bill for the calendar year 1925, an appropriation not exceeding $100,000,000 will be made.

The adjusted service credit is based on a $1 a day for home service and $1.25 for overseas, with maximums of $500 and $625, respectively. The first sixty days of service are excluded from computation. Provision is made for all enlisted men, women and officers up to the rank of captain in the army and marine corps and lieutenant in the navy. There are many exceptions not allowed bonus compensation. Service between April 5, 1917 and July 1, 1919, is considered, but enlistment must have ante-dated November 12, 1918.

Borah Against Bonus

Senator Borah, republican from Idaho, lead an attack upon all bonus systems. He warned, "It is time to take stock and turn the corner."

The bonus bill has been on the legislative program for two months. An amendment making the cash payments available at once was adopted today before the final passage of the bill.

OIL LAWYER IS NEW WITNESS IN WHEELER QUIZ

Senator Badly Floored In Immunity Issue.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—The Senate investigation of the indictment of Senator Wheeler, Montana, was resumed today with L. V. Beaulieu, Los Angeles attorney, on the stand.

Beaulieu was formerly attorney for Gordon Campbell, Montana oil man, who was mentioned in the Wheeler indictment.

At the outset, Senator Sterling, South Dakota, insisted that the witness waive immunity from prosecution, but on objection by other committee members, this was not done.

British Flyers Lead Race

BENDAR ABBAS, Persia, April 23.—Britain's round the world flyers were to get away today for Kamarshi after completing successfully another lap of their efforts to beat the American army's effort to be the first to circumnavigate the globe in the air.

WASHINGTON, TEXAS, RHODE ISLAND HEAD LIST FOR JUNE 17

(By The Federated Press)

ST. PAUL, April 23.—Rhode Island, Texas and Washington state have sent in the first three responses to the recently distributed call for a national nominating convention of the Farmer-Labor movement to be held in St. Paul June 17.

To overcome the fact that the farmers are not so organized as the industrial workers, a special basis of representation provides that any group of 25 farmers may send a delegate to the St. Paul convention, provided that they are not represented thru some other organization from their county.

DAUGHERTY IN BRAIN STORM BOOSTS SELF

Sees Wheeler-Wobbly Plot To Get Him.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Now that the lunacy trial of Harry Kendal Thaw has come to an end at Philadelphia, Harry M. Daugherty, former attorney general, is trying to entertain the readers of the yellow press with his brainstorms.

Daugherty has just issued a broadside in defense of himself that includes some of the following thrilling sensations:

That U. S. Senator [illegible] K. Wheeler promised the Industrial Workers of the Wold, if elected, that he would drive the attorney general (meaning Daugherty) from the cabinet.

That h ewas never a drinking man, and that he quit entirely when he became attorney general, to keep his conscience clear.

That the Wright-Martin airplance scandal was based on lies.

That President Harding was nominated and elected the freest man that ever stepped across the threshold o fthe White House.

That there are four doctors and an undertaker who can testify how Jess Smith's mind gave way, resulting in his suicide.

That he never sa wthe myesterious green house o nK. Street.

That he did use the house on H Street.

That "the shac kalong the creek" was a decent place, where nothing ever took place that was not decent and wholesome.

That he appointed Gaston Means with reluctance and dismissed him in the face of opposition.

This would indicate that Daugherty feels that his morals, and not his record of graft as attorney general was being attached.

Daugherty is expected to spill some more of the same in a speech at Columbus, Ohio, tonight.

Boycott Used To Force Acceptance Of Ford's Offer

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Senator Norris of the Senate Agricultural Committee charged today at hearings on Muscle Shoals legislation that merchants in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals were boycotting manufacturers who opposed the Ford offer.

"I am informed," said Norris, "that merchants around Muscle Shoals, particularly at Florence, Ala., are boycotting manufacturers who are adverse to the bid of Henry Ford."

'PEACE' TALK CIRCUS PLAN BEING PUSHED

WASHINGTON, April 23.—President Coolidge and Secretary of State Hughes are going ahead with their plans for another disarmament circus here. Like good press agents they have great hopes for their plans.

When the international situation may be such as to make such a parley practicable, was the principal subject of interest in official and diplomatic circles, as all phases of President Coolidge's suggestion in his New York speech yesterday were discussed. Washington was regarded as the likely place for such a conference.

Speculation on when the conference might be assembled ranged from next Autumn to the Spring of 1925. Opinion also differed as to whether the President could afford to call the parley before the elections. Some thought that for him to take this course would lay Mr. Coolidge open to the charge of conducting international affairs for political prestige.

The most important factor as to time it was recognized, is the rapidity with which Europe becomes stablized as a result of working out of the Dawes plan. Mr. Coolidge made this the pre-requisite to the second conference.

Expect France to Join.

France's attitude is recognized here as the keynote of the successful holding of another conference. French refusal to reduce her army because of fear of Germany was the reason land disarmament was not considered at the other conferences.

The President now hopes that France will find no futher need to fear and will agree to join in a general limitation of land forces.

Observers here believe that if the proposed conference be held along the lines indicated by President Coolidge it may be a much more important meeting than the first Washington parley. In view of the inclusion of land forces and aircraft in the President's plan, Russia and Germany would be invited, it is believed.

Says G. O. P. Bonus Bill Fools Veterans, Pleases Wall Street

WASHINGTON, April 23.—The Republican Insurance Policy Bonus Bill is an attempt to deceive the soldiers and at the same time to appease the wrath of financial interests, Senator Sheppard charged in the Senate in opening the attack against the bill.

Parliamentarism Is Doomed, Says Norwegian Paper

KRISTIANIA, April 23.—The Norwegian Workers Party, at the beginning of the year, had 40,260 members, compared with 52,792 in July, 1923, a loss of 12,532 members. The Communist Party claims 14,000 members.

Aftenposten, organ for the most conservative element, has this to say of parliamentarism: "The parliamentarism that resulted from the state court (riksretten, 1884) is itself already a doomed system. All see and admit the great drawbacks of parliamentarism, and when the time is ripe a new political landslide will also sweep parliamentarism away. It has not had a long lifetime, but its leaves are turning and ready to fall. In astonishing short time the parliamentarism has lost its glory in our land, as well as in others."

The government has proposed that prohibition be abolished. The Social-Democrats in the Storting proposed to submit the question to the voters. At the urgent demand of the cabinet the Storting, by a vote of 96 to 44, with 10 absentees, rejected the motion.

AMBASSADOR TO MEXICO SEEN AS LABOR AGENT

Warren Uses Mex Labor On His Beet Fields

By SHERMAN BOWMAN.
(By The Federated Press)

DETROIT, Mich., April 23.—According to a special dispatch to the Detroit Free Press, which bears indications that it may have been extracted from a communication from the ambassador himself, Charles B. Warren, United States ambassador to Mexico, is using his influence with American bankers to assist the Mexican government in negotiating a $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 loan in this country.

Ambassador Warren joined with the Wallace family of central Michigan in organizing a combine in the sugar beet industry in this state. Mexican labor is extensively used in beet cultivation. Recent testimony before a senate committee proved that workers are being imported from Mexico to keep the standard of living in the beet fields at a low level.

Trade unionists in Michigan are waiting to see what effect Warren's assignment to Mexico will have on this condition.

It is being said among trade unionists that his willingness to assist the Mexican government to borrow millions from United States banks is to him merely an effort to mortgage, morally, the Mexican state to United States bankers. And it is expected that thruout his career among the Mexicans he will have every opportunity to act as a super-recruiting agent for his beet field bosses.

PINE TRUST, LABOR'S FOE, ON THE GRILL

WASHINGTON, April 23.—The Southern Pine Association, one of the most criminal and murderous aggregations of capital in the land, had a close friend in the former attorney general, Harry M. Daugherty, according to facts revealed before the senate committee investigating the department of justice.

It is the Southern Pine Association that has left a trail of workers' blood across the southern states, ruthlessly subduing any signs of discontent on the port of its workers.

Its murder regime in Louisiana, for instance, reached its climax, in 1919, with the cold-blooded assassination of four organizers of the American Federation of Labor, at Bogalusa.

Alleged price-fixing of the Southern Pine Association, and charges that the department of justice failed to prosecute it after a case against the organization has been worked up by the federal trade commission, were brought to the attention of the Senate-Daugherty investigating committee today.

Violated Anti-Trust Law.

Huston Thompson, chairman of the commission, told the committee that there was unquestionable evidence of anti-trust law violations by the association, yet the department of justice under former Attorney General Daugherty, did nothing to prosecute the suit brought against it in February, 1920.

John H. Kirby of Texas, former president of the association, was brought into the testimony by Senator Wheeler, who read into the record excerpts of a speech by Kirby referring to a conference with Daugherty about the government's suit against the association.

Th mpson said the West Coast Lumber Association had been approached by the Southern Pine Association to arrange for cooperation for price increases but had "revolted."

The investigation of the Southern Pine Association, Thompson said, showed "price fixing" by the various groups of the association and "co-operative methods to curtail production."

"I think 'co-operative' is the wrong word," said chairman Brookhart.

Supreme Court Needs Reforming.

"The Supreme Court has adopted that word," said Thompson.

ARIZONA FUMIGATING — ALL TOURISTS FROM SYNDICALISM STATE

PHOENIX, Ariz., April 23.—Wires into Phoenix are hot with indignant protests from California chambers of commerce against the fumigation policy which Arizona is adopting against the hoof and mouth disease.

An I. W. W. delegate here said he was amazed that Arizona had not protected itself against the California peril from the first day of the plague. His organization has been active during the last year in furthering a boycott against California for its persecution of union men under the criminal syndicalism law—100 men now lying in San Quentin and Folsom penitentiaries.

INJUNCTION AXE NOT USED AGAINST 28

Federation Is Raising Funds For Strike.

The injunction axe lay idle on Judge "Dennie" Sullivan's desk yesterday as 28 girl garment strikers appeared before him on his return from his "vacation." All the cases were postponed until May 6. Sullivan is following Judge Foell's line and is deferring judgment against the spunky girls whose strike is standing staunch against injunction judges.

Sullivan appeared in court with ruddy face but far from cheerful humor. He avoided even glancing at the strikers who filled the court and seemed even more bored than usual with the dull proceedings of the cases which preceded the garment workers. The sluggers and dicks dozed off while waiting for the trials to bring out their testimony.

LeBoskey Keeps Away.

Attorney LeBoskey, representing the bosses, failed to appear in court but sent his assistant Dumas. The junior Sissman took charge of the girls' cases in this session.

Indications that the Dress Manufacturers' Association is weakening are evident in their inattentiveness to the court proceedings. It is rumored that the expense of the strike is seriously affecting them and that their hitherto solid opposition to the union is breaking.

Dyers Give $1000 to Strike.

The Cleaners and Dyers Union of Chicago has contributed $1000 to the garment strike in response to the appeal by the Federation's Committe of Fifteen.

Beginning Monday evening, five special committees, under the direction of Anton Johannsen acting for the Committee of Fifteen, will visit every union meeting in the city in an effort to get the maximum aid for the International Ladies Garment Workers in their fight against Chicago clothing bosses.

Vice-president Meyer Perlstein says that the $100,000 bail-bond fund has already been used up and that he is telegraphing New York for further securities. Between $60,000 and $70,000 in fines have been levied by Judge Sullivan. Payment of these fines has been put off while appeals are pending.

CALL POLICE FOR STRIKERS PAY DAY LINE

Forced To Wait Long For Their Money.

The strike of the car workers against the Pullman Company is spreading.

It is expected that a general walkout of all the shopmen and yardmen, which will completely tie up the car works of the Pullman shops, will be launched before the day is over.

Sympathy for the striking riveters, reamers, fitters, buckers and heaters is spreading rapidly to the 15,000 employes of the Pullman Company.

Many shopmen in other departments did not return to work yesterday morning and augmented the ranks of the strikers.

The strike committee told C. D. McLaren and A. B. Gunn, production manager that they would not compromise, and refused to accept a cut in wages. McLaren theatened to drop the names of the strikers off the payroll, but his bluff did not scare the strikers yesterday.

When the five hundered strikers called for their pay yesterday morning at 7:30 o'clock they were told by the paymaster to come back for their money in the afternoon.

The men called for their pay at one o'clock and after a wait of two hours received their back pay. Two policemen, officers no. 5266 and 3289, were on guard at the gates to the employment office where the strikers were paid. They shoved the men around on the sidewalk a good deal, but the strikers were not all cowed.

Pull Regular Pullman Stuff

McLaren refused to give the strikers back the money they deposited on tools they were using up to the time of the strike. The strikers were refused admittance to their lockers inside the yards, in which they have their personal possessions.

As the men lined up for their pay several foremen and hirelings of the Pullman Company circulated among the men pleading with them to return to work until the differences are settled.

One foreman was heard to remark, "You fellows certainly have started something. All the other departments have caught the fever and are talking strike."

How Speed-up System Works

A member of the strike committee told the DAILY WORKER that the Pullman Company used to pay $65 and use a gang of forty men for fitting up the side of a car. Now they pay only $25.30 for fitting up one sde, and use seven men.

"They accomplished this by using the 'speed-up' piece work system," the striker said. "The Pullman employes have been the sickest lot of workers employed in the steel shops. All the life is driven out of them When the Pullman employes go to another shop they have to work alone They are the fastest piece workers in the steel shops. This is because the Pullman Company continually tries to speed up the workers, and when they get so they are earning a fair living along comes a drastic reduction, as in this case.

"The men have come to the end of their rope, and they are going to fight the speed-up system to a finish."

This striker told the DAILY WORKER that riveters receive only $7 for riveting the side of a car. By working twelve, fourteen or sixteen hours a day the riveter can complete a side in one day. For the hardest kind of work, before this drastic cut, the riveter managed to earn only $7 a day.

KANSAS TRIES TO OUST KU KLUX KLAN FROM STATE AS ILLEGAL

TOPEKA, Kans., April 23.—The Ku Klux Klan is doing business illegally in Kansas, according to a report submitted to the Supreme Court by S. M. Brewster, referee appointed to hear evidence in the attempt to oust the Klan from the state. Brewster said the organization could not transact business in the state without being licensed as a foreign corporation.

The commissioner overruled the charge that the Klan was guilty of intimidation saying that point had not been proven.

Coolidge Confesses Self Vassal of Wall Street

No words could speak louder the vassalage of President "Cautious Cal" Coolidge to Wall Street than the words he, himself, uttered, in his prepared speech to the kept scribes of American journalism, at the Associated Press luncheon in New York City, Tuesday.

The significance of Coolidge's confession of faith in the banking house of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. will grow as time wears on. It will be well to remember Coolidge's words when the imperialistic plot to "pull the revolutionary tooth of Europe", in the words of Leon Trotsky, meaning Soviet Russia, develops.

Morgan's dollars will not bring peace, as Coolidge promises, but more wars to chaotic Europe. It is only in this light that Coolidge's words can be read lightly. They were as follows:

The Puppet of Wall St. Said:

The finding of the experts, which is known as the Dawes report, has recently been made and published.

It is gratifying to understand that the allies are looking upon it with full sympathy, and Germany has expressed a willingness to co-operate in the execution of the plan.

There appears to be every reason to hope that the report offers a basis for a practical solution of the reparations problem.

Part of the plan contemplates that a considerable loan should at once be made to Germany for immediate pressing needs, including the financing of a bank. I trust that private American capital will be willing to participate in advancing this loan.

Sound business reasons exist why we should participate in the financing of works of peace in Europe, tho we have repeatedly asserted that we were not in favor of advancing funds for any military purpose. It would benefit our trade and commerce, and we especially hope that it will provide a larger market for our agricultural production.

2,000 GERMAN BOSSES CHEER ATTACK ON MARX

Great Anti-Labor Meet Held In Berlin

BY LOUIS P. LOCHNER

(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

BERLIN, April 23.—Berlin has just been the scene of the most impressive gathering of big industrialists ever held in Germany. Presided over by Krupp's former general manager, Kurt von Sorge, 2000 members and delegates of the League of German Industrials and of the German Employers' federation held a joint meeting to tell labor where to go off.

The hero of the day was Albert Voegler, one of the largest heavy-industry men in Germany. This typical big boss asserted amid wild applause that Germany's salvation lies chiefly in the defeat of Marxism, and that all the faults after the revolution are explained when one remembers that socialist influences were at work in the government. He promised the government that big business would support it provided it broke with all socialist theories. He claimed credit for the big industrials for having patriotically prevented socialization of industry, and pleaded for intensification of production which means abrogation of the eight-hour day.

Warned About Intellectuals

There was a note of concern thruout his speech and that of several others. The industrialists fear that the intellectuals are becoming radicalized and that the middle classes are becoming proletarianized. The speakers pointed out the danger to German industry, and pleaded that more be done to tie up the intellectuals and the middle classes with the capitalists. The presiding officer went to great pains to show that the industrialists had helped the intellectuals.

Another grave concern of the big bosses is emigration of highly skilled workers. German skilled labor is leaving the country in droves to do better elsewhere.

The work in the Pullman cars out in the 111th Street end of the shops has been standing since Monday. Ordinarily at least one car a day is fitted up and moved away. No work has been done on them this week. A foreman told one striker that the few scabs the company was able to hire drove 1169 rivets up until yesterday, and only four of them were passed by the inspector. The rest will have to be reamed out again.

Strikers told the DAILY WORKER that one of the worst features of the shops is that all the assembling and riveting together of the cars is carried on out in the open.

"It would't cost much to build sheds over the uncompleted cars," one striker declared to the DAILY WORKER. "But when we complained to the Pullman officials they told us if we didn't like to work in the open air we could quit and go home. Many deaths from flu and pneumonia have resulted from these conditions. In order to earn enough to support our fomilies we have to work sometimes in the snow, in the freezing cold and rain.

The Pullman Company, besides disregarding the health of their slaves, and trying to reduce their wages and speed up production, are also trying to squeeze money out of the men by charging high rents from the company houses. The Pullman Company owns a large proportion of the houses of the south end of the town. Several thousand employes, because of the shortage of houses available near their shops, are forced to live in houses owned by the Pullman Company. The Pullman company has had the gall to send out notices this month, the very time they are trying to put over a decrease in wages, to send notices to all their tenants of a large raise in rents. Three room flats occupied by the employes have been raised six, seven and eleven dollars above their former rental.

Large Families Hard Hit.

Large families have been hardest hit by the increase of the rents for company houses. Five and six-room houses under the increase announced to begin May 1, are renting for sixty, seventy-five and eighty five dollars per month.

Laborers in the Pullman shops are growing restive after observing the solidarity of the Pullman strikers. One laborer who quit his job yesterday told the DAILY WORKER that laborers are paid only 22 dollars per week, and he pays forty dollars a month rent for a Pullman Company house. "How can I live under those conditions," this man said to the DAILY WORKER.

The striking riveters, reamers, fitters, buckers, heaters and outside steel workers were successfully picketing yesterday. The entire Pullman plant has felt the result of the walk-out to a remarkable degree.

Scabs Incompetent.

Painters, switchmen, shop mechanics and others were idling around the plant yesterday in an attempt to look busy. No cars have been riveted together or fitted up this week, and production is at a standstill.

What few scabs reported to work yesterday were found to be so incompetent that they were not allowed to work by the foremen. Observing the splendid results of the strike, hundreds of men in other departments are declaring their intention of walking out before the week is up.

An enthusiastic strike meeting was held yesterday morning at 158 East 107th street. Members of the strike committee declared the slogan of the strike is "No compromise," They were wildly cheered and instructed to tell McLaren, Gunn and the other Pullman officials that no settlement will be made until the reduction in wages is wiped out.

The strike at Hegewisch is making as good progress as the walkout in Pullman.

Let THE DAILY WORKER Give Power to Your May Day Meeting

THE end of this week will bring an achievement in the history of working class journalism and in the history of the DAILY WORKER in particular. Next Saturday's issue will be THE MAY DAY number and it will be all that is expected and more. Thousands of militant workers—from every part of the country are participating in making the May Day Special of the DAILY WORKER the greatest thing of its kind ever printed in America. Because of the DAILY WORKER, May Day this year will take on new significance and new importance.

REPUBLICANS JUSTIFY THE OILY LEASES

G. O. P. Defends The Teapot Steal.

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Republican members of the senate oil committee today began defense of the Sinclair and Doheny lease before the committee.

With James O. Lewis, Tulsa, Okla., petroleum engineer, on the stand, Senator Spencer, Missouri, attempted to show that without leasing, Teapot Dome would have been drained of oil by the adjoining Salt Creek wells.

An "Expert" Testifies.

Lewis, Tulsa oil expert, who made a study of the Teapot Dome for the committee last fall, declared that sixty or seventy per cent of the Teapot Dome area was in danger of being drained by the Salt Creek well and the oil supply seriously impaired.

The value of Teapot Dome as a naval oil reserve has been found on drilling to be much less than originally expected by the bureau of mines, Lewis said.

Oil engineers originally estimated it contained approximately 135,000,000 barrels of oil, now it appears there is only something over 12,000,000 barrels.

Lewis explained that 1,300 or 1,400 acres under which oil was expected to be found, gas was discovered.

"In view of the information we have now I beleive leasing of the Teapot Dome reserve was a wise and desirable thing," Lewis said.

A letter to the committee from William Wallace, Jr., today made further explanation of the Sinclair oil stock transactions of Wm. Boyce Thompson, former finance committee chairman of the republican national committee.

Thompson bought no stock while Sinclair leases were under consideration at the department of the interior, Wallace, Thompson's counsel wrote.

Former Secretary of the Navy Daniels granted only two leases of the naval oil reserves which were not absolutely mandatory under the existing laws, Commander H. A. Stuart, in charge of the reserves under Daniels, declared in a letter read to the senate oil committee today by Senator Walsh, Montana.

These two leases were made by Daniels only upon recommendations of his expert advisers to protect the government's interests against established drainage and water infiltration in the reserves, Stuart said.

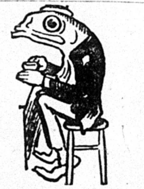
Boston Pacific Gets Lease.

One lease was made to the Boston Pacific Company, who obtained permission to drill five wells, in reserve No. 2, and the other was given the Consolidated Mutual Company, on 120 acres of land, also in reserve No. 2, Stuart wrote.

"There is no doubt whatever in either of these cases that delay in drilling would have resulted in continual loss by drainage of water infiltration," Stuart said.

Flap Only Forty Years

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 23.—The Flapper's span of life is forty years, Dr. Charlotte De Goliere Davenport, former professor of medicine at the university of Vienna announced.



The Poor Fish says that the Dawes scheme for saving Germany may not provide very high wages for the German workers, but that they will surely be given lots of work.

BIG PINE TRUST, LABOR'S ENEMY, IS NOW ON GRILL

"Well, the Supreme Court needs reforming," replied Brookhart. "I hope we will get somebody on the court who knows what a 'co-perative' really is."

Thompson said the case came up when Harry M. Daugherty became Attorney General.

The Southern Pine Association, Thompson said, "worked up" an own-your-own-home propaganda and then "jumped" the price of lumber to the consumer.

In the spring of 1921, Thompson said that two attorneys from Columbus, Ohio, conferred with Daugherty about the government suit against the Association.

Friendly With Daugherty.

"They seemed to be on friendly terms with the Attorney General and since that nothing has been done in the case," said Thompson.

"I have heard that but I could not say positively," said Thompson.

Thompson said altho evidence of violation of criminal laws by the West Coast Association was presented to the department of justice that he knew of, no action being brought.

the West Virginia and Kentucky coal mine fields. Undoubtedly he will have much of interest to tell the garment workers about the vicious injunctions used against mine workers and their means of defiance.

Subway Workers' Company Union To Cut Their Wages

By LUDWELL DENNY,

(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

NEW YORK, April 23.—If you were working 84 hours a week for $34.44, and the boss threatened a further 5 per cent cut, what would your union do? Yes, you would strike. But unfortunately the subway station agents, Interborough Rapid Transit Company, New York, who are in that fix, cannot strike. They belong to a company union. So do the other 15,000 I. R. T. workers, whose wages are to be cut 5 per cent.

Of course the company does not call it an arbitrary cut. President Frank Hedley simply writes a personal letter to the workers, claiming that the stockholders are not making money and therefore he invites "the brotherhood" to come forward and reduce their own wages.

Tho wages are to be cut, salaries—that is, above $3,000 a year—will remain the same. The workers do not get "salaries." Motormen work for 72 cents an hour (a few up to 86 cents), and guards get only 47 cents (some up to 53 cents). Most of them have to work seven days a week, because the wage is so low. Nominally they put in eight and a half or nine hours a day, but so divided that it amounts to a 12-hour day.

The brotherhood or company union announces that it will consider the cut at a May 6 meeting. But, as several of the workers have said to the Federated Press, "We have no union; what can we do but take what is given us?"

THE Pullman Company is trying to compromise with the workers on strike in its steel car plant. That is significant.

This move on the part of the Pullman Company indicates that this $135,000,000 corporation fears the unrest rampant among its tens of thousands of wage workers.

But the workers must be on their guard. The Pullman Company has a treacherous anti-labor record extending over the 57 years of its existence.

The Pullman Company has called violence, in all its forms, to its aid in keeping its workers in submission. Hired gunmen, state militia, federal troops, have been at its command.

It was the Pullman company that first coined the fake charges against striking workers of "inciting to riot", "obstructing the streets", "intimidation", and "trespass".

It possesses all the anti-labor cunning of American capitalism, typified in the anti-union activities of the Chicago merchant prince, Marshall Field, and the railroad strike-breaking record of the Vanderbilts. In fact, it is claimed that Field and Vanderbilt were more potent in the affairs of the Pullman Company than the late George M. Pullman, himself.

The Pullman Company has always been known for its wage cuts. When it slashes it slashes big. In the present struggle the men claim that the wage cuts have been from 15 to 45 per cent.

Back in the panic year of 1893, the Pullman Company, at one blow reduced wages one-fourth, yet, it is shown by Myers, in his "History of Great American Fortunes", that the cost of rent, water, gas—of nearly all other fundamental necessities—remained the same.

These conditions are being duplicated today. When the cost of food shows increases, when the landlords announce rent increases for May 1st, one week away, the Pullman Company again announces huge cuts in wages. And the workers are out on strike again, just as they went out on May 11, 1894.

The arrogant Pullman Company wants to compromise. It wants to settle the present dispute by having the men accept the reduction. Then it urges the stop watch, or Taylor System, of speeding up, claiming that the men, under the lash of speed, will be able to make up the reduction.

That is the compromise of the Pullman Company with its total assets of $184,454,223.44.

That is the offer of the Pullman Company that coined the sweat and blood of its workers into profits totalling $13,887,569.26 for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1923, out of which it declared dividends totalling $11,470,485.48.

These figures were taken from the annual statement of the Pullman Company, July 31, 1923, which also says: "YOUR COMPANY'S FINANCIAL POSITION IS STRONG."

It is only because the Pullman Company feels its financial position is strong that it dares challenge the workers with wage reductions at this time.

The workers can make but one reply at this time. They must call upon all other workers to: "Spread the strike!"

The Pullman Company fears the spreading of the strike to other departments. If it can localize the strike and freeze out those who are now on the battle line, then it can win. It can continue its peonage system. Surrender is not a compromise. That is the only compromise that the Pullman Company offers at this time.

Spread the strike to reach the workers in all the ramifications of the far-reaching Pullman Company.

Let the defeats of 1877 and 1894 be obliterated by the victory of 1924.

That will spell progress for all labor.

DAILY WORKER IS READ ON OTHER SIDE OF GLOBE, LETTER FROM THE KUZNETZ BASIN, SIBERIA, SHOWS

Another testimonial that the DAILY WORKER is enlightening the cause of the workers thruout the entire world has reached our office. Last week we received word that the DAILY WORKER is being quoted by Japanese labor newspapers in Canada.

Now comes a letter from far off Tomsk, Siberia, half way around the globe, telling us that the DAILY WORKER is the best paper ever published.

The letter, from Kemerovo, Kuznetz Basin, Siberia, says: "My dear comrades of the DAILY WORKER: Just a few lines to let you know that we are receiving the DAILY WORKER. I could scarcely believe, after the short space of two years since I left America, that the workers there would make such wonderful strides as to publish and maintain an international paper such as the DAILY WORKER. I assure you there never was a paper published anywhere that has a staff of writers that could compare with the DAILY WORKER. We are all mighty proud of all of you.

"Comrades, we are living in a wonderful age. Things are moving fast. The knowledge I have gained here in the last two years has taught me that the proper system of society has been born here. When I came here the Russian people were just recovering from the terrible burdens of war, revolution, counter-revolution, blockades and, worst of all, the terrible famine. They were wrecked physically and all faced starvation. They scarcely had any clothes, and their homes were destroyed in many cases. They were at the lowest possible ebb.

"Yours for the United States of Soviets.—Andrew J. Woomer."

The Workers Party in Action

Membership Meeting O. K.'s Policies of Executive Committee

The meeting of the Chicago membership, held in Imperial Hall last night, heard Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, reporting for the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party of America, explain in an interesting and able manner the position of the Party in the June 17 maneuver, its position on the third party, the class farmer-labor party, its attitude toward LaFollette and many other questions which confront the party at present.

Following the report of Comrade Ruthenberg, many questions were asked and answered, after which the meeting was opened for discussion. Two resolutions were presented. One by the City Central Committee indorsing the position of the Central Executive Committee and one by Comrade Minor making certain criticisms and demanding more drastic action against any and all opportunistic tendencies.

Resolution.

1. The Chicago Party Membership meeting indorses the policies of the Central Executive Committee, both in their theoretical statement and in their concrete application.

2. The membership meeting declares that the Central Executive Committee has shown itself to be alert to all manifestations of incorrect applications of the policies of the Party and that it has promptly acted to correct them in a proper Communist manner and spirit.

3. The membership meeting expresses full and complete confidence in the Central Executive Committee, and pledges the Central Executive Committee its whole-hearted support in its great task of leading the party thru the greatest campaign in its history.

Introduced by City Executive Committee, Martin Abern, Secretary.

Youth Discusses Role in St. Paul Meeting, June 17th

The young workers of America are confronted with many problems which call for political action. There are millions of child workers, while the child labor law has been declared unconstitutional. The imperialistic adventurers of our reactionary government are yearly drawing more young workers into the army and the military training camps. A clear analysis of what the youth can expect from the Farmer-Labor Party will be given by John Edwards, member of the National Executive Committee of the Young Workers League of America, at the regular weekly meeting of the Maplewood Branch, Thursday, April 24, at Workers Lyceum, 2733 Hirsch boulevard, second floor rear, at 8:15 p. m.

Considering the importance of the subject, many workers, young and old, are expected to attend. No admission will be charged.

WITH THE YOUNG WORKERS

CONDUCTED - BY THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE

The Young Workers In China

By JOHN HARVEY.

With the help of American, Japanese and British imperialists the industrial revolution in China is progressing at a great speed. Proud of their industrial systems at home, the big imperialists are making no effort to avoid those costly mistakes so characteristic of the development of industrialism in the Western countries. And as capitalism develops in China there grows up along with it all those evils that confront the young workers thruout the capitalist world; thus proving to all that these conditions are part and parcel of any capitalist system.

Child Labor.

The number of children working in the mills and factories of China is reaching a proportion which greatly exceeds that of all Western nations, while the extreme youth of these child workers is becoming ever more marked. When the small farmers and craftsmen are driven into the factories practically their whole family goes to work with them. The children of these families run about uncared for until they are six or seven years old and fortunate enough to be able to go to work in the factory themselves.

Cotton and silk manufacture is the main industry in China, and the giant machines of the cotton and silk mills can be heard working noisily twenty-four hours of the day. Some mills have two shifts from six to six; others from four to four. At four o'clock in the morning it is as noisy as four in the afternoon and tired children can be seen streaming out of the factories with the older workers, while sleepy children pass them going in.

Living Conditions.

The living conditions of the working class families are always of the greatest concern to the young worker. He must add his youth's wages to the insufficient earnings of the family and during his growing period he must suffer more than the others from lack of food and insanitary housing. To the Chinese young workers the problem of living conditions is extreme.

In China the factories and mills are usually erected along the bank of a canal and many of the workers' families live in stationary boats in the side canals. Others live in thatched mud huts which form a village near the factory walls. These boats and huts have but one room with only the door for both the entrance of light and the exit of smoke and odors. It is the coolies, the lowest paid Chinese workers, who live with their families in these boats and huts. With them live a wife, a mother, a child or two, possibly an old father and a boarder. If the coolies work seven days a week (twelve hours a day) they can earn from $6 to $9 a month. Since there is a tradition in China that a man must divide with all those of his own blood who have no money, if a coolie should become more skilled at his factory work and advance to $12 or $14 a month, such a flock of relatives comes that he seldom dares move to better living quarters.

Terrible Housing Conditions.

Many of the workers live in factory tenements more and more of which are being built to accommodate the ever-increasing number of industrial workers. These tenements are built with only one long room on each floor. This room is divided on the right into open stalls just long enough to contain a bed and a foot or two wider. Three or four families live in one of these rooms, one group rolling out of bed just in time to allow those from the night shift to roll in.

Young workers who are orphans or whose families are still in the country, live under special conditions. If they are poor coolies earning from $6 to $10 a month they live in a "dormitory." These dormitories are large empty rooms in which a dozen or more men are allowed to sleep seven hours a day. They sleep on straw mats or rags and cannot go to bed until a certain time and must rise at another so as to allow three shifts to use the room each day. It is said that one dormitory in Shanghai, is equipped with a large quilt as big as the room. This quilt can be raised and lowered by a rope and has head-sized holes cut in it at regular intervals. The men come in, lie down on their straw mats, the proprietor lowers the quilt, each young worker puts his head out thru a hole, says his prayers and settles down for the night.

As the young workers in China find themselves confronted with the same conditions of oppression as the young workers of the more developed capitalist countries, so does the similarity of their struggle and their enemy bind them closer and closer to the young workers of all countries thruout the world. Since American Imperialists, unsatisfied with the exploitation of the young workers in America are active extending their exploitation to China, the young workers in America and China have a common interest in seeking to abolish their common exploiters.

MORE KENTUCKY MILITIA CALLED TO AID GUNMEN

Black Mountain Co. To Bring In Scabs

By TOM TIPPETT.

(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

HARLAN, Ky., April 23.—Striking members of the United Mine Workers of America here are much concerned over the mobilization of the Harlan company of the national guard. This action followed a visit to the Black Mountain Coal company's mines in Harlan county April 13 of Assistant General Clark.

Five hundred men are on strike at Black Mountain. The coal company is one of the largest in Harlan county. This company, whose mines have been closed since April 1, is preparing to operate with strikebreakers, the strikers say, and the soldiers will be ready to protect the operators guards who prevent the strikers from picketing the struck mines.

How Militia Protect Gunmen.

This is exactly what happened at Pineville in Bell county where, in the beginning, there were three companies of the militia and a tank corps sent in to protect the private gunmen after they had shot up a miners' camp on Straight Creek. All of the mines in this section of the state are in District 19, U. M. W. A.

Henry Ford is opening mines in Harlan county. Ford doesn't employ guards to keep his men in subjection. He does it in another way. As a substitute for the union's wage scale and working conditions—the latter being of much more importance to Ford than wages—his miners are given reading rooms and sewers. Ford's publicity agents says Ford will teach these backwoodsmen "hygienic living, better home life, and character building."

Union's Comment On Ford

I asked the miners' officials about Ford's plan. They said the union had been fighting for the miners' interests here for 34 years and when the armed mine guard system is abolished—if it ever is—the unionization of the entire state will automatically follow. They point out that in Illinois or any other well organized state the organized miners have homes of their own connected to sewers and they "read what they want to, and they have learned also how to brush their teeth without the assistance of Henry Ford."

Philly Lithuanians Jack Up Gompers On Foreign-Born Bills

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 23.—A conference of Lithuanian organizations of this city will be held April 27, 2 p. m., at the Lithuanian Hall, 928 East Moyemensing avenue, for the purpose of waging an organized protest against the restrictive laws against the foreign born workers of this country. A similar conference is called by various Philadelphia Jewish organizations.

The two conferences, as well as the recently organized Lettish Conference, organized some time ago, are connected with the general organization of the Philadelphia Council for the Protection of the Foreign Born Workers.

The council at its last meeting passed a resolution calling upon President Coolidge to veto the anti-foreign born bills recently passed by the House and Senate. The resolution also calls upon Samuel Gompers, urging him to use his power as president of the A. F. of L. to compel President Coolidge to veto those bills.

Labor Amnesty Big Issue In Election Campaign In France

(By The Federated Press)

PARIS, April 23.—Prosecution of profiteers and government ownership of oil refineries are among the planks put forward by French labor in the general election campaign that will end May 11, one week after the general election in Germany. The labor program will also be pushed after the new Chamber of Deputies has been chosen.

The General Confederation of Labor of France in its pre-election manifesto specifically demands amnesty for all political and working class prisoners, reinstatement of discharged strikers, and recognition of the right of organization for all workers.

The manifesto calls for prosecution of profiteers in food and other necessaries, abolition of food taxes, a capital levy, government ownership of oil and sugar refineries, and a workers' and producers and consumers' council, to be consulted by the government.

BY LELAND OLDS

(Federated Press Industrial Editor)

Building trades wages are today approximately 100 per cent above the pre-war level, according to a report made public by the National Industrial Conference board, an employers' organization. The boards figures give the lie to propaganda which would make builders' wages chiefly responsible for the increased cost of building. They show that during the last decade the prices of building materials increased far more rapidly than building wages and that today building wages going up are just on a par with material prices going down.

Prices of building materials, the report points out, until recently more than kept pace with the rise in wages. From 1915 to 1920 the prices of materials increased more than twice as much as wages. In fact by 1919 building materials were already costing a full 114 per cent more than in 1915 while building trades wages had increased only 40 per cent during the same period.

Wage Table In 20 Cities

	Bricklayers	Carpenters	Common labor
Atlanta	$1.12½	$0.70	0.25-.30
Baltimore	1.50	.90.1.00	.40
Birmingham	1.00	1.00	.30-.40
Boston	1.25	1.00-1.10	.60-.75
Cincinnati	1.50	1.15	.52½
Chicago	1.25	1.15	.82½
Cleveland	1.50	1.25	.87½
Dallas	1.50	1.00	.30-.50
Denver	1.62½	1.12½	.35-.55
Detroit	1.12½	.80	.50
Kansas City	1.37½	1.12½	.40-.70
Los Angeles	1.25	1.00	.50
Minneapolis	1.50	.87½	.50-.55
New Orleans	1.25	.80	.35-.40
New York	1.50	1.31¼	.62½-.75
Philadelphia	1.50	1.12½	.45-.50
Pittsburgh	1.40	1.20	.70
St. Louis	1.75	1.50-1.60	45-1.10
S. Francisco	1.25	1.00	.50-.55
Seattle	1.25	1.00	.62½

"The trend of building trades wages in upward in most of the large industrial centres," says the record. "In Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Pittsburgh, Kansas City and New Orleans wage increases have been granted or are now under serious consideration."

The general situation is summarized in a national survey of conditions in the building trades issued by S. W. Straus & Co., leading real estate money lenders. The survey says:

"Current building trades wage per hour show that building labor is getting peak wages, as follows: Bricklayers $1.12½ to $1.75, carpenters 70 cents to $1.60, hoisting engineers 50 cents to $1.67½, hod carriers 50 cents to $1.25, pile drivers 50 cents to $1.12½, structural iron workers 60 cents to $1.50, common labor 25 cents to 37½ cents.

St. Louis Wages Highest

"Present wage scales in St. Louis carry the highest rates in the country. In that city wage advances ranging from 10 cents to 25 cents an hour have been granted carpenters, hod carriers, hoisting engineers and common labor.

"In New York negotiations have been completed which may insure peace between workmen and employers for the next two years. Practically every important union has demanded and obtained a two-year contract which calls in a majority of cases for an increase of 50 cents a day in the basic scales. The average base pay in New York is now $10.50 a day. Bricklayers are receiving one dollar and two dollar bonuses above the agreed rate of $12 a day on many jobs and a similar bonus is being paid to plasterers on many jobs."

Constructions Lessens a Little

Employment in the industry appears to be satisfactory altho outside of New York the trend of construction is moderately downward. The total volume of large engineering projects awarded during March, as published in the Engineering News Record, was 11 per cent below March, 1923, in value and 14 percent below in physical volume.

Machine Loading Mine Taking Jobs Of Workers Away

WEST FRANKFORT, Ill., April 23.—A new mine that is one of the largest coal mines in the world is beginning operations here. It is equipped with loading machines controlled by two men and the output of these machines is 70 to 100 tons per 8-hour day. The mine runs three shifts in the 24 hours.

This new mine is the only one working on a full-time basis here. All the others have shut down or are open only one or two days a week. The coal miners are driven despairingly between the shut mines and the mechanized mine where machines replace men. They are wondering what their union president, John L. Lewis, is doing for them in his proposed "stabilizing" of the coal mining industry.

DRIVE SCABS OFF NORSE WHARVES: FINE SOLIDARITY

Strikes In Many Trades; Danes And Swedes Aid

KRISTIANIA, April 23. — Wage-agreements in a number of the most important industries expired this month. The employers refuse to take up negotiations for new agreements until the "illegally" striking ironworkers have gone back to work. They also demand additional new guarantees for the fulfillment of the agreements.

The "illegal" ironworkers' strike has now lasted 23 weeks, the one of the longshoremen 11 weeks and the general lockout with its sympathetic strikes, 6 weeks. The strikers are showing splendid spirit and solidarity and are getting aggressive.

Drive Scabs Off Docks.

In Trondhjem all wharves except those inside the enclosures were cleared of strikebreakers yesterday. The strikers went from ship to ship and forced the strikebreakers to quit their infamous work. One got so scared he jumped into the sea, but managed to get ashore. The only shot fired was by the strikebreaker boss; it struck his own foot. He was taken to a safe place. The others were taken to Federation of Labor headquarters, where they promised not to do any strikebreaker work in the future and to advise those inside the enclosure to quit April 5th.

The enclosed territory was entered today and also cleared of strikebreakers. Some of them escaped on ships in the harbor; some trying to escape by climbing ropes to the ships were shaken down into the river. The wharves of some smaller harbors have also been cleared.

Solidarity of All Workers.

Labor unions in Sweden and Denmark are coming to the strikers' aid. A conference of representatives of the building and wood working organizations in Sweden, Denmark and Norway was held in Copenhagen, March 30th. Eighty thousand workers were represented. The Danish and Swedish organizations assessed themselves weekly contributions to the Norwegians.

A conference of representatives of the federations of labor of the three countries was held in Copenhagen, April 4th. It was agreed that organized workers in Sweden and Denmark shall side with the Norwegian workers in their fight, also that the demand for increased guarantees by the Norwegian employers must be fought by all means at disposal. Conferences of the Scandinavian Laborers' union of the Scandinavian textile workers' union and of representatives of the iron and metal workers' union of the three countries will be held in Copenhagen today.

Unions Help Each Other.

The Norwegian tailors' union has received a donation of 20,000 Kronen from Swedish and Danish brother unions. The "Svenske Arbetares Centralorganization" and the syndicalist federation have sent 15,700 Kronen to the Norwegian striking ironworkers. Kristiania federation of labor appeals for aid to the children of its 16,000 striking or locked out workers.

Organized state functionaries in the railroad, postal, telegraph and custom service to the number of 13,000 have sent a protest to the Storting against any contemplated compulsory arbitration law. "Strike and Lockout" was the subject of debate in the students society last meeting.

Machine Gun Ruler Of Kentucky Wants Teapot Talk Hushed

(By The Federated Press)

CLEVELAND, April 23.—The anti-labor machine-gun governor of Kentucky, Edwin B. Morrow, recently appointed by President Coolidge to the U. S. rail labor board, broke into the political campaign here with a plea to all good Republicans to forget Teapot Dome and give the utmost publicity to the war-graft and corruption of the Wilson administration.

MOUNTED COPS OF CANADA BUSY "RED" HUNTING

Get Labor Views Of All New Arrivals

BY SYDNEY WARREN

(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

VANCOUVER, B. C., April 23.—The Royal Canadian Northwest Mounted police continues its wartime activities as red hunters and agents provocateurs in the labor movement despite the glib assurances from Dominion politicians that the "Mounties" were no longer employed in that capacity since the war hysteria had passed.

In Vancouver all radical, union and Socialist meetings are covered by the "Royal Police," who note the remarks of the speakers and size up those present. If a new face present itself, an investigation of its owner follows and the facts concerning his arrival, nationality, employment and views on unionism and the labor movement generally are secured. These facts are tabulated for "future references."

A clear proof of this system was demonstrated by a newly arrived immigrant who made application for a position as a clerk in the office of the mounted police here. This man had some weeks previously attended a meeting of the Workers party held in a local theater, but at that time was not affiliated with any part of the labor movement here. He was notified to present himself at the office of the mounted police for an interview and, believing to be in response to his application for a clerical position with the force, appeared the next day at the time appointed.

Had Been Shadowing Him

He was interviewed, but not in respect to his qualifications as a clerk but as to what views he held in the labor movement. He was informed of his nationality, occupation, date of arrival in the country, places he had frequented and other minor details concerning himself, all of which, he was informed, were gathered as the result of his being observed at a radical meeting. He was then admonished to forego radical activities.

No mention was made of the job he sought.

Jamestown Labor In Mass Protest At Immigration Bill

By E. PETERSON.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., April 23.—At a rousing mass meeting held here by the Protective Council of Native and Foreign Born Workers of the city of Jamestown the audience unanimously passed the following declaration against the vicious immigration bill going thru Congress and in favor of a class farmer-labor party:

"We, the workers and citizens of Jamestown, N. Y., in mass meeting assembled, do hereby protest against the passing of the aforementioned restrictive and discriminatory legislation and call upon all workers, native and foreign born, to unite in a mass protest and struggle against the passage of these bills thru forming councils for the protection of foreign born workers.

"We call upon all foreign born workers to join the labor unions and urge the trade unions of this country to take up the fight against discrimination of our foreign born brothers. We call upon all labor, organized and unorganized, to unite in the formation of a political party of labor and farmers to capture political power and use the forces of government in the interest of the toilers, who are the overwhelming majority of the people of the United States; and who should create a workers and farmers' government in our country."

May 1, International Labor Day, will see the showing of "Russia and Germany, a Tale of Two Republics," at the Eagles' Temple. Saturday evening, May 3, the regular May Day celebration by the Workers Party will take place, with a speaking, reading, singing and dancing program at Carlson's Hall.

REPUBLICAN PARTY BREAK-UP FORESHADOWED AS NATIONAL ORGAN WARS ON PROGRESSIVES

The coming break-up of the Republican Party is foreshadowed by the denunciation of prominent progressive republicans in the leading article of the latest issue of "The National Republican," the republican party organ. The attack sponsored by John T. Adams, Secretary of War Weeks, and other prominent republicans, has already had a demoralizing effect on the republican party in states like Iowa and Nebraska, where the administration has been making a desperate attempt to hold these states in the republican column.

Senator Norris controls the Republican Party in Nebraska. Senator Brookhart has great prestige in Iowa, and of course, Senators Ladd and Frazier in North Dakota and Senator La Follette in Wisconsin. Senator Norris, who has been frequently mentioned as a possible candidate for Vice President as a sop to the progressives, said, upon hearing of the attack, "I'm proud to be ostracized by that outfit."

The article which, in effect, outlaws these prominent progressives from the regular Republican Party, characterizes them as, "The vitalizing spirits and active leaders of these vari-colored but closely interlocking anti-republican organizations."

The hoary stunt of tieing the Communists up to the liberals and to every conceivable society and publication which is expected to oppose Coolidge is indulged in by the articles, which is entitled, "Pink, Trimmed with Red".

William Z. Foster, Ruthenberg, Dunne, the DAILY WORKER, the Workers Party, of America, are charged with "Trying to overthrow republican government," together with a motley crowd numbering many groups holding conflicting theories and opposing each other's economic interpretations of society.

The reaction to the article, which was written by Albert H. Laidlow, is that the old guard republicans have played bad politics by widening the split which is coming in the Republican Party.

Young Rockefeller Too Sick To Pay But Not To Pray

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, April 23.—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who was so sick that he could not keep his engagement with representatives of 17,000 Standard Oil company-union men seeking a raise, was able the same week to pray and preach to the Young Men's Bible class, Park Avenue Baptist church, New York. When he broke his date with the workers, on the plea of having a cold, a worker remarked: "Not in the head, but the feet."

Could they have listened to his Easter church message perhaps the workers would have decided that his illness is in the head after all. He said, "People are talking too much about their rights and not enough about their duty. Emphasis has been put too much on liberty, not enough on responsibility."

New York also Gets Police Visit.

NEW YORK, April 23.—Local New York has again been favored by a visit from the authorities. This time it was from the Department of Public Welfare. Agents sent to the local office had the books and literature of the local placed at their disposal and according to the report of Secretary Weinstone, left, very pleased with the administration.

Following the visit of the agents the secretary of the local received a call from Deputy Commissioner Dodworth and went to the offices of the Department of Public Welfare accompanied by his attorney. Here they learned this investigation and questioning came as a result of a complaint made by a member of the Painters' Union, A. F. of L. local from which the F. S. R. received a donation of $150. After general questions by the Commissioner, the charges were found groundless and Sec. Weinstone was assured that the complainant would be so advised. Permission to hold a tag day was withheld. DESPITE THESE HINDRANCES, LOCAL NEW YORK HAS ESTABLISHED AND MAINTAINS A SOUP KITCHEN IN BERLIN FEEDING HUNDREDS DAILY.

Immigration Watch Dogs Beg Congress For a Bigger Bone

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, April 23.—Union immigration inspectors in New York and other ports of the country have petitioned congress for a pay increase and better working conditions thru the employment of more men. In 16 years inspectors' wages have been raised only $108, from an average of $1,839 to $1,947 a year. During the same period the personnel have been increased by only 414 workers. Now a reduction of employes from 1,740 to 1,687, and of appropriation from $3,300,000 to $3,221,000 has been recommended to congress by the U. S. bureau of the budget.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 23.—The attack of the government in the trial of Governor McCray, on trial in Federal Court on charges of using the mails in a scheme to defraud, was concentrated today on the character of the paper offered by the governor as collateral for loans or for discount to banks.

The prosecution was laying the foundation to introduce evidence intended to show that many of the notes did not represent legitimate business transactions and that in many cases they were forgeries. More than 100 bankers were sworn in as witnesses for the government as court opened today.

In rapid succession, District Attorney Elliott called the banker witnesses to the stand and quizzed them briefly on their loans to McCray and his efforts to get them to discount "cattle paper" for him.

Third Degreeing Of Prisoners Criminal, This Judge Admits

(By The Federated Press.)

ST. LOUIS, April 23.—Police brutality toward suspects as a means of exacting confessions to crime was rebuked by Circuit Judge Hamilton in his instructions to the grand jury. The jurors were told:

"Those who are sworn to detect and suppress crime must not employ illegal means in the performance of their duty, and if it should come to the attention of the grand jury that any persons connected with the police department resort to illegal violence, they should be dealt with the same as any other person who violates the law."

"You have no right, and I am sure you have no disposition, to question or assail the great foundation principles upon which the structure of our state has been erected, and in this day, when the theories of bolshevism are publicly proclaimed, and a small but active minority of our people are turning itching ears to radical, foreign and unwholesome doctrines of government. I trust and expect that all of your official acts and utterances will be characterized by a true, loyal, stalwart, and positive Americanism, and be a perfect reflection of the truth."

One Dying, Six Hurt, When Fire Patrol Hits A Mail Truck

Nanto Bartholomew, 32, mail truck driver, is dying and six firemen of an insurance patrol are suffering from injuries sustained when a mail truck and fire patrol crashed at a street intersection. Bartholomew's skull was fractured.

Both cars were traveling at a high rate of speed, witnesses say. The crash threw the fire patrol thru a wooden signboard on the curbing.

Three other city firemen were injured, one seriously, Tuesday, when a porch railing on a blazing apartment gave way.

Bank $2,000,000 Short; Jury Finds President Guilty

WICHITA, Kans., April 23.—J. H. Richardson, president of the defunct American State Bank, which closed its doors June 18, 1923, with a shortage of $2,000,000, was found guilty of accepting deposits when he knew his bank to be insolvent, by a jury today, Richardson's bond of $50,000 will stand until Judge Wall hears the motion of Richardson's attorneys for a new trial.

Governor Pawned State Funds For Loans, Is Testimony

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 23.—Governor Warren T. McCray bartered deposits of state funds to Indiana banks in exchange for loans, according to government witnesses who testified today in the federal court trial of McCray on charges of using the mails to defraud.

C. H. Ayer, cashier of the North Side Bank of Evansville, testified his bank loaned McCray $10,000 on a personal note in May, 1923, in return for a state deposit of $10,000 and a promise of $10,000 more, which did not materialize.

Charles W. Coen, vice president of the Merchants National Bank of South Bend, testified his bank loaned McCray $10,000 on a personal note, secured by cattle paper.

TOBACCO TRUST CRIMES HIDDEN BY DAUGHERTY

Harry Allowed Trust To Rob Farmers

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, April 23.—With a brief glimpse of the tobacco trust case, involving the robbing of tens of thousands of farmers by the manufacturers' concertedly "staying out of the market," Chairman Huston Thompson of the Federal Trade Commission has begun the disclosure of former Attorney General Daugherty's failure to prosecute criminal cases turned over to his department by the commission in the past three years.

This testimony is the most important, from the viewpoint of industrial economics of any which the Brookhart-Wheeler committee has had to consider.

Government Had the Evidence.

Thompson said that in the tobacco and other important cases, where criminal prosecutions were asked by the commission, no replies were made by Daugherty for long periods of time. He instanced the tobacco trust affair. The commission investigated this at the request of the House in 1920, reporting to Daugherty in August, 1921, the need for immediate criminal action by the Department of Justice. Then the Senate asked for a further investigation, and the Commission again reported, sending letters to Daugherty in February and in April, 1922. Ten months elapsed, and finally, when Rep. Keller had offered an impeachment resolution, including the charge that Daugherty had failed to take up this tobacco case, the Commission received an answer from the attorney general.

Daugherty Passed Buck.

In that letter to the Commission, Daugherty asked the Commission to take the whole responsibility of prosecuting the tobacco crowd, when he knew that only the department of justice had power to effectively deal with the crooks. In the conference held by his office with the Federal Trade Commission to discuss the issue, one of his two spokesmen was the same L'Esperance, assistant attorney general, located in New York, who was accused by an earlier witness of having taken a share in the whisky-permit graft of $15 per case handled by one Gorini.

BORAH SEEKS BOTTOM OF FRAME-UP PLOT AGAINST WHEELER

WASHINGTON, Apr. 23.—Aroused by a confidential report tending to bear out Senator Wheeler's charge that his indictment was secured by a "frame-up," chairman Borah of the Senate investigating committee today determined to go to the bottom of the alleged plot.

The new charges were contained in a letter from F. C. Ford, former attorney-general of Montana, to former representative Tom Stout of Montana. The letter, outlining the alleged plot and naming the persons involved, was placed in Borah's hands by Wheeler's friends.

Borah immediately dispatched a new batch of subpoenaes. Among those summoned are Dr. O. M. Lanstrom, republican national committeeman from Montana and Charles Reinfenrath, managing editor of the Helena Record.

At least three members of the grand jury which returned the indictment also will be called, it is understood.

Phillips Price Tells How Socialist Party Betrayed Germany

Right in line with what Alexander Trachtenberg has been telling workers' audiences thruout this country is the material offered by M. Phillips Price in his recent book, "Germany in Transition." The book shows how between the betrayal by the Social Democratic Party and the German Capitalists the workers of Germany have been ground all along and more than ever since the revolution of November, 1918. As far as the worker is concerned, the present regime, dominated by industrial and imperialist capitalism is no better than was the monarchical regime. According to Price, there was nobody except the workers to take over the government after the debacle of the imperial regime. But instead of a victory for the workers we witnessed the Social Democrats compromising one point after another with the capitalist class.

As for the role of the industrial barons of Germany, Price shows how the industrialists were calmly making business deals with the French and English and other capitalists, and did not hesitate to speculate with the lives of German workers thru deliberate currency inflation at the same time that the workers were bearing the brunt of the Ruhr fight. Price's book can lead us to only one conclusion, that if the workers of the world do not come to the aid of the German workers, they will indeed be crushed between the upper and nether millstones.

By WILFRED CANAN
(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

CROSBY, Minn., April 23.—A little brass check with the number 30 on it is what identified the remains of Valentine Cole, whose decomposed body was taken out of the death-trap Milford mine six weeks after the terrific February disaster. Forty-one iron miners of the Whitemarsh Mining Co., a steel trust subsidiary, were drowned when the bottom fell out of a pond that had been permitted to remain undrained over the mine workings.

The company had refused to heed the warnings of the fatal break and the safety precautions had been so disregarded that escape was impossible for the men caught in the flood of slime and water.

Bodies Still In Mine Grave.

Cole's body was found under a mass of fallen timber near the mouth of the 135-foot-level. Soon after, the body of another miner named Graves was found and identified by his son. Other bodies remain to be found. Thirty-nine widows and nearly 100 fatherless children are the net result of the steel trust's saving on safety.

The coroner decided that no inquest was necessary. The mine is guarded by the company and no visitors are allowed to pass the gate. Photographers are also barred. Even the temporary morgue is not to be photographed. An investigation is supposed to be under way but this is muffled in secrecy.

Murderous Death-Trap.

From the collar of the shaft to the innermost workings the mine was a murderous death-trap. There was only one shaft and that shaft was dangerous because the laths were bulging out under the pressure of the wet sand. The laths are two-inch planks placed up and down behind 12x12 timbers which are arranged about three feet apart crosswise. These two-inch planks three feet long bulged out three inches. The ladder-road up the main shaft was loose and flapping and swung out so far when a man was on it that the fellow underneath couldn't get a hold. The steps of the ladders were 11 inches apart and some of them were missing. There was no ladder-road at all from the low level except up thru the pump shaft and that means tram men on the low level had to depend upon the skip or cage. The cage would only accommodate about eight men to the trip and each trip would consume three minutes. The cage was unprotected and the men often had their coats torn in traveling up the shaft.

Saw Danger Signal.

At the 135-ft. level of the mine workings ran north from the main shaft about 200 feet and drop about 30 feet to the 165-feet level. At this point was a timber slide and a flimsy ladder. The mine was wet and muddy and some of the rooms were still hung up and the blast men were in danger. Hung up means that the blast did not cause the rock and upper strata to come down solidly and allow for proper bracing.

One miner quit work a few days before the pond broke thru. He had noticed the warning signals given by the seepage of wet sand from above. There were only three feet of rock between the sand and the pond and he decided to give up his $4.40 a day job for a while until things got safer.

The management had been asking anxiously for a number of days whether the braces were holding properly but in spite of the plain evidence of disaster they continued to order the miners into the pit.

Then came the roar of the torrent as the pond suddenly disappeared from the face of the earth and the miners were overwhelmed and drowned like rats below.

The relentless greed of the steel trust has contributed to the strength of the Farmer-Labor movement in this part of Minnesota.

BRITISH PRESS SAYS 'AMEN' TO COOLIDGE TALK

Think MacDonald Will Also "O. K." It

LONDON, April 23.—The British press joins in a fervent "Amen!" to the views expressed by President Coolidge in his New York speech.

They are especially delighted over Coolidge's indorsement of the Morgan-Dawes reparations plan, which means the granting of a huge American loan to Germany to help her meet her financial obligations to France.

It is generally claimed among the organs of British big business that the MacDonald labor government cannot help but accept the propostions advanced by Coolidge, especially the one urging so-called limitation of armaments.

In view of the Labor party's platform, urging limitation of air, submarine and land forces, and Prime Minister MacDonald's declaration that such limitation is vital to the preservation of world peace, it is considered a foregone conclusion that Great Britain, as in the case of the Washington conference, will be the first nation to express official approval of Mr. Coolidge's suggestions.

Expect MacDonald's Approval.

It is confidently expected MacDonald will take the earliest opportunity to make an official declaration of British approval of the Coolidge suggestions when Parliament resumes after the Easter recess.

Meantime the British press warmly praises the American President's remarks.

Characterizing the conference suggestion as "of the highest importance," the Daily News adds:

"If a serious attempt is made by the French government to torpedo this new effort for peace, with all the hopeful consequences that it implies, the isolation of the French republic then must be final and complete."

Nervous About Frontiers.

The Manchester Guardian also indorses the proposal for a new arms conference, to be held as soon as the reparations question is settled.

"As long as France is nervous about the security of her eastern frontier, her present diplomacy will continue because there are armaments everywhere in Europe. But with a real settlement of the reparations problem she can no longer have grounds for fear."

Cal Beats Hiram in Jersey.

TRENTON, N. J., April 23.—Senator Hiram Johnson lost another round in the presidential campaign Tuesday when New Jersey turned him down, 40 to 1, in favor of President Coolidge.

THOUSANDS WILL PARADE IN BIG MAY DAY DEMONSTRATION BY ROCHESTER AMALGAMATED

ROCHESTER, N. Y., April 23.—Convention Hall, the largest auditorium in the city of Rochester was chosen as the ending point of a monster parade which will be held Thursday, the First of May, under the auspices of the Rochester Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and in conjunction with other progressive economic and political organizations in the city. Five bands of music, descriptive floats, nationally known speakers and a concert and dance for the evening are also part of the preliminary arrangements. Five to ten thousand paraders are expected to be in line when the parade starts from Amalgamated headquarters at 1 p. m.

The decisions for the great International Labor Day celebration were made at a meeting of the Joint Executive Board in the headquarters of the Amalgamated at 476 North Clinton avenue. National Organizer Aldo Cursi presided.

From the very start it was evident that all the active members who took part in the meeting meant business. Edith Christeson reported the arrangements up to the time of the meeting, which included the securing of Convention Hall and invitations extended to several economic and political organizations in the city.

To encourage every member of the organization to take part in the great demonstration, double personal cards will be issued thru the shop chairmen to every union member in advance. This card will serve both for the purpose of admitting our members to the Convention Hall meeting in the afternoon and to the concert and dance which will take place in the evening at the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' headquarters.

Big May Day Floats.

A novel feature of the parade will be descriptive floats embodying the spirit of the first of May celebration. The following members are on a special committee to arrange these floats: Joe Plati, Charles Rosen, I. Berstein, D. Rosenblum, Freda Schneiter, Rose Miller, Morris Levin, Thomas Volpe. The personnel of the committee is an assurance by itself that these floats will be a success.

Joseph Schlossberg, general secretary-treasurer of the national organization of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, will be the principal speaker. It is possible that short addresses will be delivered in the several languages of the different nationalities which compose the great family of the Amalgamated here in Rochester.

End Day With Dance.

An unusually fine entertainment will be arranged exclusively for all the members of the Amalgamated and their families at 8 o'clock at the Amalgamated Hall, 476 Clinton avenue, north. The entertainment will be followed by a dance which will mark the close of a successful fall and spring educational program.

A meeting of all the Joint Board, members of the Executive Board and shop chairmen will be held at the Amalgamated headquarters on Monday evening, April 28, at 8 p. m. sharp, for the report of the preparations for the celebration of the first of May to be made.

The grand marshal and marshals for each local will be chosen at this meeting. The line of march and other important details will be taken up at this time. For size and enthusiasm this parade is expected to surpass anything the Amalgamated has staged in this city.

Rotary Speech His Last.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., April 23.—George Fort Milton, editor and publisher of the Chattanooga News, and Tennessee manager of the William G. McAdoo-for-President campaign, dropped dead in a hotel at Murphysboro, at 1 a. m. today. He had just addressed the Rotary Club.

ARTICLE III.

American Colonialism.

In more ways than one does the American imperial and colonial empire resemble the Roman empire of old. But the most outstanding resemblance of the policy of the Roman republic of yesterday and the modern American capitalist imperialistic republic of today, lies in the management of the colonies and in the interference with domestic affairs in the various spheres of influence. The American military governor generals of the colonial possessions are the exact prototypes of the procurators and pro-consuls governing the provinces of the old Roman empire. In Rome men were given the office of pro-consul or procurator in order to redeem either their personal fortunes of their political friends and masters. On exactly the same principle are our colonial military governor generals chosen today. General Leonard Wood was sent into the Philippines to force upon the Filipinos an economic policy which would enable him to repay in valuable concessions the powerful bankers and manufacturers who financed his primary campaign in 1920 to the cost of $2,000,000. Likewise, we find Major Enoch H. Crowder, formerly chief of the American military staff, serving as Ambassador to Cuba. An American commission is now in Bolivia watching the collection of taxes in the interest of the Standard Oil. In Nicaragua, the only solvent country in Central America, the United States administers the treasury and customs of the country in the interest of the American bankers and investors. The decisive outcome of an election in Honduras is the conduct of an American warship lying off its coast. The Argentine republic cannot pass laws regulating its own industries without the sanction of the American packing interests. South America is often in danger of war and strife because of the machinations of American war contractors fostering rivalry among the southern republics. The Bethlehem Steel Co. has recently become the official contractor for the Argentine navy. The Secretary of State Hughes has become the official spokesman for the American bankers in all their deals as shown by the recent $6,000,000 loan to Salvador in which the State Department "assisted" in the selection of the collector of customs, who, according to the loan contract, is to be appointed in case of default.

American capitalists have been quick to extend their domination wherever catastrophe has aided them. The collapse of the sugar market in Cuba during the latter part of 1920 is a typical case in which the industries of the weaker country were salvaged in order to enable the American interests to secure over 50 per cent control. How serious the interference of American capitalists, aided and abetted by the United States Government, is in the internal affairs of these weaker exploited nations is clearly seen from the present situation in Brazil. An American naval mission of about 30 officers with the approval of the United States Navy Department, has for several months taken over control of the Brazilian naval schools, shipyards, and fleet. They were paid by the Brazilian government. This has resulted in upsetting the naval balance of power between the A B C powers and has proven a source of serious trouble to the whole continent.

American occupation and influence are characterized by the same brutality and outrageous conduct coloring the actions of the other imperialist powers. Since General Wood has arrived in the Philippines he has pursued a policy of forcing the natives to hand over valuable concessions to American capitalists. In this campaign General Wood has made the attempts of the natives to nationalize their industries, the target of his attacks. The obvious purpose of these attempts at government ownership in these lesser developed countries is to save the industries from falling into the hands of foreign exploiters. The purpose of the agent of American imperialism is to remove all hindrances and obstacles to the domination of the weaker countries by American capital.

The Filipinos strongly resent this move of General Wood. Their Senate and Legislature have gone on strike against this high handed policy of their American masters. The Filipinos are bent on preventing the American capitalists from gobbling up their country. There is talk of independence. The American auditor Wright has cut off the independence funds. So serious a turn have recent events taken in the Philippines that the imperialists of other countries are afraid that the contagion of national independence will spread from these islands and make trouble in the entire Far East. Thus the editor of the "Far East," one of the leading Japanese imperialist journals in Tokio, recently declared that the Filipino crisis was "adding fresh fuel to the anti-foreign fires smouldering in China, to the anti-British blazes in India and to the general unrest against control in many parts of Asia and in large sections of Africa." This remark is especially significant since normally Japan would like to see the United States get out of the Philippines in double quick time. It is interesting to note how the capitalist imperialists of all countries line up and forget their differences when their fundamental interests are at stake.

When the Cuban millionaire Colonel Tarafa proposed his bill to consolidate the railways so as to eliminate 47 private ports in Cuba and private railways, President Coolidge at the behest of the American Sugar Refining Co., the American Metal Co., and over a score of other firms representing over half billion dollars, warned the Cuban government to drop consideration of this measure. American imperialist agents, even resorted to the tactics they employed in the Canal Zone by an attempt to engineer a fake revolution in the country. Much resentment has been stirred up in Cuba against this high handed attempt of the American capitalists to throttle their native government.

In the other colonies and spheres of American influence there is considerable trouble brewing. The Virgin Islands are complaining bitterly, as can be seen from the following appeal by the editor of the "Emancipator", one of their native papers: "We are serfs who work for wages ranging from ten cents to a dollar a day. Politically we are peons governed by the United States Navy. Federal United States laws have worked havoc upon these islands. The people live in one room houses; eat scanty meals; and are forced to move about in a manner unbecoming civilized people at this age."

Porto Rico has repeatedly demanded its independence from American imperialism. What American exploitation of Porto Rico means is seen from the following appeal of Senator Iglesias for independence: "There are 776,396 acres of the islands choicest land under the control of 447 American, Spanish and French corporations and individuals. We have all the evils of absentee ownership and faulty systems of education, industry, credit and sanitation."

Even Mexico does not afford unbounded peace and comfort to American imperialists. Tho Obregon has completely surrendered to Morgan and Rockefeller interests, and is quickly dropping all pretense at friendship even with the most conservative elements, there are disturbing factors on the political horizon in Mexico. In spite of our capitalists being sure that Calles, the most likely successor of Obregon, will do their bidding, they are taking steps to make sure that no losses are suffered by them in the change of administration. American interests played a most important part in the recent rebellion of De la Huerta against the Obregon-Calles combination.

Our marines hold Haiti, San Domingo and Nicaragua. Central America is under our financial thumb. An American financial mission is instructing Colombia how to run its finances. Bolivian policy is dictated by American bankers. Peru is virtually in American hands.

The diplomacy and philosophy of American imperialist policy towards the southern republic has been forcefully stated by Secretary of State Hughes before the American Bar Association a few months ago. If one should strip bare such verbiage of Hughes as the Monroe Doctrine "does not infringe upon the independence and sovereignty of other American states and does not stand in the way of Pan-American cooperations," one will find that American imperialism in no way differs from the other capitalist imperialism. Despite all our protestations of loyalty to the "principle of national security" all Latin America is now seething with protest at the dictatorial attitude of the American delegates to the recent Pan-American conference.

G. O. P. KEYNOTE IGNORES LABOR AND FARM ISSUES

Whiskered Hughes Talk Is Very Old Stuff

By LUDWELL DENNY,
Federated Press Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, April 23.—Old stuff! This is the most frequent comment one hears on the Republican campaign keynote speech by Charles E. Hughes, of the Fall-Daugherty-Denby normalcy cabinet, delivered before the New York state convention of his party. Hughes managed to string words together for an hour and a half without a protest against the oil scandals. Since Daugherty and his klan have threatened to scuttle the G. O. P. ship if there is a repetition of the we-are-at-least-70-percent-pure confession by Senator Pepper in Maine, the New York keynote admitted no guilt on the part of the Harding-Coolidge regime.

"Hush" is the Word.

Hush up the investigations, blame the Progressives and Democrats for obstructing legislation, appeal to the capitalists on the basis of Mellon's government for the rich and prove that Coolidge was born in a typical American farm home in Vermont. Such will be the Republican campaign if Hughes' introductory fireworks are followed.

Hughes had no word to say to American labor. No mention was made of the light of American farmers, except a passing reference to foreign markets. No word about injunctions.

A Dark and Wet Horse.

Meanwhile in Albany the Democrats were holding their state convention and indorsing Governor Smith, Tammany candidate, for President. Smith will be run as a quasi-dark horse. His candidacy will not be pushed openly in other states. But the three Democratic bosses—Murphy of New York, Brennan of Illinois, Taggart of Indiana—are known to favor Smith if he, as a wet, can be put over without dampening the Democratic ardor of the dry south. So Smith in accepting the pledges of support by the convention at Albany did not mention prohibition, nor was the subject referred to by the delegates, practically all of whom were wets. Since the Wisconsin indorsement Smith's backers are hoping that his Catholic religion will not exclude him as a successful candidate.

The Democratic platform, as foreshadowed by the keynote speech of Judge Herrick, will be a repetition of the Cox platform inspired by Wilson, with the real campaign centering around the Republican administration scandals.

By LAURENCE TODD
(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Millionaire bootleggers in Atlanta federal prison are still millionaires. The power of their money may occasionally fail to save them from a penitentiary sentence, but it follows them within the stone walls and adds to the bitterness of the lot of prisoners who have no money. Under the Daugherty-Votaw control of Atlanta prison, special privileges have as surely gone with cash balances as tho the prisoner were in some big hotel.

This was the substance of testimony given to the Brookhart investigating committee of the Senate by J. F. Wilkins, for the past eight years in charge of the school in the prison. Wilkins was suspended, a few days ago, when it was discovered that he proposed to resign and write magazine articles exposing the little hell that the Daugherty-Votaw system has made in the convict community.

His Testimony.

He told the senators that three millionaire bootleggers—Remus of Ohio, Sweetwood of New York, and Kessler of New York—consisting the upper privileged class in Atlanta prison. Remus had all possible privileges from the moment of his arrival. He dined in the officers' mess instead of in the main dining hall with the rest of the prisoners. He had a private room above the isolation ward. It was said that there was a private bath attached. He did no work, but roamed at will within the prison enclosure. When at last there came some newspaper publicity to the strange conditions of this Ohio bootlegger's imprisonment, he went to work in the parole office and was given his meals at the hospital, where the food was better.

Senator Wheeler asked Wilkins whether the other prisoners commented on the case of these millionaires.

"Yes," replied the schoolteacher. "It was very embarrassing, and very destructive to prison morale. "These special privileges clearly went to men who had money. The talk among the prisoners was that the three men paid money to prison officials in order to get this special consideration. I tried several times to see Warden Sartain about it, but was unable to see him. It would not have been worth my while to complain to the deputy warden, who virtually runs the prison. Those of us who would like to complain have had to consider that we would probably have our official heads cut off if we talked. That's what has happened to me after eight years of service."

Political Pull Big Factor.

He said that the "trustees" do not get the best chance because of good conduct, nowadays. Recently the rule of earned privilege has broken down, and "the prisoner who has the best political pull, social standing, and money, has the privileges; there is no question but this condition has grown worse in the last few years."

His own life was made miserable after Superintendent Votaw stopped the investigation of the drug-peddling traffic within the prison. Guards who had been charged with having sold cocaine and other "dope" marked Wilkins as the chief instigator of the inquiry, because he had asked permission to testify to the demoralization created by the constant selling of these narcotic drugs among the convicts. As soon as the investigation was called off, at the instance of Daugherty and Votaw, these guards began to mutter vile names at the schoolteacher when he passed them in the prison corridors. This wore on his nerves until he was ready to resign. Since the assistant warden had been opposed to any drug investigation, he could not complain to that official. He had decided to resign, when he was suspended.

Dope Still Sold.

Wilkins testified that the use of dope inside the prison is as common now as at any time in the past, and that he believed that if former Warden Dyche had been permitted to remain and carry on the campaign he began against it, the traffic could have been broken up. A prison doctor was arrested and sentenced to Leavenworth prison for having sold drugs in Atlanta, but Warden Dyche was removed by Votaw and Daugherty and the drug ring remained entrenched.

JURY DEBATING THAW'S SANITY IN NIGHT SESSION

Millionaire Has Laughing Fit In Court.

PHILADELPHIA, April 23.—The Thaw case went to the jury at 3:17 p. m. At 6 p. m. it took a recess until 8. Judge Monaghan began his charge at 2:15 p. m.

The millionaire was highly nervous, at one time laughing aloud, so that the clerk had to rap for order. Yet he was mainly confident.

In his charge, the judge recalled many points of evidence in Thaw's favor, particularly the testimony of alienists called by those opposing Thaw's release.

Evelyn Nesbit Won't Settle

Almost at the last minute, it was understood, an offer of settlement was made to Evelyn Nesbit which would have caused her virtual withdrawal. But the offer was refused.

"I am here to represent Harry Thaw's boy—his son—born October 25, 1910, and in the name of this boy I oppose Thaw's release." William A. Gray, counsel for Evelyn Nesbit, declared at the climax of the millionaire's sanity trial today.

Thaw's actions when taken to a rooming house under the name of West, following his escape from New York after the Gump affair were described to the jury in an affidavit read by Gray—an affidavit made by the landlady.

She told how Thaw ordered "a steamer or an airplane" which they were to board from the front window to get away.

It was shortly after this that Thaw tried suicide.

The affidavit indicated that Thaw thought he was planing a flight to Mexico and left $50 "for the Roumania-Hebrew baby that slept outside my window."

The lawyer then invited the jury's attention to the "convenient use that Thaw has made of the court." He recalled how Thaw had himself proved now sane, now insane, to suit his purpose.

"He has played hot and cold with the law," Gray said, after insisting that Thaw always had been insane.

Thaw Laughs

When Gray said this—Thaw laughed so hard that he had to hold a handkerchief to his mouth. He looked around, caught the eye of spectators and smiled, as tho to say that he was quite at ease.

2,000 U. S. Veterans Driven To Suicide During Last Year

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, April 23.—Poverty is one of the chief causes of suicide, as shown by investigations of the Save-a-Life League, New York. From 15,000 to 16,000 persons committed suicide in the United States last year, the league estimates, on the basis of the 12,948 admitted suicides. "Nothing is more pathetic than the many disabled soldiers who themselves ended life's battle, 2,000 having gone out in this regretable way," says the league report.

Many of these ex-soldiers were left in sickness and poverty because of the wholesale graft in the veterans' bureau of the Harding-Coolidge administration.

CARIBOO INDIANS PERISHING BEFORE RUTHLESS WHITES

Game Gone, Jobs Gone, Health Gone.

BY SYDNEY WARREN
(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

WILLIAMS LAKE, B. C., April 23.—The coming of the white men into the Cariboo country has brought with it the exploitations of the Cariboo Indians in the 100 per cent fashion by all civilized business men.

The American Indians in this section of British Columbia, as in most other parts of the continent, had their lands stolen from them. To salve the conscience of their white robbers they were allowed to live on small reservations for agriculture. The lands given were often the poorest. On the sugar Cane rancherie it is difficult to secure sufficient water for irrigation, and to make matters worse farming implements are beyond the price that the Canadian natives could afford. Add to this the fact that the Cariboo Indians have for ages secured their living in hunting and fishing, not farming. By the advent of the white man destitution faces them.

Livelihood Taken Away

At first the Indians made an attempt to meet the new conditions forced upon them thru disappearance of their hunting, trapping and fishing grounds by hauling freight by horse teams, but the coming of the white man's motor trucks and railway transportation took this means of livelihood away.

Today destitution and disease are stalking among the Indians of the Cariboo country. The age-long immunity from contagious diseases enjoyed by the Indians of this section has been shattered. At present in the Big-Bar country a virulent type of small-pox is spreading among the natives and thruout the Lillooet region mumps have been raging. Around Williams Lake and the Sugar Cane rancherie an epidemic of measles has hit practically all the young people of the Indian tribes about this country. Several deaths have taken place and more are expected.

The Indians afflicted with disease are destitute and in dire need of ordinary necessaries. The Indian agent has issued orders for immediate relief but when this is exhausted they will be in the same plight as before.

Communist Clarity—Capitalist Confusion.

Two entirely different groups, linked together in the "National Republican," official organ of the republican party's national committee, will repudiate the statement that they are working for the same end.

First, and voicing protest most vehemently, will be the group of progressives, so-called, headed by LaFollette and including Wheeler, Brookhart and others who have incurred the displeasure of the standpatters. "Labor," the official organ of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, will be especially emphatic in denying the accusation and attempting to outdo the "National Republican" in a vituperative attack upon the reds.

The Communists will be just as emphatic but more good-humored in denying their affiliation with the organizations and individuals whose ambition is the impossible one of restoring Jeffersonian democracy as a guiding principle for government in this imperialistic era.

America has its die-hards as well as Great Britain. The financial interests for whom the "Nation Republican" speaks are uncompromising and arrogant in their endeavors to make of the working class of America a race of industrial helots.

The LaFollettes, Brookharts and Wheelers, middle class business and professional men, express the resentment of that class against the domination of the big industrialists and financiers, against the minor role the middle class is forced to play in formulating domestic and foreign policies. They do not understand that with the development of American capitalism the middle class has lost its economic foundation, the strangling of small competitive manufacturers has forced them to become the servants of the great monopolies—financial and industrial—well-paid servants but still servants.

The Communists understand the processes at work and they know the futility of the changes proposed by the middle class mal-contents—changes not only futile but for the most part impossible of accomplishment.

The Communists are committed to the policy of organizing and educating the workers and farmers of America for war on capitalism; they understand that a return to the competitive capitalism of early American history is a dream and even if possible would be undesirable. Communists are not against monopoly and specialized production as such; they are against an industrial system that is operated solely for the benefit of a few and they are also against the political system that bulwarks it.

They can view with a pleasure commensurate with the results achieved the attacks of the middle class upon the more powerful section of the capitalist class but they have no intention of, in fact they assiduously work to prevent, the middle class reformers consolidating their leadership of the masses of workers and farmers.

The confusion of thought that exists in America is demonstrated by the fact that the "National Republican" attempts to put lavender and pink progressives in the same camp with the crimson Communists while the officialdom of the reformist movement attacks the Communists for working for the establishment of a class party of workers and farmers.

In the welter of confused thinking that the instability of American capitalism is causing, the Communists alone are steering a clear course.

The Workers (Communist) Party of America, in its program, states its position clearly and the events of each succeeding day justify the objectives and tactics there set forth. It is a Communist and therefor a working class program and a careful reading of it is the best cure for the confusion that now prevails in working class circles.

The Jeffersonian democrats will expose their anti-working class character by the manner in which they will, under pressure from the big capitalists, attack the Communists and endeavor to be still more patriotic than the organs of imperialism.

MacDonald's Troubles

Unlike many of their leaders, now government officials, the great mass of British workers, consciously and otherwise, is determined to utilize some of the political advantages the present parliamentary situation affords for the enhancement of their working and living conditions. This attitude of the working class is reflected in the fact that 2,200,000 workingmen are seeking wage increases. The total includes 800,000 miners, 720,000 builders, 500,000 engineers, 100,000 shipbuilders, 50,000 textile workers, and 50,000 workers in miscellaneous trades.

Industrial unrest in England is today more intense and widespread than at any time since 1921. MacDonald is worried. In an interview with the New York World correspondent the labor premier declared: "Some recent developments and methods, however, seem in practice and result to be those of mischievous Communist syndicalism. . . . All my life I have been opposed to the sympathetic strike. It has no practical value; it is simply beating the air."

MacDonald has good reason to be worried. He knows that the working masses of England will not accept this hackneyed, unfounded explanation of the present temper and mood of the labor organizations. MacDonald likewise knows that if he is to utilize his present cabinet position frankly and fearlessly in behalf of the working class, he will incur the bitter hostility and organized opposition of the reactionary capitalists. The waging of such a contest logically and inevitably leads to decisive struggle. It is precisely such fights which the MacDonald socialists and labor leaders the world over seek to avoid at any price. Hence the blaming of the Communists by MacDonald for conditions naturally arising from the present economic and political conditions in England.

Yes. MacDonald is face to face with a difficult task. Today, at the helm of the government, he cannot so easily hide his role in the class conflict. The very facts of life, the very realities of the class struggle are driving MacDonald and his like ever more into the open—on the side of the working class or on the side of the employing class.

Two Conspiracies

States Attorney Crowe and Judges Foell and Sullivan have been very active in endeavoring to uncover evidence of conspiracy on the part of the garment strikers to violate the anti-picketing injunction.

If they are really interested in criminal conspiracies we herewith furnish them evidence of a far-reaching, well-financed and powerful conspiracy to deprive workingmen and women of their liberty, to destroy labor organizations and use the courts for the afore-mentioned purposes. The following letter speaks for itself; it is on the letterhead of Gerhardt F. Meyne, building—contracting—remodeling:

> Dear Sir:
> We are addressing you for the purpose of bringing to your attention the Chicago Crime Commission, its general activities and activities for the building industry in particular. The opposite side of this sheet gives a more detailed account. Won't you read it?
> Destruction of property, assaults upon workmen and other criminal activities were promptly checked, principally thru the activities of this well organized, competent, independent body of red-blooded, two-fisted business men.
> Many of Chicago's leading citizens consider the Commission a business necessity, have supported it for the past five years, and are charging their contributions to expense for protection. No officer or member receives a cent of compensation. Every penny contributed goes directly into the work.
> Because this was done during a period in which the building industries did practically nothing for the Commission, I am confident that you will consider the facts set forth, and cheerfully and generously do your share toward its financial support at this time in common with all of the other trades, industries and professions in Chicago.
> Checks should be made payable to the Chicago Crime Commission, 21 North LaSalle Street.

The letter is signed by Gerhardt F. Meyne for the following committee:

> J. W. Alder, President American Sand & Gravel Company; Sewell L. Avery, President United States Gypsum Company; Avery Brundage, General Contractor; Frederick Bulley, General Contractor, President Associated Builders of Chicago; Adelbert E. Coleman, Manufacturerer Ornamental Iron and Bronze, President Building Construction Employers Association; Thomas E. Donnelley, Chairman Citizens Committee to Enforce the Landis Award; Edward Haupt, President Strobel Construction Company, Former President Building Construction Employers Association; Gerhardt F. Meyne, Builder, Member of Chicago Crime Commission; Thomas C. Moulding, President Thomas Moulding Brick Company; Edwin W. Sims, Former United States District Attorney, Former President Chicago Crime Commission of the firm Sims, Welch, Godman & Stransky.

On the reverse side of the letter is the boast that the conspirators have during the year 1923 secured 49 convictions in labor cases, 24 of the defendants having been railroaded to the penitentiary.

We call the attention of the constituted authorities to this matter but we realize that there is nothing really illegal in this sort of conspiracy or in using the United States mails to secure money for a criminal purpose. The bosses who have their names signed to the document above are engaged in protecting property and for that reason are quite within the bonds of capitalist legality.

Conspiracies recognized as criminal and subversive by capitalist courts are the agreements of workers to stick together in a fight for increased wages, better working conditions or to attempt to secure control of the machinery of government and industry.

Contrasted with the persecution of the garment strikers for their activities in upholding their standard of living and the right to organize, the immunity accorded the above organization of capitalists in their conspiracy against workers is an illuminating and living example of the functions of courts, judges and other agencies of law enforcement under capitalism.

It is the uncompromising class party against the compromising mixture of uncertain elements that still have longings for the old capitalist parties.

A CALL TO ACTION!

BY C. E. RUTHENBERG
Executive Secretary Workers Party of America.

Our party is now in the midst of the greatest campaign since the time it was organized, and yet most of the membership are not yet conscious of the importance of the work the party is doing.

This is a dangerous situation. Our whole Party strength must be mobilized and every ounce of Party energy must be brought into action if we are to succeed in the work, which we have under way.

What is the situation?

In the United States, the industrial worker and farmer have been the least class conscious of the workers anywhere in the world. In this country the illusion of bourgeoisie democracy was and is strongest. The workers and farmers have been taught to believe and have believed that the government is a government "of the people, for the people, and by the people". They have been taught to believe that the two old parties represent not the class interest of special economic groups, but the interests of the people as a whole. As a consequence we have had and still have the great mass of workers and farmers voting in support of parties which represent the class interests of those who exploit them and rob them.

As a consequence of this situation, class action and class consciousness on the part of industrial workers and farmers have been limited to a small minority which called itself Socialist, Communist or by the name of some similar group.

Those class conscious workers in the United States who belonged to these small groups have despaired of the masses of workers and farmers ever becoming class conscious. It has seemed an impossible task to break the working masses away from their support of the old political parties and the capitalist system which they supported.

Since the end of the war, however, new conditions have arisen. The economic struggle between classes in the United States has been greatly intensified. There is a dawning consciousness on the part of many thousands of workers and farmers that the government as it now exists is an instrument of the exploiters. As a consequence, there has appeared the growing movement for independent political action by the industrial workers and the exploited farmers.

In the United States, the year of the presidential election is a year of keen political interests. Greater numbers of workers and farmers are drawn into the political life of the country in the year of the presidential election more than at any other time. It is in a presidential year that there exists the possibility of crystallizing the movement for a Farmer-Labor Party on a national scale.

What This Year Offers.

The situation which exists in the United States today is that there is the possibility of uniting at least a million organized industrial workers and farmers in a class Farmer-Labor Party, which will enter the political arena to fight against the two old capitalist parties.

Such a development would be the most striking movement towards class consciousness in the entire history of the American Labor Movement. The crystallization of a mass party of a million workers fighting against the capitalist parties would be almost a revolutionary change in the political life of the United States.

Short of the period of the proletarian revolution itself, there could not be a greater opportunity than this for a Communist Party.

It is our work, our task, to draw the masses of workers and exploited farmers into the political struggle as a class to fight a class battle against their exploiters. By acting as the leading, driving, organizing, force in the movement for the crystallization of the class Farmer-Labor Party our party has an unparalleled opportunity to extend its influence and establish its permanent leadership in this movement.

Such an opportunity as now exists in the United States should inspire every member in our Party to his greatest effort. It should arouse an enthusiasm that should double and treble the activities of our whole party organization.

Think of it! The United States no longer, the backward, lagging country in the revolutionary movement but a country in which a real mass movement of workers and farmers is fighting the capitalist enemy. Could we ask for a greater stride forward on the party of the working class movement of this country?

Must Mobolize Our Strength.

The realization of this new situation is within our grasp. If we can mobolize the strength of our Party organization, if we can pull every member we have into the struggle there can be crystallized at the June 17th convention, and in the campaign to follow, a mass-class, Farmer-Labor Party of a million organized industrial workers and farmers.

Our Party must awaken to this opportunity at once. Every Party unit should take up the question of aiding in this campaign. Every Party member should look about him for opportunities to support this struggle.

The work of securing delegates to the June 17th convention is under way. Each Party member who is a member of another workers' organization should see to it that the question is raised in his organization and a delegate sent to the convention. The work of organizing local and state Farmer-Labor parties thruout the United States is being initiated by the left wing of the labor movement with our support and co-operation. Each such movement, whether it be local or on a state scale, must have the full support of our Party.

Farmer-Labor Party Campaign Fund.

The Farmer-Labor Party Campaign Fund asked for by our Party is part of this campaign.

The Central Executive Committee of the party asks the Party membership to raise $15,000 in order that our part of the work of crystallizing the mass, class Farmer-Labor Party might be financed. Leaflets are being printed. Speakers must be sent out. Organizers must be set to work both on local and state scales to assist in the creation of local and state organizations of the Farmer-Labor Party.

The sending out of invitations to the June 17th convention and getting this convention before the millions of industrial workers and farmers in itself is a big task and must have financial support. Our Party must assist and contribute to all this work.

It was to meet these expenditures to make it possible for the Party to mobilize all of its strength in the campaign that the $15,000 was asked for by the Central Executive Committee of the Party.

The responses received from our Party organizations thus far lead to the conclusion that the Party has not yet opened its eyes to the work and the opportunity which exists for us today. If the Party would fully realize and mobilize in this campaign, it should be a comparatively easy task for the 25,000 Party members to raise $15,000. Despite the fact that the campaign has been under way for more than a month, only about $3,000 has been raised thus far.

Comrades of the Workers Party! We must not miss this opportunity to advance the revolutionary movement in this country. We must take advantage to the fullest extent of the favorable situation which we have before us. Our Party must fulfill every phase of its duty in this situation.

The work which is under way, cannot go on unless those branches and Party members which have not assisted in financing the campaign come to the aid of the Party at once. During the next three or four weeks we must raise the remainder of the $15,000 fund. It is the duty of every Party branch, of every Party member, to bring this question up and to devise ways and means of supporting this campaign.

We have created a DAILY WORKER. We created it thru the sacrifices and devotion of members of our Party.

The DAILY WORKER, however, is merely an instrument for us in the work of creating a mass revolutionary movement in this country. The first great step towards that goal is the mass class Farmer-Labor Party. The same enthusiasm, the same devotion, the same willingness to make sacrifices are necessary in this task.

Let us go to work, Comrades. Let us create the $15,000 Farmer-Labor Campaign Fund. Let us put our whole organized strength into the scale to create the mass, class Farmer-Labor Party in the United States, the first great step in the progress of the revolutionary movement in this country.

OUR BOOK REVIEW SECTION

SOUTHERN NEGRO STUDIED.

By MARY WHITE OVINGTON.

"Darker Phases of the South" By Frank Tannenbaum. Published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, 2 W. 45th Street, New York City. Price $2.00. Postage 10c extra.

I expected to be disappointed in this book because it was heralded as unemotional, scientific, and I remembered the youth, Frank Tannenbaum, leading the unemployed in pre-war days into the rich churches of New York and demanding that the exponents of Christianity feed them and clothe them. There was plenty of emotion in that act; but I admit, the book finished, that this restrained judicious student has made a strong case. He has shown and interpreted a picture that has in it much that is new, and all that is unforgetable.

The book has five chapters, the two that seemed to me freshest in conception, those on the factory workers, entitled "The South Buries Its Anglo-Saxons," and the study of tenancy, "The Single Crop." In telling of the factory we do not hear of child labor or long hours but we get to the root of the system, the control of the worker thru the company's ownership of his home. . . .

The chapter on "The Single Crop" shows the dangerous growth of tenancy, and stresses the most important fact that the tenant is a migrant. "It is estimated that three hundred thousand farm tenants move every year in the United States. In some instances the tenant moves every 6 months.". . .

"In the last fifty years while the white farmer has been retrograding to tenancy the Negro has, in large numbers, become a land owner. There are more white than Negro tenants in eleven Southern states."

There is a chapter on the Ku Klux, and one on Southern prisons that is too terrible to be believable. Mr. Tannenbaum ends by saying of the Negro problem in the South that it has no solution. He advises us to give up thinking that it can be solved and do the first possible wise thing at hand. His own suggestions are, the organizing of the mill-hands in unions and the continual migration of the Negro to the North.

(Editor's note: Tannenbaum must realize tnat migration merely transfers the problem and that after all, the Negro question is only part of the war of workers and capitalism.)

Stomachs Forcing Phila. Orchestra Artists To Strike

(By The Federated Press)

PHILADELPHIA, April 23.—Philadelphia's upper class who purchase the self-satisfaction of being "cultured" by helping support the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, say they will not permit an increase in the musicans' inadequate wage. The players, who are workers first and artists second, insist that they will strike unless the weekly minimum is raised from $60 to $75. "Our season is only 30 weeks," one of the violinists explained to the Feedrated Press. "We cannot live on the present $1,800 a year." Extra work is not available in Philadelphia.

All of the 110 men are in the musicians' union, affiliated with the American Federation of Musicians. Six weeks of negotiations have brought no results. Altho compromises have been suggested by the management, union officals have presented no terms to the rank and file. The contract expires April 29.

Leopold Stokowski, the director, has taken a neutral position in the dispute. "He can afford to be neutral—he's suposed to get $40,000 a year," said a player.

Colored Baritone Begins Season

NEW YORK, April 23.—Julius Bledsoe, a colored baritone, gave his first recital in New York in Aeolian Hall on the night of Easter Sunday. Mr. Bledsoe's program included songs in four languages and among the songs sung in English are Negro spirituals.

He is being managed by the Concert Bureau which has on its list the famous Russian singer Feodor Chalapin, the operatic star Madame Schumann-Heink, and the dancer, Pavlowa. He is planning a continental tour.

Saving Tuberculor Children

WARDEN, Mass., April 23.—That large numbers of subnormal children may be restored by sunshine, fresh air, proper food, and quiet hours of sleep in the open has been demonstrated in a summer camp maintained for the prevention of tuberculosis during the last four years.

There is a movement on foot to have the school made a State institution.

Cal For Registration.

Coolidge, it was learned, was in favor of the registration and "farm serf" clauses of the bill from the beginning. His only doubts were regarding the Japanese exclusion act which threatened, thru the bigotry of Congress to plunge the nation into international difficulties for which Wall Street was not yet quite ready.

By PROJECTOR.

Are Films Bad For Children?

An extensive study conducted by Dr. David Lund, head of the Swedish Prison Board, convinces this peerless authority on morality and conduct that the movies are very bad for young children. Why? Because, "they cannot distinguish fact from fancy and are likely to mistake falsehood for truth."

Truly, the learned doctor expects from babies what adults cannot give. He should realize that under capitalism the function of the movie as of the press, is precisely the stuffing of fancy and falsehood into the minds of working class children, grown and small.

The answer is that pro-capitalist films are "bad" for working class children and working class organizations, and that they must be combatted energetically with labor's own moving pictures.

The importance of the motion picture as a propaganda weapon is woefully under-estimated even by our most far-sighted labor leaders. In a little city of Central Illinois a survey among 850 school children showed that 180 of them attended movies from two to four times a week, while at least 300 of them reported periodical attendance. All the books and newspapers in the community cannot compete with the movie as a means of moulding the "young idea," nor the old.

Spring In The Iron Foundry

By CHARLES OLAF OLSEN.

Thru the windows of the shop
The sunbeams pour,
And black shadows make
Patterns on the floor;
Broad ribbons of light
Slant thru the gloom
Gleaming and bright
In the smoke-shot room,
Leaning to the wall
Splotched with grime,
Calling, calling,
"Here's springtime!"

On the bare ground
Lie heaps of brown sand;
All around, everywhere,
Sooty men tramp,
Shovel and tamp
In the dust-dense air,
As if their happiness
And their lives hung on
One casting more or less
And how soon it was done—
And on no such thing
As playing in the sun.

And I guess that's true!
For, as I stand still Wondering what to do,
Looking away
To where the sun is singing
Of the bright spring day,
The foreman calls, "Bill,
We're waiting on you—
If you want to hold your job,
Get a move on, too."

But there is the sun
Playing on the floor,
And there are the windows
Where the sunbeams pour
Ribbons of light,
Slanting to the wall;
And oh, how they call, call,
"Come on, man, come!
Leave your grime,
What do you care,
Don't you see it's here?
It's springtime!"

Rabbi Turns On Klan; Assails Johnson Bill And Nordic Theory

(By The Federated Press)

PORT HURON, Mich., April 23.—"The Johnson immigration bill bears out the theories of the Ku Klux Klan. The exclusion provisions are based not on racial unfitness but on religious discriminations," Rabbi Leo M. Franklin, Temple Beth El, Detroit, said in an address here. "The real reason for the attempt to exclude the people is a religious matter, a hatred of the Jews and the Catholics, who largely make up that portion of the old world." He was referring to southern and south eastern Europe. He attacked also the theory of Nordic superiority, which holds that the superior races come from the north.

Morgan-Dawes Plan to Enslave Europe Means New War in Few Years

NEW YORK CITY, April 24.—Scott Nearing, lecturer on economics, declared here that the Morgan-Dawes scheme, for the enslaving of Western Europe to American Imperialism, will not work.

"The plan is too complete," declared Nearing. "Its shackles will prove too galling. The rawness of the slavery which it is proposing is too obvious. Its tyranny is too oppressive. Perhaps Germany will reject the plan. Perhaps she will accept it, with minor modifications to save the face of the Government, but in five years, or perhaps in ten, there will be an explosion in Europe that will put 1914 completely in the shade. Among the factors that contribute toward this explosion and that add to its terribleness when it comes, documents like the Dawes report will deserve positions of foremost distinction."

In reviewing the conditions that led up to the framing of the Morgan-Dawes plan, Nearing said:

On Rehabilitating Europe.

"Ten years ago the principal capitalist empires of Europe plunged into a war that was to last for a few weeks, and that was to bring victory and glory to the arms of each of the contestants. The war dragged on for more than four years, and then, five years ago, the Allies, having won the war, and thus established the "Peace of Right" (as opposed to the "Peace of Might" which Germany would have enforced on her enemies had she won the contest) handed to the Central Empires the treaty, with instructions to sign on the dotted line.

"This treaty was the work of the ablest statesmen that the Allies had at their disposal. Instead of sending mere commissioners, the premiers, presidents and elder statesmen of Europe and America assembled in Paris and prepared the treaty.

"Solemnly these men (there were no women among the treaty makers) assured the world that the rehabilitation of Europe had begun. With the defeat of the German militarists, the rule of might had given place to the rule of right. The passing of the German menace was to mark a milestone in the history of the race. Beyond this point was prosperity and peace.

"A hectic year ensued during which the nations of Europe issued bonds and paper money, reorganized their military and naval forces, and prepared for the next war. Then, in the spring of 1920, first in Japan, and later thruout the entire capitalist world, there broke out one of the most disastrous financial panics that the modern world has known.

"The four succeeding years in Europe, have been years of petty warfare, of unemployment, of famine, of pestilence. Financial systems have broken down in every one of the warring nations, with the single exception of Britain. The states carved out of Russia, Germany and Austria, as a part of the treaty reconstruction policy, have been, for the most part, maintained by French and English loans, and all of them are in a twilight zone of impotence. Despite the efforts of the Allies, Russia has maintained her revolution, and despite their utmost endeavors German competition still threatens the life of their industries.

"How can a poorly organized people like the French destroy a well organized people like the Germans? There is only one way—the destruction of the basis upon which German civilization is built. That policy France and the Allies have pursued with relentless vigor.

"The treaty began the destruction by depriving Germany of her colonies, her foreign investments, her iron and coal resources, her merchant ships, and saddling her with an immense reparations bill payable over half a century. The occupation of the Ruhr continued the process by turning over to the French steel interests the most important iron and steel center in Germany. The Dawes report completes the work by saddling directly upon German industry and upon the German workers an annual charge of two and a half billions of gold marks, which will be, in effect, a sharing with the Allies of German industrial profits for a period to be determined by the Allies.

"PROGRESSIVE" LEAGUER ADVISES WORKERS TO VOTE FOR HI JOHNSON

HANCOCK, Mich., April 24.—The local Progressive Farmer-Labor Party received a telegram from Herbert Baker, secretary of the Progressive Voters' League of Michigan, advising them to cast their ballots in the Republican primaries for Hiram Johnson, senator from California. Baker took pains to state that he was speaking for himself and not in the name of the organization.

T. J. O'Flaherty, associate editor of the DAILY WORKER, speaking here last Sunday, at a Farmer-Labor Party meeting, assailed Hiram Johnson, for his complicity in the imprisonment of Tom Mooney, his support of William J. Burns, chief stool pigeon for Harry M. Daugherty, and his consistent anti-labor record on the western coast. Johnson's reputation as a progressive is now thoroly scotched in Hancock and the fake radical Baker has gained nothing by being his sponsor.

WALSH HITS OIL EXPERTS AS BIASED

Lewis Is Charged With Deceiving Committee

WASHINGTON, April 24.—James O. Lewis, oil engineer of Tulsa, Okla., one of the experts who made an examination of the geological structure of the Teapot Dome naval oil reserve for the Senate oil committee, today was charged by the committee members with deception of the investigators.

Attacking Lewis' testimony before the committee yesterday in which he said he considered the Teapot lease justified on account of drainage, Senator Walsh, Montana, declared he was convinced that Lewis was biased in favor of the lease before he made his investigation.

"You accepted employment by this committee to study the Teapot field and report back whether or not the lease was advisable in the light of its geological structure," said Walsh. "You were employed under the impression that you were unbiased."

Walsh produced a letter purporting to have been written by Lewis and sent to A. W. Ambrose, a former official of the bureau of mines, previous to his employment.

"This is an indorsement of Secretary Fall's action. This shows that you were a rabid supporter of the lease even before you had studied it for us."

Lewis defended himself with the statement that "every scientific man has opinions." He also contended the committee had "misread" the letter if they accepted it as an evidence of deception on his part.

Committee Adjourns to Tuesday.

"I was not prejudiced. My report was entirely impersonal and based on scientific study."

Lewis and Frederick G. Clapp made their field investigations together for the committee in 1923. Lewis reported that the Teapot Dome was being drained, while Clapp's report stated there was no drainage because of a fault in the geological structure.

After Lewis was excused, the committee adjourned until next Tuesday.

SUB-DISTRICT 4 IS MEETING AUBURN NOW

Unemployment Burning Issue at Meet

By THOMAS MYERSCOUGH,
Secretary, Progressive Miners' Committee.

AUBURN, Ill., April 23.—Meeting in the coal diggers hall, the miners of Subdistrict No. 4, better known as the Springfield Subdistrict of the Illinois Mine Workers, are in convention here.

No sooner was the gathering called to order by President Freeman Thompson, than he proceeded to read his report. As copies of the report were being distributed by the messengers, the president humorously drew attention to the fact that the report was inside a "red" cover.

The report was lengthy, covering the many different phases of the mining industry.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, was quoted as saying, on one of his frequent visits to Washington, D. C., that "coal legislation was not expected at this session of Congress, and that he could see no necessity for any, as the public was well supplied with coal."

Perhaps it was because oil has superseded coal as a national issue that Lewis was prompted to make that statement.

President Thompson recommended that the constitution be amended to provide for the retention of eligibility by members to their rghts in the subdistrict when they are forced by unemployment to seek work elsewhere. Much space is given in the report to the question of the foreign born worker and the Coolidge message to Congress.

Call for Labor Party.

Pointing out the inablity of the present system to cope with the needs of the world, and to its constant refusal to do anything of a remedial character at home, Thompson demands that something be done to bring about amalgamation. He very forcibly declared that "we must have one union in each industry, and one alliance of all such unions the world over." As a means to that end, he made a strong plea for the active participation of all labor organizations in the formation of a real live Labor Party.

The reports of Vice President Tom Perry and Secretary J. J. Watt, both working class documents which touched on the urgent needs of the miners, including those unemployed, were also read. Both mentioned the Howat case and the Lewis "stabilization agreement." The miners here in Illinois think the latter should have meant "sterilization," for if the mines continue to shut down there won't be any work to be found in these parts.

Vicious "Docking" Discussed.

The report of the committee on officers' report was sailing gracefully along in the afternoon session until it came to that part covering the penalization of miners by "docking" from the pay envelopes of the miners fines for loading dirty coal. It was charged that the contract was violated by both miners and operators' representatives, but in the settlement reached only the miners were "gypped." They were forced to refund money, while the operators were "let out" by paying compensation for illegal suspension.

During this discussion, Watt, secretary of Sub-distrct 4, read much correspondence between President Farrington and himself. He charged District Board Member "Joker" Young with the responsiblity for many unfavorable decisions, declaring that Young was present to defend himself. After Watt concluded, he moved that Young, who is not a delegate, be given the floor. He made a pitiable speech in his own defense, admitting that he had done wrong, but used the words "technically wrong" for a defense of his decisions. "Joker," in answer to questions, admitted to similar and more recent decisions, all of which prove that he is well nicknamed.

Pullman Strikers Face Rifle Squad

SAN QUENTIN PENITENTIARY, Calif., April 24.—Isaac Wolfgang, sailor who has no friends, is going to hang here tomorrow all because of two bottles of milk.

Wolfgang was in Los Angeles early one morning. He had no money in his pockets. In front of a grocery store, down on East Third Street, he saw the milkman leave the day's supply of milk.

Wolfgang waited until the man was gone and then he drank two bottles.

Officer Walter Dinsmore finally found Wolfgang and went with him to his room "to get $35" he said he had there.

Inside the room there was a fight. Dinsmore hit Wolfgang over the head with his "billy" and Wolfgang in turn shot and killed Dinsmore.

Last night he was taken from the condemned row in the penitentiary here to the death cell—there to sit alone with his thoughts and await the coming of 10 a. m. Friday, when he will hang.

All because a sailor, out of a job, was hungry and drank two bottles of milk.

MOSCOW DID IT DAUGHERTY TELLS WORLD

Says Russian Bolshevist Forced Resignation

(Special to The Daily Worker)

COLUMBUS, O., April 24.—At last the truth is out—Moscow forced the resignation of Harry M. Daugherty, as attorney general of the United States in the Coolidge cabinet.

It wasn't "Cautious Cal" who wrote the request for the Daugherty resignation that sent the attorney general into private life,—it was the long arm of the Moscow Bolshevists.

Daugherty himself admitted it in a speech here, but those who have an itch for questions, ask:

Did the Russians urge Daugherty to sell booze permits and thus pile up a little fortune in graft

Did the Russians urge Daugherty and his clique to sell pardons to rich prisoners?

Did the Russians mix Daugherty up in the aircraft scandal?

Did the Russians tell Daugherty to sell jobs in the republican administration at so much per job?

Did the Russians tell Daugherty not to prosecute the war grafters?

Did the Russians organize Daugherty's "Ohio Gang" and put it into the power in Washington?

Daugherty's "sensational" defense of his administration of the department of justice was made before a gathering of his so-called friends and neighbors here. In order that our leaders may not charge us with publishing a bit of fiction, we republished the report of Daugherty's speech, as sent out by the capitalist news association—the Associated Press.

Files of the department of justice, he said, contained "abundant proof of the plans, purposes, and hellish designs of the Communist international."

"Bear in mind," he added, "that the files which I refused to deliver to the Wheeler investigating committee at the time my resignation was requested were demanded by Brookhart and Wheeler, two United States senators who spent last summer in Russia with their soviet friends—those same soviet and Communist leaders who preach destruction of constitutional government, destruction even of human life.

LOSE HALL, ORGANIZE IN SPITE POLICE

Four Arrested, Then Released, at Hegewisch

The striking car workers of the Pullman Company organized a local union of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen at their strike meeting yesterday.

Seeing that the strikers were one hundred per cent solid, the Pullman Company had between forty and fifty armed policemen at the plant, and threw the strikers out of their hall at 158 East 107th street.

The organization of the union by the strikers, after securing another hall, was an answer to this bluff of the Pullman Company.

Rifle Squads on the Job.

At six o'clock yesterday morning John Holmgren and a group of pickets were distributing handbills to the workers in other departments as they went into the plant. Altho there were auto loads of uniformed policemen, with shotguns and rifles, and many plain clothes men patrolling the sidewalks, there was no trouble.

The men at all times were quiet, and refrained from gathering in large groups.

Rout Out Police Captain.

The Pullman Company, however, seeing that the handbills telling the other departments of the drastic wage cut imposed on the strikers were creating much sympathy for the strikers, roused Pat Wheeler, Acting Captain of police in the 9th Ward, out of bed. Wheeler arrived at the Pullman gates at five minutes of seven, just as the men were finishing their distribution. He made the strikers put their leaflets away.

A large eight-passenger touring car filled with officers of the rifle squad, with guns attached to the sides of the auto., was parked just across the street from the hall at 158 East 107th street, where the strikers have been meeting.

Hall Is Closed.

Altho meetings, basketball games, dances and entertainments have been held in this hall regularly for a year, the rifle squad closed up the hall and told the strikers that "the license of the hall owner has been revoked."

The strikers pledged themselves to continue active picketing, and instructed Organizer Holmgren to draft a letter to the Pullman Company officials refusing to return to work until the wage cut is wiped out. They organized solidly into a local of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America. Hereafter the strike meetings will be held every morning at ten o'clock at Stancik's Hall, 205 East 115th street. This hall is just across the street from the police station in charge of Acting Captain Wheeler.

"I told Wheeler that we were within our rights in distributing handbills to the shop men," John Holmgren told the DAILY WORKER. "I am going to take it up with the alderman of the ninth ward. This alderman was elected by the votes of the Pullman Company workers and it's up to him to see that they get protection."

Four men were arrested yesterday while waiting for a street car in front of the plant at Hegewisch where the riveters are striking. One of them was not even employed in the car shop. They were held several hours and then released. It is thought that the strikers at Hegewisch will follow the lead of the Pullman strikers and organize a union.

In speaking to the strikers, Holmgren pointed out what an important step they had taken in forming a union. He said that the Pullman carshops have been the hot-bed of anti-unionism, and the slave driving speed-up system.

"My father worked in the Pullman Carshops for thirty-seven years," Holmgren said. "Then they crippled him, and I had to force them to give

Illinois is to be organized for the National Farmer-Labor Convention, to be held at St. Paul, Minn., June 17th, at a big state gathering planned for the Labor Temple, Peoria, Ill., May 18th, starting 9 a. m.

The call for the Peoria gathering of the Illinois State Farmer-Labor Convention is being sent out to all local labor unions, central labor councils, workers' political parties, workers' co-operative associations, workers' fraternal organizations and farmers' organizations in Illinois. In all about 3,000 invitations to this gathering will be issued.

It is estimated that about 500 delegates will attend. The miners will have an especially large delegation in view of the fact that their state convention will be held at Peoria, starting May 13th, and is expected to overlap the Farmer-Labor meeting.

MacDonald Is Secretary.

Duncan MacDonald, former secretary-treasurer of the Illinois Mine Workers, is temporary secretary, and can be reached at 727 E. Adams St., Springfield, Ill.

While the miners will have a strong delegation, it is expected that other industries will also be well represented. The invitation will be sent to all political groups, including the Workers Party, Socialist Party, both the Fitzpatrick-Nockels and the Ernest factions of the Farmer-Labor Party, the Socialist Labor Party and the Proletarian Party.

Call for Illinois State Farmer-Labor Convention to be Held at Labor Temple, 400 N. Jefferson St., Peoria, Ill., May 18th, at 9:00 a. m.

To All Labor Unions,
Central Labor Councils,
Workers Political Parties,
Workers Co-Operative Associations,
Fraternal Organizations and Farmers Organizations in the State of Illinois.

Greetings: Thruout the country the industrial workers and farmers are uniting their forces into State and Local Farmer-Labor Parties. The political domination of the employers, bankers and "open shoppers" is being challenged. Success has marked these first steps, in several instances, notably in the State of Minnesota, from which two United States Senators were elected on a Farmer-Labor ticket.

To link these local and State parties together and unite the political organizations of farmers and industrial workers for the 1924 Presidential campaign, a National Farmer-Labor Convention has been called to convene at St. Paul, Minn., June 17, 1924.

This call has been issued by the Committee of Arrangements in the name of the following organizations: Washington Farmer-Labor Party, Dakota Farmer-Labor Party, South Dakota Farmer-Labor Party, Montana Farmer-Labor Party, Nebraska Progressive Party, Federated Farmer-Labor Party, Minnesota Farmer-Labor Party and the Buffalo Labor Party. Invitations to participate are based on endorsement of the following tentative program:

A. Public Ownership.
B. Governmental Banking.
C. Public Control of all Natural Resources.
D. Restoration of all Civil Liberties guaranteed by the Constitution.
E. Abolition of the Use of Injunctions in Labor Disputes.

The forces of farmer and labor in Illinois are at present divided and practically without any political expression. The existing Farmer-Labor Parties have made no effort to unite the farmers and industrial workers for the State Elections in November 1924. They have used their influence to hinder the great get-together planned by the call for the Farmer-Labor Convention at St. Paul, Minn., June 17th. They have nothing to propose for the workers, and have thrown any further hopes into the discard by the action of some of their spokes-

BOYCOTT PLACED BY MEXICAN WORKERS AGAINST MUSSOLINI

(By The Federated Press)

MEXICO CITY, April 24.—When the workers of the General Confederation of Workers heard that the boat Italia was coming from Italy to exhibit the most important products of that country they organized a boycott. They were not disposed to let Dictator Mussolini (the enemy of all the workers of the world, as they put it) gain glory for his fascist country. The boycott has been organized in the ports of Tampico and Vera Cruz. The workers at these ports prevent the unloading of goods from the Italia, and prevent visits to the boat.

NEW ARREST BARES PANIC OF BOSSES

Laderman Is Taken On Market Street

The garment bosses are overstepping themselves in their frantic efforts to break the strike of the dressmakers which is now in its eighth week.

Injunction and arrests do not daunt the loyal pickets; so the employers have again resorted to the arrest of a union official.

Boss Orders Arrest.

Sam Laderman, business agent of the cloak-makers, was walking on Market street yesterday morning on his way to investigate certain grievances in some of the cloak shops.

Nat Ribback, whose shop is at 237 South Market street, was offended by the sight of an active union man and pointed him out for arrest to Officer Patrick Collins, of the State's attorney's office. The dick immediately obeyed "his master's voice" and took Laderman off to Crowe's principality in the Criminal Court building on the north side.

The detectives questioned Laderman and held him several hours. They tried to indentify him as the man who manufacturer Nat Ribback charges attempted to beat up a scab. The dicks called in a cop who failed to find Laderman the man he wanted.

After considerable delay and unwarranted holding, Laderman was released with the threat that any time the dicks "needed" him, they would get him at the union headquarters, 328 West Van Buren street.

The efforts of the scared bosses and their obedient slaves of Crowe's office to intimidate union officials and the fighting garments workers are absurdly futile. Their tactics reveal to what extent the power of the union is felt by the cringing dress manufacturers and their slugger hirelings.

More Shops Settling.

More shops have settled during the last two days; so that after the week-end holidays more than 150 workers will return to their places with their just demands granted. All evidence points to the cracking of the Dress Manufacturers' Association. From present indications it seems to be an auspicious moment for the strikers

COOLIDGE SUITS FRENCH RULERS AS MORGAN MAN

N. Y. Speech Shows That Calvin Is Safe

PARIS, April 24.—Coolidge is still the favorite presidential possibility as far as Poincare diplomats are concerned. His New York speech has convinced them that the cautious New Englander is a 100 per cent J. P. Morgan man.

J. P. Morgan is the power behind the present French government, and it is regarded as highly important here that a Morgan man again occupy the White House in order that the United States co-ordinate its activities with those of France.

Coolidge's unqualified indorsement of the Dawes-Morgan reparations plan was expected, of course. Officially the French government claims that the Dawes plan is not drastic enough, but privately they realize that it puts the last ounce of pressure on Germany compatible with her continued ability to pay.

Think Cal Was Kidding.

As for the Coolidge implication that the Ruhr will have to be abandoned soon, the French do not take that too seriously. They believe that certain parts of his speech, as certain phrases in the wording of the Dawes report, are for political purposes only.

Not Alarmed by Disarmament.

There is official objection also to the disarmament talk Coolidge indulged in, but that again is felt to be for political propaganda purposes only. It is realized that an anti-militaristic sentiment exists in the United States, largely as a reaction against the last war, in spite of the noisy demonstrations and publicity of the militarists. Knowing the necessity of a politician blowing hot and cold, the Poincare government does not look with much unkindness on this.

Disarmament Wouldn't Do.

If Coolidge were sincerely in favor of disarmament it would be a horse of another color. France maintains her European hegemony by force of arms. She occupied the Ruhr by force of arms and by the menace of her thousands of warplanes she prevents Great Britain from kicking too far over the traces.

And Coolidge's emphasis on "capital," "finance" and "business," with his significant silence on the all-pressing issue of labor, delights the heart of the statesmen connected with the most reactionary government in Europe.

German Capitalists Greet Loan.

BERLIN, April 24.—German capitalists today greeted President Coolidge's speech as expressing full approval of the Dawes plan for a reparations settlement and at the same time a broad hint to France that America will disapprove any effort to sabotage the plan.

The speech heartened the government, especially Mr. Coolidge's declaration in favor of the loan to Germany. Government officials felt the President's public approval of the proposed loan will assure its full subscription. Inasmuch as the government has regarded the proposed loan as recommended in the Dawes report as the first prerequisite for adjustment of reparations, it is felt that the movement for a settlement of the involved problem is advanced considerably.

Imperialist France Peevish.

PARIS, April 24.—President Coolidge's address in New York yesterday closes the door to French hopes for discussion of war debts in connection with the experts' plan for a reparation settlement, in the opinion of authoritative French sources here today.

"Mr. Coolidge's statements mean the total of Germany's debt cannot be reduced because France must demand 27 billion gold marks additional to be able to pay the United States and England," the Petit Journal said in discussing the address.

French authorities unanimously believed the President's speech will have a definite effect upon development of the experts' plan, because it dispels Europe's constant hope that the United States would consent to a discussion of war debts in connection with her participation in a reparations settlement along the lines laid down in the Dawes report.

Pertinax, well-informed political writer, saw the force of domestic political pressure in the President's remarks on the foreign situation, saying:

"The United States already has started its presidential campaign battle, and it is apparent the Japanese are not the only people who are going to suffer hard knocks as a result."

All in all France felt today that there has been no essential change in the American position and that the possibility of at least getting a reduction in her debt to America in connection with the reparations settlement still is as remote as ever.

Gives MacDonald a Few Weeks.

LONDON, April 24—The Labor Government has only a few more weeks in office before a vital division comes that will necessitate its resignation and a general election, Sir Kingsley Wood, M. P., writing in the "Wesleyan Methodist," declares.

men in endorsing candidates on the Republican tickets, thus deserting the principle of independent political action by Labor.

The forces of farmers and industrial workers of the State of Illinois must be united to be represented effectively at the June 17th Convention. This is the only hope for success in the November elections.

For this purpose the undersigned Provisional Committee hereby issues a Call for a State Farmer-Labor Convention to be held at LABOR TEMPLE, PEORIA, ILL., ON MAY 18, 1924, AT 9:00 A .M.

Invited to send delegates to this Convention are: All existing working-class groups, political or industrial; local unions; central labor bodies; co-operative, fraternal and farmers organizations and others, who endorse the principles as set forth.

The purpose of this Convention will be to create an organization in the State of Illinois which will be represented at the June 17th Convention at St. Paul, Minn., to adopt a State platform and to nominate a full ticket for the State elections in November, 1924. Name of this organization as well as national affiliation to be left open for decision by the Convention.

This Convention will entail some financial expenditures. But it will be money well spent and each organization sending delegates to these conventions are urged to contribute financially as liberally as possible to help defray the expenses.

Fraternally yours.

SUB-DISTRICT 4 HAS CONVENTION IN AUBURN, ILL.

Watt continued the intetrogation of Young, and called a local union president to show that a conspiracy was on tap to break up Sub-district 4. It seemed much like "wearing the shoe" when Young, the "Joker," produced a letter, under date of April 7, and stated that Mine Superintendent Brennan, whose name had been drawn into the controversy, had told him of the letter on April 5. This brought a hearty laugh from the delegates and removed from everybody's mind the wonder why Young had failed to be elected a delegate, and strengthened the wonderment as to how he was elected board member.

In all his answers Young, who is an administration supporter, showed that his strongest points were inconsistency and evasion. The whole discussion on "docking" brought forth the disgusting truth of the situation, showing clearly how the operators take advantage of the existing determination of the "machine" in the miners' union to rid themselves of the radicals.

LET SULLIVAN AND FOELL REMEMBER JUDGE JENKINS

The two injunction judges, "Dennie" Sullivan and "Charley" Foell, have slowed up in their attack on the garment strike.

Judge Charles M. Foell, on Monday, postponed until next week the cases of the strikers brought before him.

Judge Dennis Sullivan, on Tuesday, did the same thing, but the postponement was made until May 6th. This in spite of the fact that "Dennie" had been away on a vacation, and was supposed to have recuperated sufficiently to renew his unscrupulous attack on the garment strike.

• • • •

There is only one conclusion that can be drawn from this development in the heroic struggle of the garment workers. The injunction judges, Sullivan, first, and then Foell, have been nonplussed by the courageous front presented by the strike pickets.

• • • •

It is, therefore, a good time to ask Sullivan and Foell to remember another injunction judge, Jenkins by name. Jenkins in a famous Northern Pacific Railroad case, in an injunction that has since become notorious, directly prohibited the quitting of work. This Jenkins' injunction was bitterly fought by the workers with the result that even the capitalist courts were forced to acknowledge that the quitting of work may not be enjoined.

Another infamous injunction was that the Judges Taft ("Bill the Fat"—now on the supreme court) and Ricks, in 1893, which directed the engineers who were employed by connecting railways to handle the cars of the Ann Arbor and Michigan railway, whose engineers were on strike.

We cite these things for the benefit of the Injunction Judges, Foell and Sullivan, of the vintage of 1924.

Foell and Sullivan claim that they know the law. They have tried to tell the strike pickets what the law is. They have tried to do it with dark threats, and very apparent efforts at intimidation.

Jenkins thought he knew what the law was in the Northern Pacific Case when he ordered the men not to quit work.

But the determined spirit of workers, struggling for their rights, made a joke of the legal outlook of Jenkins, Taft and Ricks.

• • • •

Foell and Sullivan didn't try to stop the garment workers from going out on the strike in which they are now engaged.

Foell and Sullivan have not tried to force other workers to take the places of those who are out on strike.

If they tried to do these things, that judges tried to do twenty and thirty years ago, they would be laughed at.

But they think it is safe and "legal" to stop the strikers from picketing their jobs in an effort to get the strikebreakers to join them.

At least they made the effort on behalf of the struck garment bosses. They recognized the scores of arrests that were made. They listened to the silly attacks, the lies and the misrepresentations, of the bosses' lawyers. They listened to this in all seriousness, scowled at the strike pickets and threatened direful things to the strikers before him, if they went back on the picket line while their cases were pending.

• • • •

But Judges Foell and Sullivan have postponed the cases, perhaps indefinitely. Perhaps the fighting spirit of the strikers has forced them to think things over.

In any event, their efforts to stop picketing, in the year 1924, will be just as laughable, in the years to come, as were the efforts of Jenkins to stop workers from going on the strike, and the attempt of Taft and Ricks to force the workers, not on strike, to scab on their fellows who had walked off their jobs.

• • • •

Foell and Sullivan, like Jenkins, Taft and Ricks, will learn that laws change from time to time. Even laws made to protect property change as the years go on. And when the workers finally come into power the law books of the Foells, the Sullivans and the Tafts will be put away in museums for curiosities, and looked upon as the joke books of the ages.

ing, rather than surrender the files in the keeping of the department of justice. I gladly gave up a post of honor rather than contribute to a treasonable cause."

Mr. Daugherty charged that "pilgrimages to Moscow by United States senators" had been arranged for by the Communist authorities after their efforts to capture American labor organizations had failed.

"There (in Russia), no doubt, new inspirations were advanced," he continued, "as to what steps should be taken to cripple the government of the United States and crumble the columns that support it.

"It may fairly be inferred that one step in this direction was to capture, by deceit and design, as many members of the senate of the United States as possible and to spread thruout Washington city and in the cloakrooms of Congress a poison gas as deadly as that which sapped and destroyed brave soldiers in the late war."

Says Records Give Proof.

Mr. Daugherty said department of justice records showed that a communist movement began in the United States three years ago to destroy confidence "in our form of government."

"To this end," he continued, "confidence in men of both political parties had to be destroyed, when they could not be dominated by the directors of the movement. At any cost, by any conceivable method, cruel, criminal, or murderous, the character of men in authority had of necessity to be assassinated."

The former attorney general declared that official government records, obtained from official Russian sources, "contribute indisputable proof" of the assertions he made.

The former attorney general then paid his respects to the Daugherty committee. He declared it was well known that a majority of this committee "would make an adverse report without charges and without evidence."

Daugherty Makes Bolsheviks.

WASHINGTON, April 24.— "Such unfaithful servants as Daugherty and Fall have made more bolsheviks in America in a few weeks than a thousand Soviet agents could make in a decade," Senator Wheeler, Montana, declared today, in replying to former Attorney General Daugherty's "defense speech" in Columbus last night.

Wheeler's statement to the press was provoked by what he termed "Daugherty's cunning, but baseless insinuation," that he and Senator Brookhart, Iowa, were "inspired" by Soviet officials to investigate the Department of Justice.

"In his array of distorted truths," said Wheeler, "Daugherty has taken refuge behind the last resort of modern knaves striving desperately to divert the public mind from their own corruption. When all else fails, they trot out the 'Red peril' bugaboo. His pitifully absurd smoke screen will only meet with ridicule.

"But this discredited official does not exaggerate the dangers that threaten the republic if the Daughertys and the Falls are not driven from office. That is the danger the senate committee, by baring the corruption in the Department of Justice, is seeking to avert.

MORMON SMOOT RUSHING MELLON TAX REDUCTIONS

Bonus Payments Put Off Until 1925

WASHINGTON, April 24.— With the bonus bill safely upon its way to becoming a law, Chairman Reed Smoot prepared to call up the Mellon bill as reported by his finance committee. The bill makes drastic cuts in surtaxes on the rich.

The bonus bill in its passage displayed potential strength enough to become a law even tho President Coolidge affixes his veto, as congressional leaders expect.

No Payments Until 1925.

By amending the bill, they provided that no payments can be made to a soldier until after July 1, 1925. By that time, the administration and Congress elected next November, will have taken office and will have had plenty of time to put over a cash measure.

The bonus will go to conference before Friday, when slight defferences between the Senate and house bills will be ironed out. It will get to President Coolidge by the first of next week.

Terms of Bonus Bill.

Here is what the bonus bill, as passed by the Senate and House, provides:

Compensation to veterans on the basis of $1 a day for home service and $1.25 a day for overseas service, with maximum basic compensation of $500 and $625 respectively for the two classes of service. The first sixty days of service are not counted in computing basic compensation.

To veterans to whom $50 or less is due, payment in cash.

To veterans due $50 or more, the issuance of 20-year paid up endowment insurance policies. The face value of the policies is figured by increasing the basic compensation due the veteran by 25 per cent plus compound interest on the figure so obtained at the rate of 4½ per cent for 20 years.

The maximum value of a policy obtainable for an overseas veteran of long service is between $1600 and $1800.

Policy holders may borrow up to 90 per cent of the value of their policies from banks after three years.

Denver Nurses Militant.

Denver, Colo., April 24.—A strike of nurses employed in Denver hospitals, where the basic working day exceeds twelve hours, was threatened here today, when the Denver Nurses Association, at a special meeting, decided not to work in hospitals that demanded more than a 12-hour day.

MORGAN-DAWES PLAN

"Thus Germany becomes a vassal state and German industry pays an annual tribute to allied industry that will hold it in a position of inferiority for generations to come.' The treaty began the work of subjugating German industry; the Dawes report caps the climax. There is nothing more to do except to collect.

Busy Business Men.

"General Dawes and his associates are business men and economic experts. They make this clear in the first paragraph of the report: "We have approached our task as business men anxious to obtain effective results." Consequently there is nothing in the report that reflects any interest in the human problems involved. It is exactly such a document as might be penned by a reorganization committee in charge of a bankrupt railroad. The one great object of the reorganizers is to get the concern back on a dividend paying basis.

"How is this end to be accomplished in the case of Germany?

"The Dawes report makes two general recommendations—one dealing with the sources from which Germany might draw the funds with which to meet her treaty obligations, and the other dealing with the stabilization of German finance. Both of these recommendations are made on the supposition that the German people will continue to meet the obligations imposed by the treaty during at least fifty years.

The New German Bank.

"The Dawes plan centers around the creation of a new German bank, with a capital of 400,000,000 gold marks, and a board of directors, supervised by a general board consisting of seven Germans and seven foreigners, one from each of the following countries: Belgium, France, Italy, Britain, Holland, Switzerland and the United States. The new bank is to be administered by a German president, who will act as general manager, but the final authority will rest with one of the foreign members of the general board, who is to be known as the commissioner. Altho a vote of ten out of the fourteen members of the general board is necessary for a decision, the real key to the German banking situation will rest outside of Germany.

"The capital of the new bank is to be subscribed partly in Germany and partly abroad. The relative amounts are left to the determination of the general board.

"There are two significant things about this bank—characteristics that earmark the entire Dawes report: it is to have entire charge of the issue of paper money in Germany for the next fifty years, and it is to be a private bank, or, as the report calls it, a 'bankers' bank.'

"The right to issue money, in any modern community, is so vital to public affairs and to private business that it is the real pivotal in the economic system. In modern times this right has been generally regarded as a function of government. Sometimes the right to issue money has been delegated to private banks, as it is in the United States, but only under the most stringent restrictions. In the case of the Dawes bank, however, 'the German government is to participate in the profits of the bank, but the bank is to be entirely free from governmental control or interference.' Thus a private financial institution, under the direction of foreigners, is given charge of the financial affairs of Germany for a half century.

"There are three sources from which the treaty payments are to be derived. With the stabilization of German economic life under the new fiscal system, the German state budget, by 1928-9, will be able to yield 1,250 million gold marks per year. The railroads, recapitalized, and in private hands, will yield 660,000,000 gold marks per year. Another considerable sum will be provided by a bonded debt of 5,000 million gold marks to be placed on the industries of Germany. After 1929 these three sources are counted upon for 2,500 million gold marks per year. The period during which these amounts are to be paid is left indeterminate, but is presumably 50 years at the least, as that is the length of time during which the bank charter will run.

"As an immediate source of revenue, the sales of bank stock, of railway stock and of industrial bonds would provide ready capital for the organization of the bank and for the deliveries in kind that are to be made as heretofore under the conditions of the treaty.

Currency Stabilization.

"German expenses can be met under next year's budget, provided that the necessity for reparation payments can be suspended for one year, and provided that they can then be resumed gradually during the years up to 1929. This plan is suggested.

"The new bank will meanwhile have provided a stable currency, backed by a 33 1-3 per cent gold reserve, and Germany 'ought, in 1926, to be making rapid strides toward complete recovery and should in three years, by 1928, reach a normal economic condition.' When that point is attained, the Allies should 'share in the increased prosperity of Germany.'

A Set of Harness.

"This Dawes report was drafted by, the leading economic and financial experts of the allied countries. It may, therefore, be taken as representing a plan which has the approval of business men who are dealing with the problem, not in the heat of passion, but in the calm of committee room. The result is a masterpiece.

"No more effective set of social harness has ever been built by modern imperialists. The defeated imperial rival is not only to be saddled with a heavy indemnity as was France in 1871, but the railroads, the industrials and the financial institutions of the vanquished country are to be placed under the control of the victor, until, in the opinion of the latter, the vanquished have paid 'enough.' By the terms of the document, this will be, at the least, a half century. During that entire period the workers of Germany are to carry on their backs not only the private business interests of Germany (made secure against revolution by having part of the internal economic control of the country under foreign domination), but the ruling classes of seven capitalist governments, who will suck Germany dry of any surplus that may accumulate out of the proceeds of German industry."

him a pension. They finally gave him only $18 a month. I have lived in the town of Pullman all my life, and I know what the Pullman Company is. I am in this strike with you to a finish."

Shops Are Idle.

No work was done yesterday at the steel shops. Before the week is out, several thousand men are expected to be standing idle. Already the entir plant has been slowed up. The material is being piled up, but not a rivet is being driven, and not a car has been assembled since the strike. There were no scabs observed at work today.

A rumor has reached the strikers that Francis Gunn overstepped himself in his high handed attitude toward the strikers. It is said by some of the foremen working in the shops that the Pullman Company would be glad of a compromise. But the strikers refuse to compromise.

J. P. McCarthy, of the DAILY WORKER, adressed the strikers yesterday. "If you have any self-respect and regard for your class you will not only join the union, but will see to it that it is a live local. The time has come when the workers of the Pullman car shops have got to stand up and fight for a decent living wage."

Organizer John Holmgren told the strikers that the business men live by selling merchandise, and the only way the worker can live under capitalism is by selling himself. "You are selling your labor power for yourself and your family," said Holmgren. "But unless you have a union you have nothing to say about the wages and conditions that will govern your work. When you have an organization behind you, you can make the bosses recognize you. You can stand up and be real men. When workers belong to a uninon, when they think, then they have begun to tear the shackles off their bodies and become free men."

Several thousand copies of the handbills were distributed before acting captain Wheeler suppressed them. The handbills declare:

COUNTERFEIT WAGES!

"The company said that one reason for the cut was because the value of the dollar has increased about 10 per cent. Try that on the landlord boys, and get 10 per cent cut off your rent. If YOUR dollar is worth 10 per cent more so is the company's dollar, which would make 20 per cent profit for the company on a 10 per cent cut. But when the cut runs from 10 per to 40 per cent on each man's dollar some figuring is necessary to show the millions robbed from your familes. The company offered to put speed checkers and stop-watches on the men to destroy if possible any chance of working like human beings. Pullman today is the highest speeded car shop in the world. Speed, speed and more speed. Overwork, wage-cuts, sickness, despondency and death.

"EVERY PULLMAN CAR SHOP EMPLOYEE IS INVITED TO ATTEND THE DAILY MEETINGS AT 10 A. M. IN STANCIKS HALL, 205 E. 115th STREET.

"LEND A HAND! HELP YOUR OWN CAUSE"

The strikers declare they will continue to picket. They have been instructed to picket peacefully, and not to congregate in large groups. "We don't want any rough stuff," a striker told the DAILY WORKER. "We're not going to give the Pullman Company a chance to start any disturbance. We will act like gentlemen, but no matter how many policemen the Pullman Company secures to intimidate us we are going to win the strike.

NEW ARRESTS OF GARMENT PICKETS BARES BOSS PANIC

and that they are likely to complete their victory over the garment bosses sooner than some had expected.

If DAILY WORKER calculations are correct, the dress manufacturers have had to spend nearly $80,000 to hold out this long against the union. Even with the help of the Employers' Association, this is a severe loss to the garment bosses, as they must bear the brunt of the finanical burden themselves.

Expelled to Attend Convention.

Representatives of the expelled Chicago garment workers are planing to attend the Boston convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers, Union, begining May 5th. The Trade Union Educational League will raffle a $50 radio set to help the militant Chicago workers in their fight for reinstatement into the union. The raffle will take place at the T. U. E. Labor Candidate Of Mexico Is Now Straddling Fence

(By The Federated Press)

MEXICO CITY, April 24.—General Plutarco Elias Calles, labor candidate for the presidency of Mexico is straddling. He went a few days ago to the grave of Emiliano Zapata, founder of the Agrarian movement of Mexico, and on his grave swore that he would carry out the principle of this great leader that the earth belong to those who cultivate it. The reactionary press began an attack on Calles saying that Zapata was an anarchist who believed in the destruction of all private property and that it would never do for the next president of Mexico to advocate any such principles.

One day later Calles issued another statement, saying in part: "We do not intend to disturb property or wealth. But we think that the conquests which have been made by the workers and peasants in the most civilized countries can be established by us in Mexico thru education, moral stimuli, economic stimuli, and thru advanced laws.

Rickert Crook In

PITTSBURGH, Pa., April 24.—Allegheny County voters selected Ralph Beaver Strassburger, Norristown publisher, as delegate at large to the Republican National Convention, over Governor Gifford Pinchot by a majority of more than 50,000, according to returns early today from Tuesdays primary election.

Other delegates at large—selected by the county voters to go to the Cleveland Convention in June—are Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, Senators Pepper and Reed, congressman William S. Vare, Harry Baker and Mrs. Elizabeth Price Martin.

The Party at Work

Two Hundred or Twelve Hundred

Are there two hundred or twelve hundred Communist branches in the United States?

The answer to this question is being given in the response to the appeal for the Farmer-Labor Party Campaign fund. This far about two hundred branches have responded to the call for funds. There are over twelve hundred branches listed in the national office of the Party.

What are the other thousand branches doing? Do they believe that the crystalization of a mass, class Farmer-Labor Party in the United States representing a million organized industrial workers and farmers is of little importance to the revolutionary movement in this country.

The goal which is before our Party at the present time, yea, which, we are trying to realize thru the Farmer Labor Party campaign means the greatest achievement in the history of our party. Branches which have not responded to the Party appeal for funds should take the matter up in their organizations immediately. The national office must have the support of the entire party if it is to obtain results.

Following are the branches which have reported during the last week:

Christopher Branch	$3.00
Indiana Harbor Russian Br.	5.00
Boston Russian	7.00
Detroit Lithuanian	1.00
Revere English	2.00
Maynard Russian	6.00
Providence	12.00
Van Etten Lithuanian	7.00
Baltimore English	2.65
Buffalo German	5.00
Englewood English	5.00
Irving Park English	3.00
Bellaire South Slavic Br.	11.00
Los Angeles Lithuanian	10.00
Lowell Finnish	10.00
Pittsburgh Russian	1.00
Chicago Lithuanian	5.00
Pittsburgh Lithuanian	4.00

The Farmer Labor Party Campaign Fund is still far short of the total which is required for this work. Only about $2,000 out of $15,000 needed in this campaign, has been raised. The Party branches which have not responded must take this question up and make their response at once.

He stated that the branch literature agents will organize for a wide distribution of extra copies of the DAILY WORKER May Day Special, as well as other literature and advertising matter, thru the unions and around great industrial plants, such as the Crane Company, the Western Electric and like places—wherever best results seem promising. Three hundred labor organizations have already received announcements of the coming festive event.

Foolish Workers Put Their Faith In Rockefeller

BAYONNE, N. J., April 24.—More than 750 strikers at the Vacuum Oil Company's plant have put their faith in the golden rule professions of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and returned to work without their 10 per cent raise. The men have no union and are unable to fight the company. The company has made a few verbal concessions to them such as a company union, recreation shops, and insurance. But the only wage promise is that the employer will pay as much as neighboring plants.

Dawes, Injunction Booster, Given A Knock By A. F. of L.

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, April 24.—Fear that Chas. G. Dawes, advertised as the author of the reparations settlement scheme in Europe will come home to take the Republican vice-presidential nomination, has led the American Federation of Labor to issue a warning against his anti-union activities. He is expected to attempt to put an anti-union plank in the party platform.

Dawes and Pershing were the promoters of the "Minute Men of The Constitution," organized in Chicago some time ago as an American imitation of the Italian fascisti. As chairman of the board of the Central Trust Co., of Chicago, Dawes has been leader in a campaign of eulogy of Daugherty's injunction against the railroad shop strikers. He has demanded the "open shop" in and out of season. He has let it be known that "Hell an Maria" would treat the trade union crowd "rough" whenever his time came to exercise official power.

Equity Prepares To Produce Own Plays In Lockout

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, April 24.—In preparation for the partial lockout of the Actors' Equity Association, American Federation of Labor, expected in New York city June 1, the union has rented the Manhattan Opera House for that month. In this way the union plans to get the business of the delegates to the Democratic national convention if there is a lockout.

"During the strike of 1919 Equity rented the Lexington Opera House and presented plays, not only giving work to a large number of our members, but making money with which to carry on our work," says President John Emerson. Equity is now producing its own play at the Forty-eighth street Theater. If there is a lockout, many managers friendly to the union will continue their shows.

Pittsburgh Holding Important Meeting For Foreign-Born

PITTSBURGH, Pa., April 24.—The Western Pennsylvania Council for the Protection of Foreign Born will hold a most important meeting at Walton Hall, 220 Stanwix Street, at 2 p. m. on Sunday, April 27th. All delegates should attend this conference. This hall is near the Wabash depot.

"With the passage of the hideous Johnson bill we may expect a campaign of bigotry and intolerance such as has never been witnessed before" says a statement by the Council. This cannot be met by spasmodic efforts. There must begin a systematic campaign of education. The fact about the foreign-born people of the United States must be made known everywhere. The foreign-born people themselves must become American citizens and make their economic and political power felt.

"This means that the next meeting of the WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL FOR PROTECTION OF FOREIGN BORN will be by far the most important in its history. The final bill as acted upon by Congress and the vote of the respective congressmen and senators will be reported together with definite plans for action. Every organization must send delegates and get new affiliations as rapidly as possible to build this up into a great permanent and powerful organization.

American Workers Asked To Aid In War on the Chinese

(By Crusader Service.)

CANTON, China, April 24.—American workers are implored to help the Chinese against the capitalist interference of Secretary of State Hughes in a manifesto issued by Dr. Sun Yat Sen's Chinese National Party.

The manifesto says: "Your capitalist democrats and republicans find outlets for their capital in China with the slogan of Good Friend to China. But what does this good friend mean when this month witnessed the fact that American battleships are stationed in Pearl River at Canton as an armed demonstration against the Chinese customs surplus being used by the administration of the Canton government?

"The workers of America have fought against the league of nations; why not against the participation of the United States in Chinese affairs? The Canton government, under Dr. Sun Yat Sen, is fighting to throw off the yoke of militarism in China. You should come forward in support of the Canton government in its struggle against the military action of the American battleships in Canton's River."

Beer Bombers Have Their Fun As Dicks War On Strikers

Windows in the neighborhood were shattered and the saloon, which has been closed for some time, fired by the bomb. The damage is estimated at $13,000.

That the bombing is renewal of Chicago's beer war, is the original theory worked out by the Sherlock Holmeses drawing the city's pay.

Call On Church To Fight Injunctions In Labor Disputes

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 24.—A call to the Church to oppose the use of injunctions in labor disputes was adopted without dissent by the conference of over 560 Methodist students representing 112 universities and colleges. The students also declared for collective bargaining, regulation of child labor, on a "Christian basis," and for "The increased socialization and control of public utilities and natural resources and all essentials of life."

Elimination of racial lines in all industries and professions was demanded, and also in public conveyances, in school activities and in the administration of law.

Two hundred and fifty delegates took part in a meeting of the Fellowship of Youth for Peace, the American wing of the international youth movement pledged to work for the abolition of war. The conference called on President Coolidge to veto the anti-Japanese clause of the immigration bill.

FILIPINO PRESS HITS WOOD'S VIEW OF INDEPENDENCE

Hopes U. S. Congress Will Not Be Influenced

MANILA, P. I., April 24.—The entire Filipino press, voicing the sentiments of the Filipino people, denounced in no uncertain terms the uncalled for and unjustified conclusion of Governor General Wood that strife and disorder would result if the Filipinos were granted their independence. They state that history and actual facts prove that the main trait of the Filipinos is their inborn love for peace.

The papers are one in the belief that the American Congress will not in any way be influenced by the wholesale indictment of the Filipino people by Governor General Wood in his report to the secretary of war, "which indicates, among other things, a clear confession of the failure of his policies in the Philippines to the extent of losing his calmness before his waning prestige as a great administrator."

Filipinos characterize his statement as similar to the bugaboo stories related to children to create fear in their hearts. They further say: "It is not enough to say that we justly ask what is beneficial for us. The governor general should state what suggestions he has looking toward the establishment of a permanent policy and which will assure progress of Americans and Filipinos and their future relationship. This can never be done as long as the governor general merely keeps repeating the rhetorical phrase, 'heartless betrayal of our trust,' when referring to the aspirations of the Filipino people."

A committee composed of members from all political parties and prominent Filipino business men, headed by Thomas Earnshaw, has been created for the purpose of staging a public demonstration against the attitude of Governor General Wood, as expressed in his cable to the secretary of war.

New York Typos Plan Fund To Fight Magazine Bosses

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, April 24.—Possibility of an employers' wage drive against compositors on magazines and dissatisfaction over the recent compromise agreement forced upon newspaper compositors in New York has led to the appointment of a committee to consider raising a large defense fund for Typographical union, local 6. A meeting of the union took this action following the proposal of one member that a million dollar fund be raised by assessing every member $1 a week between now and July, 1926, when the present newspaper contract expires.

Silk Workers Strike In Reading Against 50 Per Cent Slash

(By The Federated Press)

READING, PA., April 24.—A 50 per cent cut in wages of skilled workers at the Quaker Silk Mills in Reading brought on a strike that promises victory because present wages are so low that no strikebreakers can be secured. The old rate was from $35 to $45 a week. The owners now offer from $18 to $20. Broken promises by the management are a contributing factor to the strike.

(By The Federated Press)

ST. LOUIS, April 24.—Union furniture and piano movers and helpers in St. Louis have won a signal victory over the open shop. A strike lasting one week has secured renewal of union shop agreements with the employers' association, and won an increase of $5.10 a week in wages, benefiting 750 workers. She is a graduate of the University of Chicago and author of a textbook, "A Study in Occupations."

Latvian Industry Ruined; Anti-Soviet Policy A Failure

(By The Federated Press)

RIGA, Latvia, April 24.—Out of a population of 2,100,000 there are 34,000 industrial workers in Latvia. Before the war there were 150,000. This shows how low production is in this once flourishing district.

Of the 34,000 industrial workers, 13,000 are organized in six national and 14 local organizations. The factory workers' union numbers 2250 members, the railwaymen 2150, book binders 2000, seamen 1100, postal workers 1030, stage artists 80. The largest single union is the dockers in Windau, numbering 1700 members. The agricultural workers' union is estimated at 2000 to 3000 members, but no definite figures are available. There are no clerical and fascist trade unions, but there is the usual struggle between Socialists and Communists for labor control.

With one-half the period for the 10,000 new subscription drive almost over, leaders in the campaign are rapidly approaching the quota set for them. After a bitter struggle for first place Warren, Ohio, suffered from a week of inactivity and surrendered its position to Superior, Wis., which now has undisputed hold on the top with 86 per cent of its quota reached. Miles City, Mont., is making another bid for fame and after a quiet week last week has again come to life bringing its rating up to 80 per cent. For the leaders it is no longer a struggle to see whether the quota can be reached but to see how far it can be surpassed.

Kansas City, Mo., which made the suggestion that prize banners be given to the winning city, now seems to think that having made the proposal it is only proper that it should win the prize in its division. The net results of the week's activity in the "show me" city is a boost in percentage from 44 to 54.

Toledo Shows Its Class Again.

In the cities with quotas of more than 100, the week shows extraordinary activity. Toledo, Ohio, has slipped into the lead with a smashing total of 36 new subs for the period and an increase in percentage over last week of from 37.5 to 58. Brooklyn, N. Y., which has held the lead for big cities almost from the beginning slipped a cog and now must show its stuff if it hopes to catch the live bunch from Toledo. The latter has as fine an aggregation of DAILY WORKER sub getters as can be found in the couuntry. Comrade Earl Merritt is proving a worthy team-mate of Comrade Harvitt while Comrades Beck, Davy, Stephenson, Beuhler, Willnecker and a dozen others make up an organization which can well challenge any set of DAILY WORKER boosters in the country.

Detroit has raised itself in the world again with a total of 39 new subs for the week which brings it up to an almost respectable percentage of 24.5. Philadelphia and Pittsburgh are keeping up the good work and give evidence of reaching their quota at the very least. Minneapolis, slow in getting started, is working up speed. Chicago was asleep for the week.

The Stickers Will Win!

Records made by dozens of cities thus far and the rate at which the subscriptions continue to come prove conclusively that THE DAILY WORKER has taken a firm hold in the minds and in the activities of the real militants. Those who will win in this campaign are the ones who continue to work for THE DAILY WORKER day in and day out. In such ways are all struggles won and as the strength and prestige of THE DAILY WORKER is gaining thru the loyal and steady support of the active comrades, so the strength and power of the labor movement is on the gain. The stickers will win! The victory in the campaign for THE DAILY WORKER and the victory of the workers will be theirs.

Marx and Proletarian Dictatorship

By A. G. BOSSE

THERE is a United Front of the "yellow Socialists"—the American Socialist Labor Party, the Socialist Party, and the German Social Democrats—to prove that the Communists of Russia and of the world are wickedly non-Marxian in their advocacy of the Dictatorship of the Proletariat. The Socialist Labor Party in their edition of Marx's Gotha Programme attempt to prove that Marx didn't mean what he said when he predicted the "revolutionary dictatorship of the proletariat" as the only possible transition between capitalism and Communism. Grandmother Kautsky has for some years now been proving the dictatorship to be unhistorical, from the point of view of Marxism. Our Socialist Party publishes in their new weekly, the "New Leader," February 16, 1924, another diatribe against Lenin for being so violent and Tataric and militaristic as to preach dictatorship—and Kautsky in his anility says it for them. In the "New Leader" of January 19, 1924, Hillquit undertakes to demonstrate the incorrectness of the dictatorship—altho unwillingly admitting that to destroy a capitalist dictatorship such as Italy's or Hungary's revolution and dictatorship may be necessary.

A Lie Scotched.

It is about time that we once for all scotched this snake, or rather, killed it. Marx and Engels did believe in and preach the dictatorship of the proletariat, consistently and actively for forty years. Hillquit says that Marx merely "coined the phrase"; Kautsky calls it a "single word" . . . a shibboleth (wortchen) in his "Dict. of the Prolet." (Germ. ed., page 20); the Socialist Labor Party tells us that Marx's reference in the Gotha Programme is "his only direct reference to and authority for the phrase . . . pulled in to illumine a point . . . offhand and incidental." I will not believe that this is ignorance; it is deliberate misinformation and falsification. I shall prove this broad charge by direct quotations from Marx and Engels, indicating the sources. Even Kautsky himself shall testify to his lies.

In the "Class Struggles in France, 1848 to 1850," Marx says of the Paris proletariat, "—only the defeat first convinced it of the truth that the slightest improvement in its condition within the bourgeois republic remains a utopia. . . . In place of its demands . . . arose the keen revolutionary battle-cry: Overthrow of the bourgeoisie! Dictatorship of the working class!" (Neue Rheinische Zeitung, Jan., 1850.)

Again in 1852 in a letter to Weydemayer (published in Neue Zeit, Vol. 25, part 2, p. 164) Marx considers himself the real author of the theory of the dictatorship, and shows it to be one of his chief contributions to historical thinking. "As far as I am concerned, I can't claim to have discovered the existence of classes in modern society or their strife against one another. . . . I have added as a new contribution the following propositions: (1) that the existence of classes is bound up with certain phases of material production; (2) that the class struggle leads necessarily to the Dictatorship of the Proletariat; (3) that this dictatorship is but the transition to the abolition of all classes and to the creation of a society of free and equal." Does this sound like the Socialist Labor Party charge that "the uninitiated might easily conceive the notion that his (Marx's) criticism constitutes a defense of the dictatorship as against its opponents?"

Engels-Kautsky Correspondence.

Kautsky says of the Communists, "Its adherents insist, to be sure that their cult of violence is ancient wisdom, and the outcome of the researches of the most profound of our thinkers, Karl Marx, they say, preached force." This dotard himself said at a more honest moment, in 1910 or so, "Marx and Engels hammered out the idea of the dictatorship of the proletariat, which Engels stubbornly defended in 1891, shortly before his death—the idea that the political autocracy of the proletariat is the sole form in which it can realize its control of the state." (Trotzky, "Defense of Terrorism," London, 1921, p. 21). Kautsky had to admit this because Engels wrote him a letter on June 29, 1891, urging this tactic upon him in place of the "dangerous opportunism" of the Erfurt Programme. How pleased Kautsky was with this advice can be seen from his characterization of it as political autocracy. The rule of the working class as autocracy, foresooth!

Marx further shows how seriously he meant this theory in an article sent to an Italian socialist review in 1873. Let our Galahads of democracy take what comfort they can from his firm belief in the armed overthrow of the bourgeois state, in the revolutionary proletarian dictatorship, and in the transitional proletarian state (instead of the syndicalist idea of immediately abolishing the state and substituting for it that patented industrial unionism of the Socialist Labor Party) Marx writes, "If the political struggle of the working class assumes a revolutionary form; if the workers, in place of the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie, set up their own revolutionary dictatorship, then they commit a terrible crime and offer an insult to principle; because, foresooth, the workers, in order to meet the miserable, gross requirements of the moment, in order to crush the resistance of the capitalist class, cause the State to assume a revolutionary and transitional form, instead of laying down their arms and abolishing the State." (Neue Zeit, 1913-14, Year

Now let us take up Marx's famous "only" reference to the dictatorship in the Gotha Programme letter to Bracke, in 1875. He says in the previous paragraph that he will speak of the changes the State will undergo in the future, that he will proceed "scientifically," and he then tells us that during the transition period the State "can be nothing else but the revolutionary dictatorship of the proletariat" (bold-face Marx's). Altho Marx and Engels repeatedly propagated the theory of proletarian dictatorship from 1847 to 1891, our friends of the Socialist Party, the Socialist Labor Party, and the Social Democrats insist that there exists only a single, incidental mention of it. To give a brief historical survey of the theory, which runs like a red thread thru the writings of both, I shall quote from their works written within this period, 1847—"the struggle of class against class . . . means a complete revolution"; "the Communists . . . openly declare that their ends can be attained only by the forcible overthrow . . . of the ruling classes. . . . The proletariat established its rule by means of the violent overthrow of the capitalist class;" "The first step in the revolution by the working class is to raise the proletariat to the position of ruling class." 1848—"there is only one means of shortening, simplifying and concentrating the torturing death agonies of society—only one means—revolutionary terrorism." 1850—see quotations from "Class Struggles in France." 1852—see quotation from letter to Weydemayer. In 1871, in 1873, in 1875 Marx reaffirmed his belief in the dictatorship. Paul Lafargue in 1888, Kautsky himself in 1899, the Russian Social Democrats, Bolsheviks and Mensheviks, in 1903 all have stated their adherence to the theory of proletarian dictatorship. And then our Kautskys come along and tell us that Marx once accidentally mentioned a phrase, which the Russian Communists seized upon to justify their undemocratic rule.

Paris Commune.

I shall end my quotations with one or two by Engels, who is now being used by the reactionary socialists to cloak their treason. In 1891 he wrote that the "German philistine has lately been thrown again into wholesale paroxysms by the expression "dictatorship of the proletariat." How prophetic a statement would this be were Engels living today to see the convulsions of our philistines of the Yellow International. He went on, "Gentlemen, do you want to know what the dictatorship of the proletariat is like? Then look at the Paris Commune! That was the dictatorship of the proletariat." (Radek, "Prolet. Dict. and Terrorism," p. 23). Both Marx and Engels criticized the Commune for not having made greater use of the armed authority they held in their hands. To them the Commune was a very mild example of proletarian dictatorship. How they would have been overjoyed at the Soviets! The Paris Commune was not based on the teachings of Marxism, while the Russian Revolution was, and the results are before us, to the confusion of the Kautskys, Hillquits, MacDonalds thruout the world. In a work on the housing question written in 1872, Engels again speaks of the dictatorship as the transitional stage to the abolition of classes and of the state.

When Kautsky condemns the bloody terrorism of the Communist dictatorship in Russia, calling it a tyrannous rule of a minority, we can see how Marxian he becomes. When he speaks of the glorious trinity of Mussolini, Horthy and Lenin this Judas links himself with such pure democrats as Noske, Kerensky and MacDonald (this latter now become a militarist, butcher of Hindoos, and a strikebreaker). In answer to Lenin's charge of sophist and traitor, he calls Lenin a brute and says that such strong terms should not be used in intercourse between educated men, between gentlemen!

Democracy?—Dictatorship!

But both Kautsky and his satellite, Hillquit, are beginning to make some damaging admissions. They go so far as to say that when a brutal open dictatorship of the Fascisti confronts us, we may not always be able to avoid violence in retaliation and defense. They would permit a proletarian dictatorship in Hungary, Spain and Italy, and Kautsky will obligingly allow the Soviets to be overthrown by force and violence. But where democracy rules, in every other country in the world, the parliamentary fiction which cloaks the dictatorship of capitalism must not be disturbed. Mussolini proclaims a return to democracy (which should bring him back into the fold), plans to gerrymander the proletarian election districts, and to demand one thousand names for each nominee, with Fascist supervision of elections. Of course, Communist signers will not be persecuted—none of them will be butchered when the Fascisti fear their victory. Stinnes, against the great electoral power of the Social Democrats, puts his puppet into the chancellorship. The Greek strong man, Plastiras, confiscates all union bank deposits, declares trade unions illegal, and seizes their property, buildings and press. Daugherty here issues injunctions and outlaws strikes; the foremost "democracy" in the world uses agents provocateurs, raids political meetings of Communists and I. W. W., sends troops to break strikes, attempts to fingerprint, passport and inclose within a pale of settlement all foreign-born, and even naturalized radical workingmen.

32, Vol. 1, p. 40.)

Socialists Support Fascism.

To consider for a moment some of the other advanced countries of Europe, where Hillquit's "political democracy seems firmly established." Germany is now under Seeckt's military dictatorship of capitalism, the Communists are persecuted and hunted. The Social Democrats vote for dictatorship—but for whose? Hillquit, writing in January, chose not to know what had happened in Germany months before. The Social Democrats' "Vorwarts" publishes false documents on Communists' stores of arms, and further incites capitalist militarism against the proletariat. Poland is a democracy in which strikes are savagely repressed and the Socialist Daszynsky sells out to a military dictatorship; where thousands are jailed for being Communists or military unionists. Bulgaria is another Kautskian paradise where democracy ravages the land. Socialist Minister Kasakoff, aided by Wrangel's remnants is in a government that has executed 15,000 workers and peasants, murdered treacherously the imprisoned Communist leader, Blagoieff. Roumania, Jugo-Slavia, Esthonia, Finland, Latvia, Lithuania are other countries where the Communists are outlawed, jailed, murdered, by the thousands. And whatever happens to the Communists, the militant unionists share. Democratic Belgium has four to five hundred prisoners.

In the face of this panorama of virgin democracy, our Hillquit prophesies and hopes for electoral victories rather than revolution, and Kautsky tells us that democracy is making great progress on the mainland of Europe. When MacDonald sells out to a capitalist dictatorship, as his threats to India, his naval program, and his strikebreaking indicate, then will go the last pretense at democracy. What will Kautsky, Hillquit and Company say then? They have given us a hint. They will pray and work for the installation of democracy in Russia. The Proletarian Dictatorship of Russia "may and probably will fight its way to an order of social democracy."

Let Marx reduce to absurdity the treasonable pacifism, alternating with vicious militarism, which these professional students of Marxism exhibit in counselling their ever-diminishing following of honest workers to believe in democracy. "While awaiting the glorious social revolution, the workers are to be on their good behavior, to conduct themselves like the sheep of a well-fed stock, to let the government alone, to fear the police, honor the laws, and uncomplainingly permit themselves to be used as cannon-fodder." (1873).

"Nation's" Forced Admission.

Just as the writer was finishing this article, the "Nation" in its issue of March 19, 1924, published an editorial entitled "The New Masters of Europe." It at last recognizes capitalist dictatorships—as yet, in Europe only—and goes far beyond our "yellow Socialist" theoreticians in seeing in them not tyrannous Napoleonic despotisms of an individual, but class rule by capitalists. It tells us that the "decay of parliamentarism is an often-observed phenomenon"; it admits the truth of the statement that government is primarily charged with maintaining order, protecting industry and private business. When parliamentarism goes and business rules absolutely (our pacifistic intellectuals still refuse to see the former as the everyday guise of business rule), then the result is—Germany today: hours increased, wages lowered, starvation, and terrible misery, with proletarian revolution and proletarian dictatorship as the only escape. The editors of the "Nation" go so far as to see in France a dictatorship of bankers and large corporations; in Austria, Hungary and Germany, the absolute rule of international bankers, at present are impending. Our oil mess reveals even to the unwilling the American dictatorship. And yet Kautsky, Hillquit, et. al., talk of democracy? As Lecky with his twisted bourgeois ideology calls prostitution the protection of the family, so these "socialists" prostitute the working class to parliamentary democracy, and then call this method of capitalist dictatorship a protection. Our liberals at least will admit a fact which stares them in the face, even tho they don't understand its implications, even tho they look to MacDonald's imperialistic "pacifism" as a salvation. When the tribe of Kautsky admits, if they ever will, the futility of democracy, then will Marxism and Leninism be completely triumphant in words as they are in fact.

NEW YORK, April 24.—While showing off their new duds by walking up and down Fifth avenue, New York, Easter Sunday, the upper class had to witness a peace parade. "We have outlawed war between indviduals—why not between nations?" was the most frequent banner in the automobile parade of foreign delegates to the coming Washington conference, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.

Wallace Organizes Research Council For Pulp Bosses

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22.—A Northeastern Forest Research Council has been announced by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace to advise the forest experiment stations of New York and New England so that the newspaper bosses of the large eastern cities will not have to worry about their paper pulp supply.

The council is largely made up of timber-owning industries. It includes also spokesmen of wood-using industries and representatives of forestry schools, agricultural colleges and the state forest services of the region.

The council is not for research, but merely to consider the best means of stripping the forests so that the flood of advertising may not cease. The house building industry will receive some attention also, as a lumber shortage threatens it. Lumber workers are not part of the program of the council. They can look out for themselves. In fact, the pulp wood interests Wallace is working with recently assisted in railroading three representatives of the Lumber Workers' section of the Industrial Workers of the World in Maine, to prison for one to two year terms.

False Americanism And Bigotry In U. S., Says Cal. Schoolman

(By The Federated Press)

SANTA CRUZ, April 24.—Will C. Wood, California superintendent of schools, who kept the Better America Federation's propaganda out of the public schools, paid his respects to the state of the nation at the convention of California school principals here. "As a result of wartime propaganda," says Wood, "America today is the victim of false Americanism and medieval bigotry." He gave as an instance the charges of reactionaries that liberal thought in teaching made the schools hotbeds of radicalism.

American Dollar Diplomacy in Action

By JAY LOVESTONE.

ARTICLE IV.

Growth of Militarism.

The rule of dollar democracy by our financiers and industrialists at home has been translated into a regime dollar diplomacy abroad and in our vast colonial possesions. American democracy now truly rests upon a monarchy of gold and an aristocracy of finance.

In order to maintain control of our growing imperialist empire and sphere of influence and in order to serve American investors abroad the American government has been steadily developing and strengthening its military and naval machine. We have invested over $4,000,000,000 in our navy. The aim of the American navalists is to secure a navy second to none. The 1923 report of the Secretary of the Navy Denby demands a further increase in the American fighting ships, gunboats, submarines, and fast cruisers are specially recommended. From December 31, 1912 to December 31, 1922, the value of the American Navy has increased from $602,352,000 to $1,445,992,000 or an increase of 259.4 per cent.

The extent to which the United States has been militarized is clearly portrayed by the report of the Secretary of War for 1923 in the following: "During the past ten years, while the cost of national defense has been doubled, the regular army has increased its actual total strength from 92,035 to 132,834, the national guard from 120,802 to 160,598, the organized reserves from 0 to 78,338, and the total of the army of the United States from 212,000 to 371,770. This increase alone, considered in relations to the decrease in value of the dollar and the change in character of the army, (including addition of such elements as motor transportation, tanks, aviation, and chemical warfare service) would apparently justify a doubling of the total defense cost. In the same period, moreover, the number of citizens under training not as members of the army of the United States, has increased as follows: In the citizens military training camps from 0 to 31,000 and the reserve officers training corps (which corresponds to the unorganized military schools of the pre-war period) from 31,028 to 101,129. The total of individuals under training has thus increased from 243,865 to 504,010. From April 15, 1910 to January 1, 1920, the persons in military and naval service stations abroad rose from 55,608 to 117,238."

The national Defense Act of June 4, 1920, provides for one huge army consisting of the reguar army, the national guard, and the organized reserve including the officer reserve corps. The country has been divided into nine territorial areas to carry this scheme into effect. This policy strives for a mark in militarism never before attempted. It proposes to organize an army of two million in time of peace, the creation of a distinct and permanent military propagandist caste thruout this country. The duty of this caste is to stimulate militarism. Under this policy the Regular Army is to be used to garrison overseas possessions, the Coast Defenses, and instruct the National Guard and organized Reserves. The organized reserves "will be available for emergencies within the United States or elsewhere."

The Department of Commerce thru its Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and its Foreign Trade staff abroad, and the Department of State thru its diplomatic and consular staff abroad vie with the departments of War and Navy in rendering services to our imperialist exploiters. Congress has acted to help American capitalists find new sources of raw material needed by them in their manufacture and especially those sources of products now controlled by foreign interests. Thus we find the Secretary of Commerce say in his last 1923 report: "There are a number of necessary raw materials for the supply of which we are predominantly dependent on imports from foreign countries. Possibly as a result of the war, but more particularly during the past 18 months, there has been a growing tendency for producers of these commodities to combine in control of prices as against the American market. This is particularly the case in nitrates, tanning extracts, quinine, rubber, sisal, tin, cork, mercury, tungsten, and various minor minerals." Under authority of Congress, the Secretary's report says, an exhaustive examination of such combinations was undertaken by the department before the close of the fiscal year to determine first, the character and extent of the combinations themselves; second whether alternative sources of these raw materials could be stimulated and there natural competition induced; third, what relief could be obtained by stimulation of synthetic or substitute materials within our own borders; and fourth, what protective or retaliatory legislation could be undertaken?

Our employing class is preparing for a show down on all fronts in its struggle for imperialist supremacy. First of all the joint congressional reorganization committee is planning to submit to Congress a program aiming at a complete reorganization of the government machinery. The outstanding features of this plan are an increase in the centralization of power particularly in the hands of the executive division of the government. This obvious purpose of such proposals as giving the president an official assistant and consolidating the army and navy into one department of National Defense is to enable the government to function more swiftly and surely in case the working masses at home will display any restiveness over our new imperialist aggrandizement.

Besides the General Staff of the War Department has prepared tentative plans to mobilize over four hundred thousand officers and men at their home stations some time after the 1924 election. Army men are banking much on this maneuver which is the first of a series to be put over under the National Defense Act. This mobilization will be the first grand show of military force in the country since the armistice.

From reliable sources in Washington, I have received a report which discloses the plan of our big industrial and financial magnates to end the present choas characterizing the administration of our colonial affairs. The capitalists and bankers are sick and tired of having the authority over our insular possessions and customs collections in Central and South America divided in the hands of the War Department, Navy and Interior; Haiti, the Philippines, Porto Rico, and the customs receivership of San Domingo Zone are in the hands of the War Department; while the Virgin Islands and Guam are run by the Navy Department.

The people closest to the stock exchange and the White House have worked out a plan whereby the entire administration of insular affairs and protection of all American interests abroad will be centralized in the hands of one administrative head bearing the title of Colonial Secretary and holding membership in the cabinet.

This move is an outright notice to the American workers and farmers that our big business interests are ready for a flyer in imperialism. In other words, the American workers are face to face with the situation which will inevitably, sooner than later, lead this country into a new war. Hard hit as England, France and Japan may be at present, no one seriously expects them to allow America to ride roughshod over their own imperialist plans.

PENNSY PRIMARY PUTS PINCHOT OUT OF THE RUNNING

Mild Progressive Fails To Hold Workers.

PHILADELPHIA, April 24.—Governor Pinchot's disaster in the primaries grows worse with later returns. With more than half the state's districts yet to be heard from, Ralph B. Strassburger, his opponent in the race for delegate at large to the Republican National Convention has a majority af 204,782 and it is predicted that the Old Guard's candidate will register a majority of 250,000 when all districts are heard from.

Workers Deserted Pinchot.

The fact that Allegheny county, an iron and steel county, defeated him by 50,000 votes indicates that the workers who turned the tide in his favor in the gubernatorial primary race of 1922, are disgusted with his failure to restore civil liberties. Workers are still kept in prison on political charges and Superintendent Adams of the Mounted Police has not been removed from office in spite of fact that Pinchot's supposed opposition to the constabulatory's methods caused the miners to vote solidly for him, resulting in his nomination by a bare majority.

Dry Hobby Annoyed Politicians.

On the other hand Pinchot as an aggressive dry and as a critic of Andrew Mellon, the wealthiest man in Western Pennsylvania, has the Old Guard politicians against him. His mild progressiveness had little to attract the worker, after it had been demonstrated, but much to annoy the machine politicians, so Pinchot was defeated by more than two to one.

Rope Them In

NEW YORK, April 24.—A new advertisement has appeared in the street cars and trains. It reads as follows:

"Adventure! Healthy sports Winter and Summer, with HE BOYS. Competent leadership. Post forming near you.

The poster is gay and carries the picture of a 14-year-old "he boy" in sailor's middy and cap, the picture of health and smiling from ear to ear. He seems to be saying: "Come on! Let 'em rope us in, boys; the bilge water's fine!"—R. P. S.

Illinois Expects To Pave 1,000 Miles Of Roads This Year

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., April 24.—Eight hundred and fifty men and two hundred teams were at work last week building roads in Illinois, according to the first weekly report of the Division of Highways.

This force is expected to increase until approximately 10,000 men are at work laying over fifty miles of pavement a week.

Most of the work now being done is in the Central and Southern parts of the state, where favorable weather prevails.

The Division of Highways expects the contractors to lay more than 1,000 miles of pavement this season, thereby breaking the world's record of 1,000 miles a season, made in this state last year.

Old Party Election Bunk Will Be Juiced Thru Air, This Year

The air will be the battle ground for the coming presidential election, David Sarnoff, Vice-president of the Radio Corporation of America, told the Association of Commerce here, yesterday.

"And no other event can serve to focus in the minds of the people the great power in radio,' he said.

"For the first time in the history of the American presidential election, rival presidential candidates will appeal thru the forum of the air. For the first time in the history of national conventions, America's millions will be able to follow word for word every dramatic phase in the battle of 'favorite sons' for the distinction of being nominated. Radio has made it possible for millions to move to the convention hall."

Atterbury Wants Shoals' Power For Pennsy's Steel Cars

WASHINGTON, April 24.—W. W. Atterbury, general manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad, is associated with the General Electric interests in the Hooker bid for Muscle Shoals, which is sponsored by Senator Wadsworth of New York.

Atterbury has informed the Senate committee in charge of the bill that the electric power to be generated at the Shoals can be used to produce steel cars by a new process, cheaper than any now employed.

The company is unfavorable to any of the private bids, and is likely to block the sale or lease of the power plant.

WORKERS IN HANCOCK, MICHIGAN ORGANIZE FORCES FOR LABOR RULE; WILL GO TO ST. PAUL ON JUNE 17

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

Hancock, Michigan is a little town of about 7,000 inhabitants situated on an island in the northern part of the State, surrounded by the waters of Lake Superior. It is in the heart of the copper country. Here are located the famous Calumet and Hecla copper properties that have enriched the Agassiz family of Boston, absentee owners. It was the scene of a great strike in 1910 which left a reign of terror in its wake that practically crushed every vestige of trade union organization and prevented any radical movement from lifting its head for several years. There are twenty-five thousand people living within a radius of two miles of Hancock.

The copper industry in that region has seen its best days. On the train to Hancock were two copper mine owners who discussed new methods of operating their properties in order to make them pay. They were also discussing that necessary evil, labor. It appears that hundreds of Germans were imported from the Ruhr into the copper country. The copper magnates paid their transportation which was to be worked out in the mines. It developed that these German miners were not dumbbells by any means and when they thought they had given enough of their bone and sinew to the boss in return for their transportation to this country, they betook themselves to more favorable quarters than the desolate copper region.

"Deport Them!"

The "perfidy" of these workers weighed heavily on the two fat plutes who grunted out their woes in the smoker. "What the hell can be done about it?" inquired one of the other as he chewed a corpulent cigar.

"I will take the matter up with the Department of Labor at Washington," replied his companion, "but Congress is so damn busy digging up scandals that it can do nothing constructive. But these birds that jumped on me forget that they can be deported."

This observation seemed to offer balm to the wounded feelings of the mine owners, and they vented their wrath on the workers who toiled for them. They put them in many categories, some lazy, others dishonest, and last but least came the Communists, who were "bad eggs" and made trouble just for the fun of it. When they got as far as the Communists the two plutes looked quite ferocious and glared at a rather babbity salesman who was meekly puffing a cigarette in a corner of the smoker.

Some time ago the trade unionists of Hancock, tired of depending on the Republicans and Democrats for political salvation, decided to do something for themselves. They organized the Progressive Farmer-Labor Party. It was under the auspices of this organization that I was scheduled to speak on Sunday, April 20.

On my arrival in Hancock I was met at the station by a Finnish lawyer and an Irish barber. Between them they keep the town pretty well trimmed, and yet they both seem to be very popular. The Finn—his name is John Kisdila—was charman of the meeting. Since the big strike he has been a tack on the swivel chair of reaction, and his excellent physique, combined with his courage, has enabled him to stay in Hancock despite many threats to drive him out.

"I can't fight you all at once," he told the reactionaries, "but I will take you one at a time." He is still there and is kept busy explaining Karl Marx to as active a little group of rebels as you ever laid your eyes on.

About one hundred and fifty workers attended the meeting. The exact figure is 145, but that includes the editor of the local capitalist sheet, Roger Sullivan. It might be well to inject here, as a certain labor leader would say, the information that to the writer's knowledge at least half of the audience was Irish. They were anxious to see what kind of a person the editor of the Irish People was, which was so vigorously denounced by Father Corcoran, the Catholic priest. The Irish People has a good circulation in Hancock, and among those who got a copy was a man named Sullivan, sexton of Father Corcoran's church. He was so enthusiastic over it that he showed it to Father Corcoran, who was not so crazy about it by any means. In fact, the reverend gentleman took the magazine to a Hibernian meeting and consigned the editor to eternal damnation, admitting, however, that Old Nick used good judgment in selecting his Irish henchman.

The audience listened very attentively to a speech exposing the capitalist parties and urging them to get in line with the great farmer-labor movement that was to hold its convention n St. Paul on June 17. This was no River of Doubt, like the July 4 conference of the C. P. P. A., the speaker explained. The workers and farmers who were going to St. Paul meant business. They were going to organize a class party and lay the basis for a movement that would lead the exploited workers and farmers into a struggle against the capitalists for control of the country.

Excellent Results.

After the meeting was over, a large number waited to greet the speaker and to declare that they were strong for independent working class political action and for the St. Paul convention. The attacks of the local priest did not affect their enthusiasm for the Irish People, which has done good work in offsetting the pernicious propaganda of the Irish World, an Irish bourgeois Catholic paper, which is defending the oil pirate Doheny. It finds Doheny pure because the Pope honored his wife for her contributions to the Catholic church in Mexico. The church in Mexico, of course, was friendly to the oil barons and the willing tools of the counter-revolutionaries against the progressive forces.

Nationalism has a strong hold on the Irish workers and those who had denounced Doheny turned around and praised him after they saw a full-page eulogy of him in this Irish sheet, which, by the way, has a "radical" policy in Ireland and supports Eamon De Valera. The only antidote to this pernicious dope is the Irish People. The curses of the priest had no effect on those sturdy trade unionists, and every copy of the Irish People offered for sale at the meeting was disposed of.

There was real determination there to get down to brass tacks and do real work. In that stronghold of the Copper Trust, the workers had no other concern than to organize against the common enemy, the capitalist, and for their own emancipation thru a Farmer-Labor Party as a first step.

The little branch of the Workers Party, with only eight members, is doing splendid work. Tho small in numbers, they wield a big influence among the workers of Hancock. In handling the local situation they have displayed tact and good judgment, and as a result have secured the leadership of as promising a labor political movement as any locality can boast of.

RABBIT FRIEND "SANE," FREE TO ENJOY MILLIONS

Negro Juror Insisted Thaw Was Crazy.

PHILADELPHIA, April 24.—With the price of millions of rabbits under his control Harry Kendall Thaw, pronounced sane by a jury, is free again. His first act, he announces, will be to go to New York and fight the charges pending against him for perverted assault upon young Freddie Gump of Kansas City. After that he will be free to enjoy his fortunes.

He planned to give bail here and then appear before the district attorney in New York, confident the charge never will be pressed because Thaw millions already have removed the scars from the Gump boys' back.

"Disgrace," says Evelyn

Mrs. Mary Thaw has her boy back again and Evelyn Nesbit loses. The latter, who intervened in the case in behalf of her son Russell, born when she was Harry Thaw's wife, was bitterly resentful of the jury's verdict.

"It's a disgrace," she exclaimed. "There was only one white man on the jury."

Negro said Thaw was Crazy

She explained she referred to one of the two negro jurors who was reported to have held out for more than six hours against the others who were immediately for Thaw.

Harry, in a rambling statement which he picked out himself upon a typewriter while awaiting the verdict, announced he would probably make some provision for his former wife.

"I don't want his charity—his dirty money—" Evelyn snapped, when she heard about this. "I intervened for my boy, who's entitled to inherit his father's estate. But Mrs. Thaw has her son now and I suppose she dosen't care."

The total Thaw estate amounts to $100,000,000. Harry's share is between five and six million dollars. His fortune has increased five times in the last seven years while Harry was in the insane asylum.

Blizzards Playing Havoc With Army's World Air Flight

CORDOVA, Alaska, April 24.—Continuation of the American round the world airplane flight today, awaited the arrival of Major Frederick L. Martin at Dutch Harbor, Unalaska, to join the other three flyers who are there.

Martin, who is ready to make the flight from Kanatak to Dutch Harbor, in his plane which has been repaired, since being forced down a week ago, was delayed by bad weather. The worst blizzard of the year swept the Alaskan coast Sunday and Monday.

Thirty Killed In Swiss Rail Wreck; Cars Catch Fire

BASLE, April 24.—Thirty persons are dead and 60 injured as the result of the disastrous railway wreck near Bellinzona, according to railway reports reaching here. Two cars of one of the trains caught fire. The Italian minister in Copenhagen, Signor Dellatorre, was a passenger on one of the trains.

"Nut" Expert Says Insanity Has Jumped Since Prohibition

WASHINGTON, April 24.—Alcohol insanity has increased more than 1,000 per cent under prohibition, Dr. James Wnitney Hall, chairman of the Chicago Lunacy Commission declared before the house judiciary committee holding hearings on bills proposing modification of the Volstead act.

Dr Hall told the committee that even the nature of the "down and outer" has changed as the result of prohibition.

"I dont know whether beer and light wines will cure this situation," Hall continued. "Something must be done and I appeal to congress to do it."

Federal Judge Priest of the St. Louis district declared that prohibition had made America a nation of hypocrites.

$32,000,000 Debt May Be Saddled On "Free" Philippines

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, April 24.—Report of the Philippine independence measure to the House within two weeks is forecast by members of the commitee, which is about to take action on proposed amedments to the Cooper bill. These amendments reserve to the United States the Cavite naval station, Corregidor military base, and a requirement of guarantees of payment of Philippine government bonds outstanding, to the net value of about $32,000,000. The date of liberation named in the bill is "immediately." No action by the Senate committee is in sight.

Coolidge and the Capitalist Press

The manner in which the capitalist press distorts issues and conveys false impressions is well shown up by the manner in which the Coolidge speech was handled.

The few reluctant words the president devoted to peace measures were played up in the headlines and we have not the slightest doubt that millions of American workers and farmers believe that this was the high note in the address.

The Coolidge speech meant war—not peace. The important point—and the reason that it was delivered—was the whole-hearted endorsement of the Morgan-Dawes plan for the subjugation of Europe to American finance-capital. As Scott Nearing points out in his able analysis of the Dawes proposals—published elsewhere in the DAILY WORKER—the scheme hinges on the granting of the right to issue German money—a basic right of rulers—to the international bank that will be controlled by the House of Morgan.

No people, says Nearing, will submit for any great length of time to such oppressive measures as the Dawes plan proposes to liquidate the cost of the war for the allied nations. When it is known that the German masses are to be enslaved for a period of 50 years the scheme endorsed by Coolidge becomes still more monstrous.

The military power of France has failed alike to conquer the working class of Soviet Russia and to secure the fabulous sum required of the German nation; the European financial system—a tremendous pyramid of debt—is toppling. It is the hope of the House of Morgan, to whom most of the debts are owed, to bulwark the forces of the allied nations with the military forces of the United States in a last desperate attempt to wring from the working class of Germany and all Western Europe the sums necessary to stabilize the European budgets and liquidate the indebtedness of the nations to this great combination of international financiers.

If the plan works with any degree of success in Germany there is not the least doubt—if the attitude of our state department is a guide to the Russian policy of the House of Morgan—that a new war will be fomented against the Soviet government.

These are the two great problems upon the solution of which depends, in a large measure, the continued existence of European capitalism: The collection of the German reparations and the destruction of the power of the workers and peasants of Russia so that that great country can be thrown open to unrestrained capitalist exploitation.

The Coolidge speech is the first trumpet note sounded in a campaign that will, as surely as flags follow capital investment, end in the American masses being rallied for a new world struggle.

There is no more important issue before the workers and farmers than this and upon this issue almost every accepted leader of the workers and farmers is silent.

Let those who are trying to sabotage the mass convention of workers and farmers called for June 17 explain why in this critical epoch they do not advocate a break with the two parties of capitalism—both of which are pliant tools in the hands of the House of Morgan and which have proved their allegiance to the lords of finance and war innumerable times.

Daugherty's Defense

The secret is out! Ex-Attorney-General Daugherty was corrupted by the Communists and forced to accept bribes from bootleggers, bank defaulters and white-slavers in order to discredit the American form of government.

This is what we gather from the dispatches carrying the speech of harried Harry in his own defense. Of course, the Communists did not actually capture Harry but it was so apparent to this great patriot that American institutions were in danger that he took steps immediately to remove the danger by entering into an alliance with a band of great souls actuated by a high purpose of which Jake Hamon and Jesse Smith were outstanding figures.

Daugherty is a lawyer but he is also a damned and discredited fool. If his clients have been using this kind of a defense previous to his appointment as attorney-general it is little wonder that they considered the purchase of pardons a much more reliable method of escaping the consequences of their crimes.

An eight-year old child who is fooled by the explanation given for his resignation by the late attorney-general should be examined immediately by a competent alienist.

That Daugherty is not the only moron high in the councils of the republican party that is still at large is evidenced by the fact that its national chairman, John Adams, has issued a windy diatribe upon which we commented yesterday, lumping reformers, progressives, radicals and revolutionists together in one fearsome list.

From all we can gather, the last effort of Daugherty to pose as a savior of the nation has not elicited any great response from the 100 percenters who hitherto looked upon his activities with a kindly eye. They are agreed, of course, that the nation must be saved from the vandal hordes of workers and farmers but they prefer that it be done by hands that will not smear the rescued country with an ill-smelling compound of oil, opium, booze and blood.

In other words, the savior or saviors must at least conform to the bourgeois notion of respectability and the ex-attorney-general cannot even qualify for this low rating.

The Canadian Communist Party.

Communists on this side of the border will greet with pleasure and enthusiasm the splendid achievements of the Toronto Convention of the Canadian Communists, just adjourned, a report of which appeared in Tuesday's DAILY WORKER.

Especially significant is the fact that the party changed its name from Workers Party to Communist Party. The party had all along been considered as thoroly Communist, by friend and foe alike, with the result that the convention, by practically unanimous vote, decided to make the change, thus clearing the issue for the future.

At the same time the party decided to enter more actively into the political struggles confronting Canada's workers and farmers. The convention recognized that it had not made the most of the situation growing out of the Nova Scotia strike of coal miners and steel workers against the British Empire Steel Company. But the discussion of the delegates showed that the party is finding itself and that it will register powerful blows against Canadian capitalism in the near future. The convention also voted to raise the issue in the Labor Party of the political unity of the city with the land workers.

The attendance of C. E. Ruthenberg, executive secretary of the Workers Party, at the Canadian convention aided materially in developing the desired solidarity with the Communists of the United States. While big business in the two countries is becoming more and more identical, the Communists of the United States and Canada are developing ever closer relations under the banners of the Communist International. It is the solidarity that brings terror to the citadels of capitalism upon the North American continent. It is the growing terror that precedes the final victory of the oppressed in the cities and on the land.

Hands across the border—the Workers Party of the United States to the Communist Party of Canada, both sections of the Communist International.

An Illinois United Front

The call for the Farmer-Labor gathering at Peoria, Illinois, May 18th, presents: to the workers and farmers of this state the best opportunity yet offered for a united class political front of those who toil in the cities and on the land.

It is a call that should find a 100 per cent response from the steel mills of Waukegan, to the coal mines of Zeigler, and beyond. It should rouse the hopes of the mortgage and tenant farmers of the fertile but plundered fields from the shores of Lake Michigan to the banks of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers.

This is an opportunity for the farmers and city workers of Illinois, not only to take a stand in their own state, but to link up with awakened labor in other states thru the historic National Farmer-Labor Convention planned for St. Paul, Minn., June 17th.

There is no excuse for any class farmer or city labor element being absent. Absence from this gathering means a direct, even if unintended blow, at the unity of the exploited masses of this state.

The heavy defeat in the recent republican primaries, of the forces parading as the Conference for Progressive Political Action, should end for all time the meddling of workers and farmers in old party politics in this state. What is needed now is a class political party of city and country workers. That is what will be organized at Peoria next month.

The workers and farmers of this state should be proud to take their places in such an organization, fighting side by side, nationally, with the Farmer-Labor parties already carrying the standards of embattled toil in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Montana, Washington and a host of other states.

It is not sufficient for the readers of the DAILY WORKER to give a passing glance at the call for the Peoria Convention, that appears on another page of this issue. Clip it out. See that the question of sending delegates is brought up at the next meeting of your union, party branch, fraternal society, or farmers' organization.

Against the Teapot Dome grafters, the injunction judges, the landlords, the bankers, the industrial bandits—the United Farmer-Labor Party of the robbed but fighting workers and farmers of Illinois.

It is the duty of every class-conscious worker to put in his best efforts for June 17th.

Patent Medicine for the Farmer -- Credit-Diversification-Cooperation

By HAL WARE

PICK up any paper, journal, magazine or financial report and you are sure to find some reference to the "Farm Crisis" or "Farm Revolt" or that Agriculture is a "Sick" industry. And just as certainly you find a pet remedy proposed. Of all the pet and patent remedies Credit, Diversification and Cooperation lead the field. Its really too bad that all the old economists left no definite sign posts to guide the farm doctors thru the Agrarian wilderness. True Marx did foresee this little difficulty and gently and perhaps too generally treated the patient of the future. If a poor Farmer may "steal his stuff" I want to point out that it is not Agriculture but Capitalism that is ill.

We have had no general drouths, our scientific work, our Agricultural Extension are models for the world. We have literally learned to make two blades grow where only one grew before. Modern tractors and machinery lie all over the U. S. And the American farmer leads all others in production per man. Yet the farmer is admittedly BANKRUPT!

Capitalism's Problems.

If you want a close-up or rather an X-Ray of this apparent contradiction get out to the Wheat country. There sits the Farmer. He is still on the job evidently because he has no other place to be and because his small town Banker doesn't dare foreclose. In the small town sits the Banker; far sadder than the farmer, waiting to learn his fate from the Bigger Banker back in St. Paul or Minneapolis. And these bigger Bankers also wait the commands of the Powers that Be in Wall St.

It is a tremendous problem. The whole structure of Capitalist organization depends upon its correct solution. How can the city worker and the farmer be kept apart? How can cheap foods be taken from the farmer who knows his farm tenure is—after all—a Gold Brick? American Capitalism has builded upon a deluded, unorganized farm class and used them in its struggle against the city worker.

In the past the high "American standard of living" among the industrial and city populations, has been maintained by the payment of high wages without hurting the profits of the Powers that Be. To understand this clearly you must see them, standing between two great masses of workers. On one side the Industrial workers, each one paid a definite wage for a definite days work. A system dictated by the nature of centralized production and constant struggle on the part of organized workers united by daily contact and work in common.

On the other side of The Powers that Be stand the working farmers. The traditional family farm unit, isolated, unorganized, operated by the unpaid labor of the family. The small food factory, multiplied by millions, has persisted while all other industries grew into larger and larger combinations. By building up an ideology of The Family Farm as an objective; the Powers that Be stimulated the illusion that financial independence could be won by breaking all the economic laws of Capitalism; i. e. by telling John Farmer that he could somehow do better by standing still, while all other industries organized.

Isolation Helped Parasites.

Being unorganized and isolated not only from the city worker by distance and insidious propaganda of the Press, he was also isolated from other farmers by smaller distances and a greater individualism carefully idealized by politician and pulpit. Thus they were led to produce foodstuffs below a true social cost of production. Or stated in other words, they were forced to sell their products to the Powers that Be at prices that not only did not account for the family labor but which also forced the farmers to draw upon every resource at his command.

It is a damning indictment of Capitalism and a pathetic history of faith in an ideal, which records the farmer's struggle. He has put untiring labor, free land, modern machinery, science and last of all, his Land mortgage into the fight for his illusion. He has lost both the fight and his illusion. He is Bankrupt; but not beaten. True only 20 per cent of the American farmers are "Free" and independent of Capital control. 80 per cent are either managers, tenants or mortgaged owners subject to the Capital interests that have slowly but surely absorbed their equity in the land. But remember those farmers are still ON THE LAND. They are demanding "Moratoriums" and some, even "Cancelation of debts."

Medicine Men.

So you see it is the Boys back in Wall St. that need your sympathy more than John Farmer. What makes the latter "sick" if at all is the puerile Bunk of the petty go-betweens who pander such "Remedies" as CREDIT, DIVERSIFICATION, COOPERATION. The Public may be fooled, as well as damned, by such tactics; but John Farmer who holds the land and the Financial Gentlemen who hold the title to the land know better.

If the Powers that Be decide upon eviction they will meet actual, physical resistance as well as the political revolt which already confronts them. If they do nothing and try to make a virtue of their indecision, by telling the farmer they are his friend and wouldn't foreclose for the world; then they will have set up an unwritten "law of possession" that no subsequent decision could change. If they grant the radical demands; which by the way are the only real solution, then they have actually broken down the very Laws of Capitalism and set up precedents that would lead swiftly to a general breakdown of their power. And so these powerful gentlemen are sad indeed. It must make them sadder still to be forced to continue the old game of delusion. They have no solution—and so they hopefully offer for John Farmers consumption the patent medicines labeled: Credit, Diversification, Co-operation.

It is undoubtedly true that there is a sucker born every minute. But you cant fool all the people all of the time. Every election brings hordes of politicians, who have miraculously become the "Farmers Friend". They tell us that we are the "Backbone of the Nation." Well its about time we stopped getting the lower end of that "backbone" kicked. It is about time that we faced the realities of our economic position and power.

Land Psychology.

After all it takes a Farmer to farm. There is an universal Land Psychology that binds all farmers together. Whether he is a Mexican peon, a Russian peasant or an American farmer—He works the land and he wants it! It spells "home" and the work he loves. He gets a kick out of watching things grow. The smell of the first brown furrows in Spring are like wine to his wintered soul. The freshly mowed clover hay that perfumes the whole barn pays dividends in satisfaction if not in dollars. The hard necessities of his struggle against the forces of nature and the artificial man-made handicaps, has forged iron as well as poetry in his character. Such men can fight.

For the first time in American history the American farmer is literally fighting for his land. General History records that whenever farmers fight for land—THEY WIN!

Milwaukee Shows "Polikushka" Film Saturday Night

MILWAUKEE, Wis., April 24.—"Polikushka," the Russian Art film, will be shown in Plankinton Hall Auditorium at 8 p. m. Saturday, April 26. A comedy film, "Soldier Ivan's Miracle," will also be given, and Englewood's ten-piece orchestra will furnish special music thruout the performance. The program will be completd by a Russian Sketch in Fun.

The picture, "Polikushka," has made a tremendous hit wherever exhibited. The star, Ivan Moskvin of the Moscow Art Theater players, is especially clever in portraying the happy-go-lucky Russian peasant. The supporting cast is equally adapted in the various parts and the photography adds effectively to their skillful acting.

The happy-go-lucky peasant, Polikushka, in the days of serfdom, was a "beloved vagabond," but his mistress trusted him. She sent him on an important errand to the city, and the delighted stableman tries so hard to fulfill her confidence by returning with the money entrusted to him. Unfortunately he is a poor man, tho good hearted to an extreme, and his clothes are ragged. The money packet falls out thru a hole in his cap and is lost by the roadside while Polikushka dozes. The simple soul in his distraction can think of nothing to redeem himself but taking his own life. The money is found too late by another to save the peasant's life, but he is vindicated in the eyes of his companions.

Milwaukee will be glad to have the opportunity of seeing this exceptional picture. The National Board of Review recommended it as one of the finest films yet produced.

All tickets for this performance are 55 cents, no tax, and the net proceeds will be divided for the benefit of the starving people of Germany.

The Twenty-Third Psalm

The president is my shepherd; I am in want.
He maketh me to lie down on park benches;
He weareth out my sole on the hot, dusty roads:
He leadeth me beside the free soup houses;
He restored my doubt in the Republican party;
He guideth me in the paths of destruction for his party's sake.
Yea, tho I walk thru the shadow of the Valley of Starvation,
I Will fear no devil, for he is with thee;
Thy profiteers and thy staff of cabinet officials, they frighten me.
Thou preparest a table of reduction in wages for me in the presence of mine enemies;
Thou anointest my slender income with grievous taxes and tolls;
My expense runneth over my income.
Surely, poverty and unemployment shall follow me all the days of thy "normalcy" administration.
And I shall dwell in a rental house forever!

FARMER-LABOR FUNDAMENTALS

What are you doing for June 17th?

It is June 17th against July 4th.

It is the rank and file workers against the labor aristocracy.

Stick with your class for June 17th.

THE VIEWS OF OUR READERS ON LIFE, LABOR, INDUSTRY, POLITICS

To the DAILY WORKER:—The "Allied Economic Alliance" has been running a big display advertisement against unionism in the Chicago Whip, a Negro Weekly, for four consecutive issues. The advertisement quotes an imaginary Negro Workingman as turning away from the union "wise guy" with the answer that "the "great industrial plants gave me a job with a living wage, and I am honest and happy."

The advertising writer goes on to assert that Capital is the friend of the Negro and adds more bunk designed to counteract radical educational work.

"Reds" Alarm Bosses

This is ample proof that the work of the small but active group of Negro "Reds" in Chicago is causing the employing class grave concern.

The contents of this ad is an insult to the intelligence of Negro exploited workers.

This so called, "Allied Economic Alliance" or Employers' Association ought to tell in their next ad, of the vicious anti-Negro propaganda disseminated thru the capitalist owned and controlled newspapers, and other capitalist agencies.

Class Bigger Than Race

Negroes who read Labor or union papers know that the real friends of the Negro workers are the class conscious white workers, and that the real enemies of the Negro workers are the capitalists and exploiters.

Negro Workers ought to look upon this capitalist snake-in-the-grass propaganda of the Allied Economic Alliance with scorn and contempt.—GORDON W. OWENS, Chicago.
Editor of the DAILY WORKER.

Comrade and Fellow Worker:—I have followed the discussion in the DAILY WORKER regarding the Farmer-Labor Party and am fully in accord with it. Since 1904 I have been a member of the S. P. one year, S. L. P. 3 years and the I. W. W. about 17 years.

I am surprised at the ability of the leadership and the rank and file of the Workers Party to change their tactics and to firmly grasp the significance of various events.

Most of the radical minority groups with which I have been associated, put their heads against a stone wall, and refuse to learn. They kill all discussion, and go on year after year making the same blunders over and over again.

The only hope that I see for release of the I. W. W. prisoners in the prisons of California and Washington, and the release of Mooney and Billings is the success of the Class Farmer and Labor movement in those states. Let every migratory worker in the I. W. W., Workers Party and the Trade Unions register, try to keep his residence in the same county, and vote at the fall elections.

There is no powerful Industrial Organization at present trying to bring about their release, let us look the facts in the face, admit it, and use the best weapon at hand. Vincent St. John and Wm. E. Trautman advocated "any means to win with the least expenditure of time and energy." One militant outside of prison is worth more then a dozen in prison! The lives of tried and true revolutionists are worth more to us, then the worn out Phrases that bring only defeat ofter defeat. A mass movement in this country will give more power to the militant minority. You all swore that you would stand by Ford and Suhr, Mooney and Billings, and the Centralia heroes. Now is the time to act.—John Pauznes, Detroit.

To the DAILY WORKER: It is time for the working class of Chicago to repeal the "daylight saving" law. The "daylight saving" law has been repealed forever in every civilized city in the United States. It is time for Chicago to become civilized and repeal this war profiteer law. Organized labor, the A. F. of L., the motormen and conductors of surface and elevated lines especially, should immediately demand the repeal before April 27. The workers of Chicago did not vote for this law. It was put over by the capitalist class.

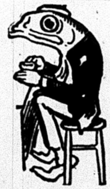
Poincare Swallows Dawes-Morgan Plan Without Hesitation

PARIS, France, April 24.—Premier Poincare again displays his imperialist policies by bowing to the Morgan and other financial interests in accepting, without reservation, the Dawes reparations report. The acceptance of the Dawes report by the French government is officially registered with the reparations commission of Poincare's letter to them.

Poincare informs M. Barthou of his hopes that the Dawes report, which would complete the control of German industries by foreign capital, will be speedily put into operation. In spite of the intimation by Premier MacDonald that this course might lead to friction between London and Paris, Poincare has obeyed the imperialist and American capitalist voices.



The Poor Fish says that when Cal Coolidge kicks against raising the taxes of the rich he is only doing what any real American ought to do.

NIGHT IN CELL FOR ANOTHER CLOAKMAKER

Seize Barkan In War On Big Union.

Arrest of Meyer Barkan, prominent member of the Cloakmakers' Union, his imprisonment all night in a lousy cell of the Cook County jail and his coming trial before Injunction Judge "Dennie" Sullivan is the latest chapter in the employers' attack on the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

Barkan, like Business Agent Sam Laderman, arrested the day before, is not a member of the striking dress makers' local and not on strike. His arrest, like that of Laderman's, is seen by union officials as a pure and simple conspiracy—under cover of the present strike—against the powerful Cloakmakers' Union which has long been a thorn in the side of the open shoppers.

"Picketing!" Yaps "Dennie."

"You were picketing!" Judge "Dennie" Sullivan snarled vindictively, as Barkan was arraigned in the injunction court yesterday morning after spending a night in the cell because bail had been refused.

Barkan began to explain that he had not yet been tried and the evidence in the case had not yet been presented but "Dennie" had his mind made up in advance and turned away as the case was postponed until May 6. Barkan is free until then.

The arrested cloakmaker is a former business agent of that union, but is now employed at Cohen & Brust, on 330 S. Market street. He and other leading members of the union have been informed by detectives that "we'll get you fellows too if you keep on helping these damned dressmakers."

Night before last as he was coming down the stairs of his shop, with a partly finished cloak on his arm which he was making for his wife he was seized by a certain Cozela, who showed a sheriff's badge and told him he was being arrested on a John Doe warrant for "contempt."

Taken to the Cook County jail he demanded bail. The functionaries there told him county cases were peculiar—they proved to be so for him—and that he could not be bailed out.

"It'll take more than that to discourage me. We're going to win this fight. A night in jail won't stop me."

Asked what he thought of Judge Sullivan, Barkan just said:

Sullivan "Class Conscious."

"Sullivan's like all the rest. He's working for his class. I wish the workers would be as class conscious as those fellows."

Barkan is the second prominent cloakmaker to spend a night in the cell during this strike. The other was Morris Bealis, who is also president of the Chicago Joint Board of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union. More arrests of the members of this branch of the international will not surprise unionists but they are prepared to fight out the issue.

Drunken "Slugger."

Walking down S. Market street yesterday afternoon the DAILY WORKER reporter's eyes were greeted with the sight of a big tubby looking "slugger" being helped into a taxi-cab. The "slugger" was being helped in by two others because he was too drunk to get in himself.

This happened near Ribback's scab

Labor: "Yes, and the job's not finished yet!"

POLICE OBEY COMMAND OF PULLMAN CO.

But Canvass Strikers' Homes in Vain

Striking car workers of the Pullman Company are not only holding their lines intact but adding new recruits to their ranks in spite of the activities of uniformed police in soliciting workers to return to their jobs.

The Pullman bosses have sent out the city police to canvass the workers' homes and attempt to persuade or intimidate them into returning to their jobs.

The police obediently invaded the homes of the riveters, buckers, heaters and other workers striking, tried to ingratiate themselves and then insisted that the men go back to work.

The police made no offers of the Pullman Company's surrender to any of the demands of the striking workers. Nothing but browbeating methods were used when the workers failed to respond to the hypocritical "frendliness' of the police.

Another trick some of the uniformed men tried was asking for a drink from some worker in the hope that they could threaten arrest for violation of the prohibition law, if the worker would refuse to go back to work. None of the strikers fell for these old gags of the officers.

Police Increase in Number.

The police are increasing in number from day to day in the strike zone. Yesterday morning found a great array of the bluecoats on the picket lines. Many of them paraded in cars armed with rifles, up and down the line.

Advertisements for riveters, buckers, heaters and reamers for the Pullman Company were carried in the Chicago dailies without mention of strike conditions. A number of workmen applied at the company's employment office, 110th street and Cottage Grove avenue, but most of the men were approached either before or after reaching the employment superintendent and told that a strike was on.

DAILY WORKER Aids Pickets.

The DAILY WORKER reporter and the circulation manager were active in turning away unwitting "scabs." Most of the men refused to work against their fellows by going on the job, altho some of the applicants were very hard up or broke. DAILY WORKER men gave a couple of ex-coal miners from Pennsylvania the news of the strike when the men applied and gave them lunch money after discovering that the former miners had no money left.

Two other departments in the Pullman shops came out for the first time yesterday. The broad finishers and the battery makers came up to the strike meeting and joined the union at once.

The union had run out of applications the previous day, but yesterday all who had not joined entered the union. The strikers are now organized practically 100 per cent.

Strikers voted to buy 1,000 copies of this issue of the DAILY WORKER and took up a collection to make payment. They are glad to know they have a working class paper in which they can follow from day to day the progress of their fight against the Pullman monopoly.

Jack McCarthy, circulation manager of the DAILY WORKER, and Karl Reeve, reporter for the paper, both addressed the strikers. McCarthy pleaded with the men to organize with John Holmgren in the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen.

McCarthy said that the DAILY WORKER is 100 per cent a working

On This May Day

MANIFESTO OF THE WORKERS PARTY OF AMERICA

May Day, the International holiday of labor, comes this year in the United States with a great opportunity before the workers and farmers of this country.

The capitalist system of production appears before the workers and farmers in its true light, as a system of corruption, exploitation and robbery of those who produce the wealth of the country.

The Teapot Dome exposure has shown for what purpose the government exists in the United States. It has shown that the government is an instrument thru which the capitalists steal the natural resources of the country for their own enrichment. It has shown that the men elected to public office and in cabinet positions, under the existing capitalist government, are the agents of those who are seeking to enrich themselves at the expense of the well-being of millions of people—the capitalist class.

The character of government under the capitalist system has rarely been exposed so clearly as in the government at Washington. Oil leases, government shipping board steals, steals in the Veterans'' Bureau, corruption and bribery in the revenue department—all of these things are part of the picture of the capitalist government at Washington today.

The stories brought out by the investigation of ex-Attorney General Daugherty presents as shameful a picture of corruption and bribery as has ever appeared in the history of the United States.

Daugherty, the anti-labor attorney general; Daugherty, the author of the famous Daugherty injunction; Daugherty, the author of red raids against Communists, is pilloried before the eyes of the workers and farmers of this country as a corrupt bribetakers. He uses his office for his private investments and the enrichment of his friends.

Daugherty, the labor hater, appears as the friend of every capitalist group which seeks to escape from taxation or payment to the government of money illegally taken from the government.

And the whole story about Daugherty is not yet in the open. Daugherty's labor spy system has not yet been investigated by the Senate committee. The system of espionage of the Burns Detective Agency, the head of which is the man whom Daugherty appointed in charge of the Bureau of Investigation, is not yet in the open.

Even the Senate committee, headed by progressives, refused to delve into the labor spy system and the use of private detectives and government agents against the workers in their struggle to secure better things from the capitalist class.

Not only Daugherty has been tarred by the exposures. Hoover, the great philanthropist, has been shown, by testimony before the Senate committee, to have used his position in charge of American relief work in Europe, for counter-revolutionary purposes. Just as Hoover, as a member of the Coolidge Cabinet today is using his office to fight the battles of the capitalists against the farmers and workers, so Hoover as head of the American relief work, used his resources, used money appropriated to feed starving people, to fight the workers' government in Hungary and in Russia.

The Senate committee refuses to permit the whole story of Hoover's efforts to overthrow the Soviet Government of Hungary and the Soviet Government of Russia—workers' and farmers' governments—to be told to the American people.

The workers and farmers of this country should demand that the whole system of corruption and bribery shall be brought into the light of day. Let the Senate investigate Daugherty's anti-labor activity as well as his corrupt practices. Let the Senate committee investigate Hoover's counter-revolutionary work under the guise of philanthropy. The workers and farmers should demand that the whole story be told.

The corruption and bribery in Washington is not a new story in American history. What is new is that the workers and farmers are shown clearly that the whole governmental machinery is in the hands of the enemy; that the Republican and Democratic parties are merely instruments of their enemy for the purpose of looting the farmers and workers who produce the wealth of the country.

What every farmer and worker should learn from the exposures at Washington is that the whole capitalist and the capitalist class exist for the purpose of taking from the producers what they create thru their toil. They are part of a huge system of robbery which enriches a few and leaves to the many the bare necessities of life.

It is this system of robbery and exploitation which the peasants and workers of Russia have overthrown. It is the government which maintains and sustains this system of robbery and exploitation which the peasants and workers of Russia have got rid of. They have built in its place their own workers' and peasants' government, and are using the power of that government to build a new social order which will take from the producers the products of their toil and give it to the exploiters.

The only way that the American workers and farmers can end the orgy of corruption and bribery, the use of the governmental power against workers and farmers who struggle for more of what they produce thru their toil, is by their establishing a workers' and farmers' government in place of the present capitalist government.

The way to the attainment of that aim is thru the function of a Farmer-Labor Party to fight the class battles of the industrial workers and the exploited farmers.

The industrial workers and exploited farmers must organize their political strength separately from all other groups. They cannot expect that the capitalist will fight their battles. They cannot expect that the small business men, or professional men, or well-to-do farmers will fight their battles. They cannot expect that a party of capitalist or a party of small business men and professional and well-to-do farmers will fight their battles. The only party which will fight their battles is a Party which is made up of industrial workers and exploited farmers.

On May Day, this year, there is the promise of the foundation of such a Party. Hundreds of thousands of industrial workers and farmers have learned the lesson that the Republican and Democratic Parties are the enemies and that the two Parties support the system which robs them of the products of their toil.

These hundreds of thousands of farmers and industrial workers are moving forward to the foundation of a mass, class Farmer-Labor Party. They are preparing to stand on their own feet politically and to fight their own political battles against every group in capitalist socciety.

This is the most inspiring message of May Day this year. The organization of a mass, Farmer-Labor Party and a militant struggle against the capitalist parties by such a mass Farmer Labor Party means the greatest step forward that the workers and farmers of this country will have made.

There can only be one end to such a struggle. Workers and farmers of this country must wrest control of the government from the hands of the captalist class. They must oust not only the Daughertys, Hoovers, Coolidges, but the whole crew of capitalist politicians from every vestige of control of government and end the government for, by and in the interests of the capitalist clas.

The struggle of the Farmer-Labor Party must be the Farmers' and Workers' government.

Let us build the mass, class Farmer Labor Party.

Let us throw all the strength of the workers and farmers into the struggle for the workers' and farmers' government.

DOWN WITH THE CAPITALIST TEAPOT DOME!

FORWARD TO THE WORKERS AND FARMERS GOVERNMENT!

FORWARD TO THE NEW INDUSTRIAL ORDER—WHICH WILL INSURE "LIFE, LIBERTY AND HAPINESS TO THE PRODUCERS OF WEALTH IN THIS COUNTRY."

MORGAN IN PARIS TO ANNOUNCE WALL STREET TERMS TO FRENCH

PARIS, April 25.—France's reply to the Reparations Commission on the subject of the Dawes report is considered inacceptable in British circles, it was leaned tonight.

Replies from France, Belgium and Great Britain have been received and will be published when that from Italy arrives.

J. P. Morgan reached Paris today, physically very fit after what he declared to be one of the few real holidays of his lifetime.

Morgan went directly to the offices of his bank, where an invitation to confer with Louis Barthou and Sir John Bradbury awaited him. The reparations commissioners wish to get Morgan's views on the financial clauses of Dawes' report.

Morgan came from Venice, where he ended a Mediterranean cruise in the yacht corsair. His conferences with French officials will be private and unofficial, but it was learned that the subject of the source of the proposed loan will be put squarely up to him.

After remaining here 48 hours, Morgan will go to London.

ANOTHER MILLIONAIRE SLAYER FIGURING ON CHEATING PUNISHMENT

Ralph C. Richardson, stepson of Thomas E. Wilce, millionnaire lumberman, appealed from the decision of a jury in Judge Hosea Wells' court, which found him guilty of manslaughter. Richardson was the driver of a car which ran down and killed 7-year-old Dorothy Marguerite Joyce and injured her mother some weeks ago.

Judge Wells has set the case for next Tuesday. Richardson is at liberty on $10,000 bonds.

Waiters' Union Opposes Tips.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 25.—The San Francisco Waiters' union suggests instead to the employers a graduated service charge, from 20 per cent to 10 per cent; the wage scale to remain as at present.

Farm Bill Holds Up Consideration of Child Labor Amendment

WASHINGTON,—April 25.—Unexpectedly delayed by protracted consideration of the Agriculture Appropriation bill, the Child Labor constitutional amendment was debated by the House today with the prospect a vote would not be reached until late tomorrow.

The amendment would empower Congress to regulate or forbid employment of persons under 18 years of age.

Opposition to the amendment centered today about the argument that however meritorious child labor regulation should be left to the states.

COW'S MILK USED TO FIRE LOCOMOTIVE NOT TO FEED CHILDREN

Dried cow's milk is good locomotive fuel. Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, Health Commissioner of Chicago, supplied the proof yesterday by operating a train for twenty miles with blocks of dried milk the only fuel

The locomotive pulled the train of five cars carrying more than 200 passengers, mostly children from the Chicago Home for Friendless Children and the Chicago Orphan Asylum.

HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS MARCH TO LENIN'S TOMB ON MAY DAY

MOSCOW, April 25.—Soviet Russia has met the gesture of Roumania, in purchasing four hundred airplanes from France by directing the Russian workers to prepare themselves to defend the workers and peasants government against any possible attack on their country.

The entire population of Red Russia will celebrate May Day by marching to the great shrine to Lenin's memory in Red Square. Hundreds of thousands of workers and their entire families will flock to pay homage to their dead leader.

class paper and that it would back the strike to the limit.

Reeve showed the striking shop workers how the DAILY WORKER had helped the garment workers' strike in Chicago. He said that the paper kept the issue alive before its many readers each day.

Adolph Werner, general vice president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, the union in which the strikers are organizing, spoke to the men yesterday morning. He spoke in both Polish and English and was much applauded by the workers.

Meetings are held every morning at 10 o'clock at Stancik's Hall, 205 East 115th street.

Mr. F. L. Simmons, supervisor of industrial relations of the Pullman Company, could make no statement about the strike, he said. He claims to have been out of town for several days with a "sick daughter" and that he doesn't know what conditions are in the shops.

Company Official "Stalls."

After considerable "stalling" and "passing the buck," one of the managers at the Pullman car works said excitedly of the strike:

"There's nothing to it. Forget about it. Every car works, all the big places have these troubles. You see the work is piece work and the men are always dissatisfied. It isn't worth the printer's ink to write about it. Nothing to it."

Not Calm, However.

The Pullman bosses aren't exactly calm about the situation in the car works in spite of the aid of the police and of the capitalist dailies in keeping "mum" on the strike and publishing ads for workers without adding "strike conditions," as required.

A Strike Without Deserters.

Not a striking Pullman car worker has gone back to work. Against the wholesale importation of incompetent scabs, against the rifle squads, plain clothes thugs, Pullman Company hirelings, against persuasions and threats of hired gangsters who have been visiting the homes of the strikers—THE PULLMAN STRIKERS HAVE BROUGHT PRODUCTION TO PRACTICALLY A COMPLETE STANDSTILL.

The vicinity of the Pullman plant is like an armed camp today. Uniformed policemen are patrolling the city by twos and threes. Automobiles filled with rifles camped at the gates in the morning.

DAILY WORKER on Job

The DAILY WORKER reporters discovered late yesterday that many workers were coming to the employment office of the Pullman oCmpany, answering "ads" in the capitalist papers for heaters, riveters, buckers and reamers. The DAILY WORKER reporters told the men lined up for jobs to "Beat it, there is a strike 'on.'" Practically the entire line left the vicinity. Many good union men were in the crowd. They promised to show up at the strike meeting today to help the strikers.

Werner Addresses Strikers.

"Many of you are ex-soldiers," said Werner "and some of you have probably been in Russia after the armistice was signed. You know why you were sent to kill the Bolsheviks and Japanese. It was because the Czarist government owed the Pullman Company millions of dollars. The Bolsheviki would not pay the debt incurred by an imperialist regime. So you were sent over to butcher workers and be butchered, so that the Pullman Car Company could bring in a few more million dollars.

War on Slave Driving.

"This strike is not only a protest against the reduction of your wages. It is a declaration of war against the slave driving and anti-union policy of the Pullman Car Company.

John Holmgren told the strikers that the activity of the thugs and cops and officials of the Pullman Company in trying to get something on the men, and in trying to get them to return to work showed that they are winning the strike. He told how the big companies always use these methods to discourage and divide the strikers and try to induce them to return to work. "They come to your home and promise you better conditions if you will return," said Holmgren. "Or else they try to set one nationality against the other. They tell the Poles that the Ukranians are no good and they tell the Ukranians that the Poles are no good. They are trying by this method to divide the strikers, but they have not succeeded."

Of the few scabs who went to work in the yards, in one day 14 injured themselves with rivet guns and are now in the hospital, according to a man who works in one of the other departments. The strikers tell the DAILY WORKER that they are not afraid of the few scabs who will stay in the plant after they learn there is a strike. "There will only be a few who will be willing to act as strikebreakers," one striker said. "And this work is very different from ordinary riveting jobs. Only a trained car shop man can do this sort of work, and no car shop man will be low enough to scab."

Many of the strikers from the Pullman Car shops are expected to attend the May Day meeting to be held in Stancik's Hall, 205 East 115th st., Thursday, on May First, at 8 p. m. Max Salzman, the organizer of the Young Worker's League will speak.

A fine program of entertainment has been arranged, including "eats." May Day in Pullman this year has a special significance because the workers in the Pullman Car shops are tired of being hired slaves of the Pullman Company. A local connected with the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen has been organized by the striking riveters, reamers, buckers and heaters.

Many men in other departments declare they are not going to work on May First. They are going to take the day off not only in celebration of the regular holiday of the organized workers, but as a sign to the Pullman Company that they are sympathetic with the Pullman strikers in their efforts to organize a union and maintain a decent living wage.

Max Salzman is a peppy speaker, and will have something worth while to say to the Pullman workers.

NIGHT IN CELL IS LOT OF ANOTHER MILITANT WORKER

place at 225 S. Market street, and is evidence of the fact that sometimes the inspiration the bosses furnish their "sluggers" has too much kick. Just enough liquor primes up the "slugger" to knocking out a striker but too much knocks him out.

There is reason to believe from what policemen have whispered in confidential moments that it isn't the quantity so much as the villanious quality of the liquor furnished to the scab herders that lays them low.

Bulls Were Getting Theirs.

No policemen were on the pavement at the time. They had just gone upstairs for confidential tete-a-tete with the boss.

All this happened just before the evening picketing hour which begins about 4:50 p. m. Getting the guardians of property ready for their evening work is a regular ceremony along S. Market street.

Tom Tippett, of the Federated Press, thrilled the strikers at their noon meeting with a vivid account of gunmen, state police and the unsubdued courage of the West Virginia miners. Tippett, a union miner himself, has just returned from the land of "yellow dog" contracts, injunctions, tent colonies and class war with rifles.

"I understand that your strike has gone on for eight weeks," said Tippett. "That's the time when enthusiasm begins to fall, sometimes, but you should really only begin to fight now. Down in Cabin Creek, West Virginia I visited the tent colony where the miners and their wives and children have been striking for two years.

"Down there the strikers have to live in tents. A strike means that they are put out of their home—owned by the operators. Then they live in tents, whole families, and live on $3.50 a week strike benefits for single men, with $1.50 extra for the wife and 50 cents for each kid.

"They fight on, half starved. I asked them how they could stand such terrible suffering, how they could stay on strike.

Tippett went on to tell of what the Illinois miners had gained by organization. In his childhood in a coal miners' cabin conditions were just as bad as in West Virginia. But the miners struck again and again, struck for two years at a time, struck and lived on such fish as they could catch from the streams and finally won the eight hour day and wages sufficient to live at least as well as most other workers.

Praises Negro Unionists

"I see some members of the Negro Race," said the speaker. "I want to tell you all that Negroes are part of the backbone of the West Virginia miners' union. There are three Negroes on the executive board and in every tent colony you see Negroes side by side with the whites. No race division in the miners union.

Cheers greeted his reference to the Kansas miners successful fight against injunctions and the industrial court and cheers again followed his cry that these illegal injunctions must be defied.

"The Home" In Pullman

"The Home" is not sacred in Pullman.
The Pullman Company has seen to that.

• • • •

Elbert H. Gary, head of the United States Steel Corporation, had "Gary, Indiana," named after him.

George M. Pullman, first head of the Pullman Palace Car Company, thought to dedicate his name and memory to all posterity, by having the little industrial czardom of "Pullman, Illinois," bear his name.

• • • •

These two "company-owned" towns are pretty much the same, and just like every other "company-owned" town. Homes are considered only adjuncts, necessary annexes to the job.

The Pullman Company has only considered "the home" as another excuse for squeezing more money out of the pay envelope of its workers. And the Pullman Company doesn't care how inconsistent it is in doing it.

• • • •

The men now on strike are fighting a decrease in wages. The Pullman Company insists the wages should be reduced.

Yet what is the situation out in the south end of Pullman, Ill., where the Pullman Company still owns most of the houses. There the Pullman Company is trying to impose an increase in rents to go into effect on May 1st.

As The DAILY WORKER reported in its Thursday issue, three-room flats occupied by Pullman workers have been raised $6, $7 and $11 per month in their rentals.

• • • •

This has always been the policy of the Pullman Company: Cut the wages and increase the price of everything the workers need.

That is the policy of the steel trust at Gary, of the Steger Piano Company, at Steger, Ind., and of the bosses in every company-owned town.

• • • •

The Pullman Company was organized in 1867 to build sleeping cars. But the building of sleeping cars was only an excuse for making money on anything it could get its hands on.

• • • •

"In 1880 the Pullman Company bought 500 acres of land near Chicago," writes Gustavus Myers, in his 'History of the Great American Fortunes.' "Upon 300 of these it built its plant, and proceeded, with much show and advertisement of benevolence, to build what it called a model town for the benefit of its workers.

"Brick tenements, churches, a library and athletic grounds were the main features, with sundry miscellaneous accessories. This project was heralded far and wide as a notable achievement, a conspicuous example of the growing altruism of business.

"But time soon revealed the inner nature of the enterprise. The model town proved to be a cunning device with two barbs. It militated to hold the workers to their jobs in a state of quasi-serfdom, and it gave the company additional avenues of exploiting its workers beyond the ordinary and usual limits of wages and profits. In reality it was one of the forerunners of an incoming feudalistic sway, without the advantages to the wage worker that the lowly possessed under medieval feudalism. It was also an apparent polished improvement, but nothing more, over the processes at the coal mines in Pennsylvania, Illinois, and other states, where the miners were paid the most meager wages, and were compelled to return those wages to the coal companies and to bear an incubus of debt besides, by being forced to buy all of their goods and merchandise at extortionate rates. But where the coal companies did the thing boldly and crudely, the Pullman Company surrounded the exploitation with deceptive embellishments.

"The mechanism, altho indirect was simple. While, for instance, the cost of gas to the Pullman Company was only 33 cents for 1,000 feet, every worker living in the town of Pullman had to pay at the rate of $2.25 per 1,000 feet. If he desired to retain his job he could not avoid payment; the company owned the exclusive supply of gas and was the exclusive landlord.

"The company had the worker in a clamp from which he could not well escape. The workers were housed in ugly little pens, called cottages, built in tight rows, each having five rooms and 'conveniences.' For each of these cottages $18 rent a month was charged. The city of Chicago, the officials of which were but the mannikins or hirelings of the industrial magnates, generously supplied the Pullman Company with water at four cents per thousand gallons. For this same water the Pullman Company charged its employes ten cents a thousand gallons, or about 71 cents a month. By this plan the company, in addition, obtained its water supply for practically nothing. Even for having shutters on the houses the workers were taxed 50 cents per month."

Now be careful and follow this closely.

As the average yearly pay of at least 4,497 of the company's wage workers was little more than $600—or to be exact $613.86—this reduction, back in 1893, in a large number of cases, was equivalent to forcing these workers to yield up their labors for substantially nothing.

The company could not produce evidence to disprove this. These sums represented the company's indebtedness to them for their labor, after the company had deducted rent and other charges.

• • • •

It was these manifold robberies on the part of the avaricious Pullman Company that aroused the bitterest resentment among the company's employes.

Then as now the Pullman Company was making enormous profits, even according to its own reports. At one time in 1893, the Pullman workers were in arrears to the Company for $70,000 for rent alone. Then the strike of 1893 came.

• • • •

These facts alone shatter any pretensions that the Pullman Company might make to interest in the welfare of its workers.

When the workers protest today, instead of granting just demands, instead of allowing the workers wages that would permit them to have "Homes," the Pullman Company calls out the police.

• • • •

The police, the strike-breaking police of Chicago, under the thumb and at the command of the Pullman Company, invade "The Home" in Pullman and try to threaten the workers into going back to their jobs at the bosses' terms.

Just a place for the worker to sleep in and rest up for the next day's toil.

Just a place that can be used for the coining of greater profits.

Just a place for the police to invade and violate when the tenant-worker shows indications of wanting a real "Home," and all that that means.

• • • •

Pullman workers will never have real homes until the final victory has been won over the Pullman Company.

THAT IS WHAT THE PULLMAN WORKERS ARE REALIZING MORE THAN EVER IN THIS STRIKE, AND THAT IS WHY THE STRIKE IS SPREADING.

The Workers Party in Action

REYNOLDS SAYS DETROIT HOPES UNTIL WINTER

Sees Slackening in the Automobile Industry

By WILLIAM REYNOLDS.

DETROIT, Mich., April 25.—The automobile industry, which centers in lower Michigan, is showing a very perceptible slackening up since January 1.

In former years, production has been at peak during April, but this year there has been a steady decrease in employment, as is indicated by the employment figures given out by the Employers' Association of Detroit, which are as follows:

February 26—241,134.
April 15—236,976.

These figures do not exactly reflect employment conditions, as many plants are running part time (three, four or five days per week), which two months ago were working overtime.

Small cities in central Michigan which produce auto bodies and accessories are in many cases severely pinched by unemployment at present. The Mines of Michigan, which supply domestic industry, are in many cases idle.

Tho the building industry of Detroit shows more activity than in most years, with spring construction well under way, there is very decided unemployment in the building trades. It is generally remarked by building tradesmen that buildings go up with less labor each year in Detroit, which but reflects the speed-up system that is becoming more and more the rule.

Unless unemployment becomes very acute in the factories, it is to be expected that building, road making, agriculture, navigation and other fair weather industries will keep employment at a fair level until next winter.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., April 25.—According to District Organizer Norman Tallentire of the Workers Party, the condition of organized labor in Minneapolis and St. Paul is chaotic. The movement has never fully recovered from the open shop drive of two years ago. The building trades and the metal trades were particularly set back in that drive.

Reports in the Twin Cities Central Labor bodies show that thruout the state units of organized labor are ceasing to function. Councils seldom meet in some places and a quorum is unusual. Most of the workers are unemployed or eke out a meager living with part-time work.

Organizer Tallentire has received data during the last month that the condition of the Minnesota farmers is as bad as ever. Like their fellow-workers in North and South Dakota, many farmers are going bankrupt and are compelled to leave their farms. Where one sees a neat farmhouse and perhaps a modest array of stock about, it is almost certain to be mortgaged to the point of strangling the farm owner or tenant.

The depression thruout this state makes more evident the inability of the two old national parties to accomplish any real or lasting good for the farmers and workers. More than ever the need for a class Farmer-Labor party is pressed home, and in spite of all difficulties and the burden of unemployment the workers and farmers of Minnesota are rallying to the cry for a new order.

HIT DOCKING MINE FINES FROM WAGES

By THOMAS MYERSCOUGH,
Secretary, Progressive Miners' Committee.

AUBURN, Ill., April 25.—A bitter battle over the "Docking" of fines from the earnings of the miners, took up the entire morning session of the convention of Springfield, No. 4, subdistrict miners' meeting here.

"Joker" Young, the Board Member for this group of miners, who is supposed to be a staunch Farrington supporter, was "pulled over the coals" because of unfair decisions to which he has agreed, and which benefit the operator at the expense of the miner.

Board Member Shown Up.

Charges and counter-charges flew fast and much documentary evidence was presented, but this brought from Young the threat that he would resort to the courts of the organization. He said he was being slandered. This brought the retort from Watt, the secretary-treasurer, that Young was a fourflusher, and that if he thought he was being slandered by having his tricks brought to the attention of the men who pay him, then he would call his bluff and challenged him to prefer his charges.

Among the delegates are some who are unaware of doings in the miners' union, and their position was expressed by Delegate Knudtson when he said:

"There are so many of us who know nothing of the things being discussed here, and I am glad that such manipulations are being shown up."

The documents used by Young were ordered made part of the record, much to the chagrin of that individual.

Attack Foreign Born Bills.

The various forms of attempts to enslave the foreign born workers were all subjected to attack by J. J. Watt, secretary-treasurer. The foreign born Secretary of Labor Davis was roundly scored by Watt, who read the Welshman's pedigree to the delegates assembled. The Congressional Record and clippings from many papers, including the DAILY WORKER, were read to show just what Davis really is. It was shown that Davis and his illiterate father would be excluded from this country under the provisions of these foreign born bills.

The speech of Secretary Watt brought forth tremendous applause, and served also to bring forth a flow of sentiment from a delegate named Williams.

JOBLESS ARMY KEEPS GROWING AT KANSAS CITY

Even Building Trades Boom Punctured

By JOHN MIHELIC.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 25.—The winter months in and around Kansas City have been marked by a steady increase in the number of unemployed. Altho the time worn hope (that industrial and business conditions would improve with the coming of spring) was frequently expressed by pious individuals, this hope has not materialized and shows no signs of doing so.

During the past three years Kansas City has experienced something of a building boom, but now the building industry is noticeably on the decline. Altho the weather the past few months has been ideal for building, there is a large number of building trades men without work.

Packing Industry Idle.

The packing industry, another large industry in Kansas City, is also very slow. The local Armour and Morris plants are now completely consolidated. This is a part of the nation-wide consolidation scheme of the Armour and Morris companies. The result is that the Morris plant was stripped of all machinery and fixtures and is now being used as a storage plant only. This put several thousand people out of work.

Many of the railroad shopmen who came out on strike here in the nation-wide shopmen's strike, are still without steady employment and are forced to accept casual jobs to keep the wolf from the door. Needless to say that railroads are not in need of additional help.

Wait in Slave Market.

Kansas City has always been a shipping center of the floating element of workers for out-of-town jobs. There are large numbers of employment shipping agencies, but almost no out-of-town jobs to be had thru them. Any day of the week large numbers of workers are to be seen on the streets in the shipping district waiting in vain for something to turn up.

The farmers in and around Kansas City are not generally as hard hit as the farmers of the Northwest, due to the fact that the farms are smaller and generally owned by the farmers and there is variation of crops. Nevertheless, nowhere else in the country can a better comparison be made between the prices paid to the farmers for their produce and the prices paid by city workers for food.

The cost of freight on cattle and hogs from these nearby farms to Kansas City stockyards is insignificant. Yet the difference in price paid to the farmer for live stock and the price paid by city workers for meat is almost unbelievable.

Bumper Crop No Help.

In the state of Kansas there is great prospect for a bumper wheat crop this year, but the farmers are showing no enthusiasm, as they say that they will not benefit by it.

Owing to unemployment and generally bad conditions here, the bosses are very arrogant. A sample of this attitude was shown at a dinner given by the local employers' association, when the main speaker of the evening, in an appeal for the open shop, advocated that all labor papers of any kind be boycotted and no member of the association, under any circumstances, should advertise in it.

The one helpful sign here is the general sentiment among the rank and file of both organized and unorganized workers for a labor party in the coming national election. What is needed most of all is orgahization and crystallization of this sentiment. The greatest obstacle is the insufficient number of good leaders to carry out the work. The autocratic trade union leaders in control of the local labor movement are unusually bad. An example of this type can be gathered from observing their opposition to a labor party and all progressive movements.

If conditions continue thru the summer as they have been during the past year, the discontent by election time should be strong enough to pile up a large vote here for a labor party president,

JOBLESS ARMY GROWS IN WISCONSIN

By G. S. SHKLAR
District Organizer, Workers Party.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., April 25.—The industrial outlook in this locality is rather gloomy. The International Harvester Company, Chicago, Minneapolis & St. Paul R. R. Co. and several large machine shops are laying off considerable number of men. Work in building trades is also very dull. The wages are also very low. For instance at times you will find an advertisement for an experienced machinist to work at 55c an hour.

Workers Party Greets Filipino

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party has adopted the following resolution of greetings to the workers and farmers of the Philippine Islands on the occasion of the celebration of May Day which is labor's holiday in the Philippines:

"The Workers Party of America takes this occasion of celebration of labor's international holiday, May 1st, to proclaim its solidarity with the working and farming masses of the Philippines.

"We, speaking for the exploited workers and farmers of the United States, have anxiously watched your struggle for complete national freedom from the clutches of the same capitalist class that exploits and oppresses us.

"We greet with joy your growing determination to enter into the fight against the continuation of American military and naval occupation of the country, against the plundering of your natural resources by the American and other capitalist imperialist groups and we feel certain that you will develop this struggle into a struggle against the hated exploiters of the workers and farmers as well.

"As Communists, as followers of the Communist International that is today leading the fight against the imperialist oppressors of all weaker nations, we assure you that we will not stand idly by and allow our own capitalist class, the enemy of the Filipino and American workingmen and poor farmers, to continue exploiting and oppressing the brave Filipino people.

"On this day of international working class solidarity, the Workers Party of America pledges itself to fight side by side with you in the common struggle against our common enemy and assure you of our fullest possible support to bring to a successful conclusion your great struggle for genuine national independence and freedom."

SEATTLE, Wash., April 25.—The Chamber of Commerce has appropriated $135,000 to advertise the Pacific Northwest in the eastern United States. They want more people with bill-lined pockets, but not to give the First Avenue and Occidental Street excess workers a chance to enjoy the surpassingly fine out-doors of Puget Sound country. There are already too many slaves for each job offered in this territory; so workers, at least, had better disregard the alluring ads of the local Chamber of Commerce.

AT THE DOORS

the dark rooms. She passed to the kitchen where the hilarious orderlies were playing treeleestneek. In the corridor one could distinguish by the light of the smoking night lamps saddles, swords, rifles, uniforms, shoulder straps all thrown together in great disorder. It smelled of horse sweat.

"Get up, Samuel."

The snow storm was raging outside—the storm which told Olga the story of little Grandchild snow-flake. It must, indeed, have been a witch's spell. It was almost impossble to move about that night. The wind swept down from the roofs, made somersaults, whirled in a fury, blew from the devastated fields. The snow was heaving like a sea-wave. Instead of walking one was almost forced to crawl thru the snowy dimness, the shrieking, groaning, howling whirlwind, the white obscurity, the white deadly song. And on this night three people were hovering about the house of Andrey Varalsky on the Sibirna Mountain. Tanatar left his house, and felt at once as if the white witch the snowstorm had sunk her icy hands into his neck. Tanatar drew his head in and his birdlike face with its aquiline nose stuck out prominently. And again it seemed that the man, like some beast, was ready for a leap. Up to his waist in the snow Tanatar ploughed thru it, crossing side-streets, turning corners, until he finally reached the invisible house of the Veralskys. Nothing could be seen two steps ahead. The storm was sweeping down from the mountains and the steppes, flying at the houses with a strident cry. Some one came right upon him.

The tempest almost drowned the words:

"Who is there?"

"The Commander of the Cavalry Division—is this Doctor Fedoroff?" Tanatar shrunk still further into himself, and Fedoroff did not know whether the cry that followed was the voice of Tanatar, the howling of the tempest, or the work of his own feverish brain.

"He is watching Olga Veralskaya. Olga is mine, I won't give her up. Look out for Tanatar—Doctor! He will kill you."

They separated, but met again, frightened, and having met, noticed a third person. It was a white woman leaning against a fence. And when they had passed her, Tanatar bent over Fedoroff and whispered in his ear:

"That is my wife. My wife, Green sickness. She follows me everywhere; she knows everything but is silent, always silent. Bloodless. Doctor Fedoroff, Vassia, what an empty existence! Vassia, there is nothing worth living for. I am no better than a beast, uncultured, ignorant. And my wife, always silent, but knowing everything. She says that we must love man; we must love the worst examples of man—even Ivan Petrovitch Bekesh. We have forgotten man."

They crossed two side-streets, and met Bekesh. Ivan Petrovitch was standing near a curbstone on which he had hurriedly placed a package. Having recognized them as friends, he shouted gaily:

"You certainly frightened me. I have ruined myself to buy some bread for Christmas. I am carrying it in the dark so that nobody will take it away from me."

"In this snow-storm everybody came to the house of Iakov Kamynin the writer. The guests drank tea out of soup plates, peeled potatoes with an old sword, sent for vodka, and chemin de fer amid the shrieking of the storm, the clatter of plates, and outbursts of laughter. All thru the night and the following day, the writer Iakov Kamynin and the voyenospetz Tanatar remained standing at the old round table; they could not play otherwise. Oil lamps were still burning till the morning. The table was cluttered with cards, thousand-rouble notes, glasses, plates, potatoes, tobacco. Tanatar's orderly went twice to ask Tanatar's wife, all pale and white, for regimental cash. Others, having left the table, lay down on the sofa, to get up after an hour's nap and resume playing. The women left the room at daybreak and came back at noon. The room seemed like the faces of the players, haggard and drawn; the air was dense with smoke and charged with alcohol. The mind, exhausted with extreme concentration, wandered over the round table, the carpet-covered and dust-smelling sofa. The mind of the writer, Iakov Kamynin, was a dense gray like the smoke-filled room; and black, pitch black was the mind of the voyenospetz Tanatar. Doctor Fedoroff had gone to bed long before and was now speaking in his sleep. Kamynin was probably right when he said to the newcomers:

"Have a smoke. Cards, you know, are the only miracle in the world. Must be. That is why they are worth several sleepless nights. A miracle! Who does not dream of it? Queen of Spades, King of Trumps, and Nine—the unique miracle. And beauty. And woman—another miracle."

"The miracle of days."

The women came in the afternoon, after some hours of sleep. They cooked potatoes for the men. Kamynin's wife, however, Irina peeled potatoes not for her husband, nor for anyone else but Tanatar. Kamynin himself, hardly able to stand on his thin legs, was also peeling potatoes, while his eyes looked somewhere far beyond. And Irina came and put her head not on her husband's shoulder but on Tanatar's.

"Have you lost?" she asked in a low voice.

"Much?"

"Two hundred."

"Thousands?"

"Yes."

"Who got them?"

"Can't recall. Iakov, I think. Anyhow, it has been all spent on vodka."

"Come to my room, I shall put you to bed."

"All right, put me to bed." And Tanatar smiled naively and helplessly. "Is it still snowing outside?"

"No, the storm is past."

Nobody had ever seen Assyrian women, but everybody was certain they must have looked like Irina. Cup-like breasts, almond-shaped eyes, hair like that of the stony Ariman, stiff horse hair hanging in plaits on her bosom, face and body almost square, almost stone-like and yet mobile like those of a circus woman. Irina had, in fact, once been a circus rider in Odessa.

The men finished drinking, crowded into the corners like flies on an autumn day and, keeping their military and fur coats on, went to sleep. The women were preparing the costumes for the evening masquerade. In the kitchen, the orderlies of the voyenospetz took a hand now at playing cards. Kamynin remained sitting at the table, where the game had been going on. He was writing in his calendar and drinking what was still left in the glasses. The adjutant, Prince Trubetzkoy sat beside him. They spoke to each other listlessly. Before 1917, the prince was owner of property extending over several streets in Moscow as well as of some estates in the Government of Moscow, Tambov, Veronej and Poltava. Kamynin himself had owned a whole town in the West of Russia, and his former forests, wood-mills, mines, and factories were scattered thru several governments, he himself could not tell exactly where.

"Let us send for another bottle of cognac, Prince," said Kamynin lazily.

"It would be best to take a bath now and have some white wine with strawberries," answered the prince.

"Fresh strawberries. Yes. A good idea. But you know, when I am playing cards and drinking champaigne, fresh fruit is all right to begin with, but after a while it's ham and cabbage I must have."

Kamynin went on writing figures then repeated lazily:

"Let us send for another bottle of cognac, Prince."

"After all, the cognac is not better than home-made brew."

"Let us send for home-made brew then."

"With red pepper and filet. We have plenty of bread."

Kamynin wrote down the last figures, loooked at his calendar a long time, then stood up, his thin legs wide apart and his hands under his arm pits.

Tanatar, pale and with half-closed extinguished eyes, was lying in Irina's room covered with a plaid and resting his head in Irina's lap. Kamynin and Fedoroff came into the room together with the twilight. Kamynin made an effort to keep his balance and said:

"Have a smoke, Tanatar. Ira, I must write a book. A green forest, a birch forest, is cut down to be made into paper. Everything for a book. For beauty. For beauty. Ira, you are living with Tanatar and I need another woman—for my book. Let us discuss the subject. Good and evil, truth and untruth—that is all nonsense. Beauty is the thing. We must solve all questions in a very simple way. I mean to ask Olga Andreyevna Veralskaya to be my wife."

Twilight was descending. The window pane turned frosty blue. The church bells were ringing. Nobody said a single word.

"Olga Andreyevna Veralskaya! I must set it down very simply before her. For the sake of beauty, for the sake of the book. It is all very simple."

Twilight. Gray, blue twilight. Shadows were creeping into the corners. The face of Irina was the face of an Assyrian woman.

"Ira, we still have some cod-liver oil, we shall have enough for all three of us."

"Tell us something about yourself, Iakov."

"Well; life is nothing: beauty is all. Beauty and miracles. Let us quit life."

The orderlies drove up the Division troika harnessed to a sledge. Tanatar fussed about the room putting on a driver's suit. Then he took Irina into his arm and began to shout incomprehensible words: "Anara—tai—ra!"

Tanatar took the driver's seat; Kamynin and Fedoroff sat down in the sledge.

"Get up!"

TODAY THEY RIDICULE AND FIGHT LABOR

World-Wide Significance of International Red Aid

By ISRAEL AMTER.

White reaction holds the working masses of the world in its bloody grip. In Germany, Poland, Bulgaria, Italy, Roumania, Letland, Esthonia and Finland, in Java, India, China and Japan, in Spain and France, in the United States, Canada and South America—tens of thousands of the best workers are languishing in prison. They have been sent to these hell-holes for daring to fight in the front ranks of the workers against the brutal exploiters. In the interests of the workers they have defied the authority of the capitalist State, and today are paying the penalty of their heroism.

Post-War Annoyance.

The World War filled the international bourgeoisie with great pride. THEY had won the war; they were well armed, the working class was split into warring camps. Despite the fact that they had accumulated billions of debts; created values to the amount of more billions had been shot to pieces; and despite the fact that the workers and peasants of Soviet Russia had taken from them one of the most fertile lands for exploitation, they felt strong. Many capitalist governments were on the verge of ruin and collapse; many shuddered before the menace of the working class. The international bourgeoisie felt safe; they would not allow the proletariat of another country to seize power. Together they would drown the workers in blood.

In Hungary, the workers might attempt to establish their Soviet power; in Finland they might declare parliament their own; in Italy they might seize the factories and fight for State control; in Germany they might overthrow the Kaiser and proclaim the country a republic—the bourgeoisie did not fear. The war taught them the necessity of standing together. However much they may fight among themself for the spoils of war and for the right of exploitation—against the working class and the militant peasants they are a unit.

The Black International

Hence the workers of Hungary, Italy, Finland, Roumania did not fight against their bourgeoisie alone. Behind the bourgeoisie of these countries stood the mighty capitalist governments of France and England, aiding them with guns and ammunition, with millions of gold. Just as they had tried to throttle the Soviet Government with guns and aeroplanes from England, France and the United States; just as they sent American, English and French boys to shoot down Russian workers and peasants who threw the bourgeoisie out of their land for ever—so, too, they aid the bourgeoisie of every other country in beating down and crushing the working class.

The capitalist system of production is truly anarchic. But the capitalist mind is clear. The capitalists very well understand their mutual interests and they are organized to protect their interests. Armies are not created by one capitalist government only to beat another capitalist government in the race of profits, for sources of raw material and fields for investment. Armies are created in order to shoot down rebellious workmen and militant peasants. They are to help other capitalist governments in subduing their workers. We have returned to 'peace' yet the standing armies of the world are larger than before the war. The capitalist world is preparing not only for another world war, but also to curb the revolution.

The Bogeyman of Capitalism

The capitalists have operated well to befuddle the minds of the workers regarding the meaning of revolution. They have held up to them the "blessings of democracy," the "splendors of civilization." They have calumniated the revolutionists, the "Reds", the Communists. They have pictured them as bloodthirsty ruffians bent upon destroying the world. Under the pressure of the press, the school and the church, the workers have yielded to the influence. But the spirit of revolt cannot be curbed in this manner. Capitalist exploitation and capitalist government—upon which the power of the bourgeoisie rests—are teaching the workers a better lesson. The struggle for existence against the pillage of the capitalist class and the brutality of all capitalist governments are pounding into the head of even the most stupid worker the fact that as long as there is a capitalist there will be a capitalist government, and its function is to crush the working class and keep it in subjection.

The shrewd-minded capitalists have succeeded in keeping the workers apart. They are well organized, but in every country they have carried on vicious campaigns to destroy the organizations of the working class. Trade unions, cooperatives, peasants organizations—all of them have suffered under the blighting hands of the capitalists and the capitalist governments. In Italy, Mussolini, the idol of the international bourgeoisie, whose methods they are copying in all capitalist countries, has obliterated the unions and cooperatives and has turned them into organizations against the workers and peasants. In Germany Stinnes, Thyssen and Wolff have carried on one vicious campaign after the other with the aim of destroying the unions. In France, Spain, Norway and Sueden, in England, United tSates Canada and Argentine, in Japan, India and Australia,—in all the countries of the globe, the capitalists, organized in their associations, and leagues, have left no means unused in their campaigns to exterminate the last remnants of labor organization.

Betrayers of Workingclass

In this brutal onslaught, they have been aided by the reactionary trade union leaders and the reformist politicians. These "labor leaders" and representatives of the working class"—Ebert, Leipart, Turati, Modigliano, Jouheaux, MacDonald, Thomas, Gompers, Lewis—stand for "social peace," which means working class surrender. It means the acceptance of hunger and starvation, of wages that will not keep body and soul together, of prostitution and child labor, of hours and conditions of labor that crush the very life of the worker. AND ALL FOR THE SAKE OF PROFITS! This is the meaning of "social peace" which is preached and practiced by the reactionary, reformistic "leaders" of the working class.

The militant workers revolt against such conditions. In every country of the capitalist world, the workers are rebelling. For five years in Germany they have fought against the combined attack of the German bourgeoisie and the French imperialism, who are aided by the upholders of social peace.' Poincare, Ebert and Stinnes—these are the bloody triumvirate which has strewn Germany with the corpses of German workers and filled the prisons with ten thousand workers who have dared to rebel.

In Bulgaria, five thousand workers and peasants have been slaughtered, five thousand more languish in prison, five thousand have been sent into exile for fighting against the fascist government.

In Italy and Poland thousands of the bravest workers and peasants are rotting in the dungeons of capitalist prisons.

In Spain, France, Holland, Finland, America, Canada, Japan, China, Java and Korea, the best fighters for the working class are tortured in the prisons; many are driven to madness and suicide, others are murdered.

The largest number of the workers who were massacred and imprisoned are Communist. The masses of India have been told by the MacDonald Government of Great Britain that if they dare to fight for their freedom, the full force of the British Government will crush them. But the masses fight on, altho their leaders and their best comrades are in prison.

Thousands Doomed To Death.

Tens of thousands of the world's most courageous fighters will die in capitalist prisons. Tens of thousands more must face capitalist courts to be sent to decay in the pest-holes of prison, others to be shot. Tens, yes, hundreds of thousands of women and children are doomed to hunger and death by the savage hand of capitalist "justice."

The international bourgeoisie could not succeed in its diabolical plans were the working class not disorganized and disunited. The capitalist class will succeed still further if the the workers of the world do not unite in defending their fighters. The capitalists do not ask about color and complexion. They are indifferent to race or faith; they do not ask about political affiliation. Militant workers are a menace and must be removed; prison torture and death are their reward.

President Wilson first heard of Tom Mooney when the workers of Leningrad demanded his release. Dato was released from a Spanish prison after the workers of France had demonstrated. INTERNATIONAL RED AID IS THE DEMAND OF THE HOUR.

International solidarity is the strongest weapon of the working class in the fight against the bourgeoisie. The working class must learn to stand together as the internationalist capitalists stick together. With this weapon they will free themselves from capitalist tyranny. They must stand solidly behind the militant revolutionary workers in prison. They must aid their families. They must help the imprisoned peasant who are paying the penalty for their heroism.

The white terror in Europe and Asia demands that the workers of the whole world unite in defence of the imprisoned comrades and their families. It demands that the workers of countries where the hand of reaction does not yet press so heavily, form their Red Aid organizations at once, before the guns of capitalist soldiery and gendarmerie mow down the best fighters of the working class. SELF HELP AND INTERNATIONAL SOLIDARITY MUST BE OUR SLOGANS!

The International Red Aid.

The barbarous torture of the White Terror caused the formation of the INTERNATIONAL RED AID one year ago. The need of it is apparent. In this short period, the International Red Aid has sent tens of thousands of dollars to aid the fighting working class prisoners in Germany, Poland, Bulgaria, Italy, Spain, Hungary, France, Esthonia, Lettland, Finland, Lithuania, Roumania, Java, China, Palestine.

Where has this money come from? Chiefly from the Russian workers and peasants. The Russian workers and peasants cannot forget the solidarity that the workers of the whole world manifested towards them when they fought against international reaction in defence of their Soviet Government. They cannot forget the aid that the workers and peasants gave them when famine threatened their land. They cannot forget how, in the times of the czars, their political refugees were aided by foreign workers. Russian workers have given of their earnings. They pledge themselves to aid their fighting comrades abroad, and their starving families. They know that the CAPITALIST GOVERNMENTS HATE MOST OF ALL THE POLITICAL PRISONERS, BECAUSE THEY ARE THEIR BITTEREST ENEMIES IN THE CAUSE OF THE WORKING CLASS. Russian peasants give of their grain; their last trinkets they contribute. FIGHTING WORKERS AND THEIR FAMILIES, NO MATTER WHERE, MUST BE SUPPORTED. THERE IS NO MORE GLOWING TESTIMONY OF INTERNATIONAL SOLIDARITY THAN THAT OF THE RUSSIAN WORKERS AND PEASANTS!

Four hundred Russian workers and peasants are in the organizations of the International Red Aid. Their slogan is ONE MILLION MEMBERS by May 1. The workers and peasants of other countries should take an example from these workers.

There is no more urgent task than that of the International Red Aid. It is a powerful weapon of the working-class against the White Reaction.

The Voice of May Day

By Harrison George

"There will be a time when our silence will be more powerful than the voices you strangle today!"—August Spies on the scaffold.

Capitalism is insanity, its voices come from madman throats, the hysterical shrieks of homocide, the moans of the wounded, the mutterings of masses in despair... But clear and beautiful with the beauty of relentless purpose, there arises above all the discord of the voices of those workers who would be free, voices which inspire and direct the struggle; voices which call to arms.

Because these voices were raised on May First, 1886, four workers were strangled to death in the Cook County Jail at Chicago. But tho these workers were strangled and the years have fled, their voices on this First of May, 1924, ring round the world!

What did May First mean in 1886? Whose were these voices? In what cause were they raised? Who strangled them?

The N. L. U. Sells Out.

For twenty years, since the Eight Hour Leagues joined in the first nation wide movement in the National Labor Union formed in 1886, labor had fought futilely and pitifully for an eight-hour day. But the N. L. U. was an undefined entity, directed by simple-minded or self-seeking leaders. The first begged scornful capitalist politicians for legislation, the latter sold out the workers. President Johnson lied to them, and tho eight-hour laws were passed in six states, they were never enforced. When this fraud was protested one governor answered that, "Every law is obligatory by its own nature and can derive no additional force from any act of mine." The sacred "right of contract" was injected into the laws by providing that only "when the contract was silent" on the matter of hours did the eight-hour provision become effective. Workers had to sign any contract presented if they wanted work and there were hordes of unemployed. The soldiers who had fought to free the chattel slaves had merely created a fairly homogenous class of wage slaves and found themselves among it, unemployed and starving.

With the inspiring exception of the successful strike of 100,000 building 1872, economis depression discouraged strikes and, naturally, the workers turned to politics, and, just as naturally, the theoretically ignorant, the organizationally mixed, divergent and inexperienced workers failed to accomplish anything. Even the so-called labor party formally started by the N. L. U. in 1872 was killed in the cradle by the treacherous leaders of the national trade unions withdrawing their forces—leaving nothing but an ideal, a shadow; for the N. L. U. was a hopelessly mixed body of Eight-hour leagues, co-operatives, local unions, assemblies and national trade unions.

Play Capitalist Politics.

But, then as now, the "no politics" of the trade union leaders transformed itself into capitalist politics: their spokesman, H. J. Walls of the Iron Molders, who said in 1873 that his union withdrew from the N. L. U. because the N. L. U. had "become a political organ," himself played the game of capitalist politics so well that he was appointed by the Republicans as Commissioner of Labor for Ohio in 1877.

It is necessary to understand the immaturity of the labor movement at that time, as well as the savagery used in representing its first unscientific efforts to ease its burden only a little, to comprehend the great collision of social forces on the First of May, 1886, and how those who lead the workers' struggle gave their lives to advance, if only by a step, the interests of the proletariat.

The 70's were dark years for labor. Unemployment sent not only men by the tens of thousands to tramping the country, but women and girls. The unions were wrecked, wages were but a disguise for starvation, blood flowed at the least sign of resistance, the Pinkerton gunman and the murderous militia held back the blind rebellion.

In March, 1876, Albert R. Parsons, who later died on the scaffold, joined the Social-Democratic Party, which became a part of the First International, then crumbling in Europe but guided by Marxists in America. How this flaming souled type-setter, then a member of Typographical Union 16, was influenced by Marxian thought may be seen by comparing the following instruction issued by the International as guidance to its Chicago section, with Parsons own expressions: Said the International:

"The trade union is the cradle of the labor movement, for working people naturally turn first to that which affects their daily life, and they consequently combine first by trade. It therefore becomes the duty of the members of the International not merely to assist the existing unions and to internationalize them, but also to establish new ones. Economic conditions were driving the trade union from the economic to the political struggle against the propertied classes."

The Social Democratic Party faded into the Socialist Labor Party, which nominated Parsons for president in 1879. But we find Parsons writing from prison in 1886, in the same language as that used today by the Communists in the unions:

> "Examination of the class struggle demonstrate that the eight-hour movement was doomed to defeat. But the International gave its support to it for two reasons. First, because it was a class movement, therefore historical, evolutionary and necessary; secondly, because we did not choose to stand aloof and be misunderstood by our fellow-workers. We therefore gave it all aid. I was regularly accredited by the Central Labor Union, representing 20,000 organized workmen in Chicago, to assist in organization of unions and do all in my power for the eight-hour movement."

We can understand why, tho the "International", Parsons here refers to probably was the so-called "Anarchist International" then following the First International into oblivion, the Marxian revolutionists claim Parsons and his fellows as their own.

The traditions of the 70's were working in the struggle of 1886. The wave of general strikes of 1877 was witnessed by Parsons and the rest. Battles were fought by workers against murderous Pinkertons and, in Pittsburgh, workers enraged by slaughter of thirty strikers by the militia, first besieged the soldiery then drove them from the city. In St. Louis a workers committee ruled the city for a week. At Chicago the police clubbed and shot workers wantonly. The Militia fired into crowds without compunction. Parsons addressed meetings of 40,000. He was then President of the Chicago Labor Assembly—its first president. In 1879, when Parsons' group called for celebration of the Paris Commune, 60,000 people responded.

"Now, men, I warn you, that if you do not go to work at once for a $1.50 a day, the military will be sent here to compel you." So said the Sheriff of Cook County to striking workers in 1885, and this exemplifies the reckless repression used by the capitalists in those years. "Such treatment," says Parsons, "Would of necessity drive the workingmen to employ the same method." It would.

Group of workers, armed for self-defense, sprung up everywhere. The Sunday before May Day in 1886, Parsons spoke at Cincinnati at a great eight-hour demonstration. Thousands marched in a parade headed by two or three organized companies of workers armed with Winchester rifles under the red flag. A rising tide...!

The reason was that both national labor bodies had, in 1884, declared that on and after May 1, 1886, eight hours should constitute a day's work and that a general strike should demand it. Enthusiasm reigned—600,000 poured into the unions in the first four months of 1886. Gompers in the old Federation was opposed, and Powderly of the Knights of Labor was indifferent; but workers every where believed—and Parsons and his comrades were with the masses.

The great strike broke on May Day 1886. Parsons says 360,000 struck, others say 200,000; 40,000 in Chicago. May 3rd, police fired on strikers, killing one, wounding several. At a protest meeting next day at the Haymarket, some unknown person threw a bomb, when the police attacked the crowd, killing seven policemen.

Tho the murder of workers was an everyday occurrence, the press suddenly went frantic over the dead police; the Chicago Tribune and Times drove the "better classes" into frenzy. Police "found" bombs everywhere. Tho not one of the seven men who were arrested, or Parsons, who surrendered voluntarily, had been at the meeting when the bomb was thrown, all were pronounced guilty after a farcial trial. Three were commuted and pardoned after seven years. Louis Ling robbed the hangmen. Albert R. Parsons, August Spies, Adolph Fischer and George Engel were hanged on, November 11 1887.

From under the hood on that morning came the cry of Parsons, cut short by the crash of the death trap: "Will I be allowed to speak, O men of America? Let me speak, Sheriff! Let the voice of the people be heard! Oh...!"

Sleep, my murdered Comrade! Sleep! Your life, your words, your deeds, your death, are today being told around the world. Your tongue was silenced, but your voice, the voice of the proletariat is raised today in every land, in every clime—in the chant of The Internationale. The flags they march under are red, my comrade, and—led by the Communist International—they march to victory!

EMPHASIS ON COMMUNIST EDUCATION

form not only in Russia but also in Germany and is being proved so in other countries. The organizational and political roots of the Party must be in the shops, where the real life of the worker revolves. The shop unit lends itself splendidly to work among the masses of workers. The shop unit is the political pivot around which the Party work will turn. In this the life of the workers as it appears at first hand can be keenly and understandingly discussed and the lessons drawn therefrom. The members organized politically in the shops, factories, etc., can be mobilized immediately for any campaign of the Party. It is essential that the Party take up more avidly the matter of reorganizing and organizing the Party on the basis of shop units, since they will be the greatest stimulus to political and industrial activity.

The Party is in a very healthy condition. It has carried on a great political and industrial activity; it has grown and gained strength. Branches are being organized daily. The Party is virile and alive. That makes it all the more necessary for the Party to look itself over and see what are its most pressing needs at the moment.

The Party has great political influence and is growing, but it is necessary to start a huge organization campaign to develop its strength to meet its political influence. It is essential, therefore, also to raise the Communist understanding of the membership to meet its greater political, industrial and organizational work.

Intensify and organize Communist education in the Party; increase it manifold thru the starting of systematic education in the branches, cities and districts. The Party must make a great organization drive to draw in thousands more of the exploited wage earners and exploited farmers. The present Central Executive Committee of the Party is fully aware of these problems and is taking the steps to effect a more intense education of the membership, to organize more of the workers under the Communist influence into the Party. The Central Executive Committee is trying to lay the proper emphasis on each phase of Party activity: political, industrial, educational, organizational; and to co-ordinate these as one unit and thus carry out the Party policies with thoro understanding of its strength, influence and possibilities.

May Day, 1924, Review of Industrial Conditions All Over the United States

Brief Sketches Sent Specially to This May Day Issue of the Daily Worker by District Organizers and Other Active Workers in the Workers Party.

MAY DAY AGAIN FINDS THE STEEL WORKERS OF OHIO UNORGANIZED

By WALLACE T. METCALFE.
(Special to the Daily Worker.)

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, April 25.—The steel mills in the Youngstown district are curtailing their production somewhat. Altho trade experts predict that there will be no general depression, most of the capitalist economists agree that the steel trade needs to be stabilized by a return to conservative government, minus, of course, the Teapot Dome and Veteran Bureau scandals.

The small industries are working about half time, thereby throwing these part-time workers into the long lines of unemployed waiting at the steel mill gates.

Building trade industries are enjoying a fairly good season and some of the trades have received a slight wage increase altho this is not general thruout the Mahoning valley.

The American Federation of Labor campaign to organize the steel workers has not met with a favorable response from the steel workers and this May Day finds the steel workers unorganized yet in spite of this, a most militant section of the working class.

WALL STREET TAKES BETS ON ELEPHANT AND JACKASS RACES

NEW YORK, April 25.—Money to be wagered that Senator Ralston of Indiana will be the Democratic nominee for the presidency has been received on Wall street.

J. S. Fried & Co., brokers, have $2,500 to place against $8,750 Ralston will be named. That is at odds of 1 to 3½. Another is of $2,000 to $20,000, or 1 to 10, he will be the next President.

Governor Al Smith's odds are lowering. The price on nomination is now 1 to 2, and elections, 1 to 7.

FORMER EXILES IN TWIN CITIES CREATE PROBLEM

Must Strengthen The Trade Unions

By J. O. JOHNSON.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., April 25.—On conditions in the Twin Cities, there is a lot of work to be done this summer but it is slow in starting, that is, in the building trades especially.

But there is such a stream of people coming into the city from the farms and other places, that with the weakened conditions of the Trade Union movement here, we are not able to handle the situation the way we should.

It is necessary that we take steps to strengthen the labor movement here as soon as possible so it can carry the additional burden that we have placed on it by starting the Farmer-Labor Party, based on the Trade Union movement.

I have only mentioned the building trades, but the same condition applies to other organizations as well.

The Twin Cities have the worst conditions of any cities of their size in America, so the members of the Workers Party must recognize the necessity of building up the labor movement in this part of the country.

Grand Jury Action Is Result Of Hysteria

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio, April 25.—"The Mercer County grand jury returned indictments this afternoon against the six Farrell defendants. The trials will be separate. Will start start first week in May.—Wallace Metcalfe."

This is the telegram received by the DAILY WORKER announcing that the six Workers Party members who have been under investigation by the grand jury of Mercer County, Pa., have been indicted. The decision of the grand jury is the culmination of another campaign of hysteria and prejudices designed to work up the public against the "red" activities in the steel districts of western Pennsylvania.

The Reverend Leo. J. Medic has been busy making the rounds of the press, denying the story spread by the Department of Justice agents that he was organizing an American-Croatian Protective Society to save himself and his church from the persuasive power of the radicals.

Labor Defense Fighting.

The Labor Defense and Free Speech Council, an organization of liberals and free-speech fighters, has been handling the case for the Farrell, Pennsylvania, workers. The organization will make a canvass of the Ohio and Pennsylvania steel district surrounding Farrell to get support for the indicted workers and to counteract the vicious slander of the Department of Justice men as voiced in the local papers.

If the Department of Justice should succeed in putting thru its threat of conviction of the six workers, the agents promise to turn the victims over to immigration authorities for deportation if possible.

Any assistance for these Farrell defendants will be in order. Communicate with the Labor Defense and Free Speech Council, Youngstown, O.

PITTSBURGH, PA., OUTLOOK SHOWS LABOR HARD HIT

Union Bureaucrats In Deal With Bosses

By FRED E. MERRICK,
Organizer, Workers Party, for the Pittsburgh, Pa., District.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., April 25.—The industrial situation in the Pittsburgh District this May Day may be summarized as follows:

COAL MINING—The coal mining industry is in a deplorable condition. An understanding between the union bureaucrats and the Pittsburgh Coal Company has resulted in a wholesale campaign of discharge and blacklisting that has depopulated about twenty-five camps of militants.

These camps are now favored with steady work so as to make them hotbeds of reaction. This is easy to do, for such concerns as the Pittsburgh Coal Company, a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation. As they dont' need much coal now, they are working few camps most of the time and letting the rest stand idle.

At the present time the mines of the Pittsburgh district are probably not working more than 20 per cent capacity.

RAILROADS—The Pennsylvania Railroad has been successful in preventing the shopmen from winning their strike, and as a result the railroad stock of this road is in very poor condition.

The industrial conditions on the railroads in this locality are in very good condition at the present time.

STEEL INDUSTRY—There has been a notable decrease in the demand for steel in the last sixty days, without much actual reduction in employes.

The United States Steel Corporation has steadied its price in order to keep the mills going. This means the independent mills will suffer soon.

The tinplate mills are all working steady, as this is the beginning of their busy season. But there is a general feeling, both between the men and the employers, that there will soon be a back recession in this industry.

BUILDING TRADES—Due to abnormal conditions, the building trades are enjoying a boom in Pittsburgh at the present time. It can pretty well be settled that the end of the present season will complete a cycle of extensive industrial and commercial construction which has been going on for several years.

Due to these conditions, practically all of the building trades maintained their wage scales, with some increase. The carpenters were successful in getting a considerable raise, making their total wages $11 a day.

STREET RAILWAYS—The largest local union in the Pittsburgh district is the street car men's union, with a membership of more than 2,000. They have just demanded an increase in wages to take effect May 1.

The managers of the railways company, altho admitting they made a profit of about $3,000,000, emphatically informed the city council today that they will not grant any wage increase.

They stated that the men should be well satisfied and there has been a decided decrease in passenger trips on the lines in the last few weeks, with prospects of still further decrease in the future.

They claim that in other cities decreases have been accepted by local unions, and that the men are making unreasonable demands.

NEEDLE TRADES—Pittsburgh is not a good needle trades town, and things are in a rather demoralized state here at the present time. There is little chance of improvement, and quite a possibility of recessions. Busy season, of course, will soon be over.

FOOD INDUSTRY—Most of the bakers' unions suffered serious defeats in the conflict with the Ward Baking Company and are trying desperately to improve their situation. The foreign locals fared better than the American and strengthened their position during the strike.

METAL TRADES—There is a metal trades campaign on under the auspices of the American Federation of Labor, but there are tremendous obstacles to overcome. The employers of course in the district have powerful organizations and unlimited espionage.

What will be the result of this campaign we cannot say, except that the "Reds" are giving their best support.

Could Save Many Lives.

Half the accidents and deaths occurring in the coal mines of the country could probably be eliminated by more adequate safety supervision by operating companies and the exercise of greater care by mine employes, states W. W. Adams, statistician, Department of the Interior, in a report just made to the director of the bureau of mines.

BIG TASKS FACING THE WORKERS PARTY IN THE ST. LOUIS DISTRICT

By BARNEY MASS.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 25.—With forty-five thousand miners out of work and two hundred and fourteen mines shut down, the Illinois miner is beginning to view life differently.

The cause for his unbearable position, is not to be found in some individual boss, but in the damn capitalist system and its supporters, the reactionary officialdom of the United Mine Workers of America. It is needless to describe the suffering of the unemployed miner, as it is rehashing an old story, which the men feel and need not be told. The thing necessary is to show him ways and means of getting out of this living purgatory.

No longer do we hear sweeping denunciations of those damnable Reds! Because it was they who warned of the coming hard times, and pointed out the utter indifference with which the officials were meeting the situation. This is making the American miner think! Meetings held under the auspices of the Workers Party and the Young Workers League are better attended than was the case a few months past. In a state Farmer-Labor Party the miner is beginning to look with hope. In order to make a success of the state Farmer-Labor Party, it will be necessary to establish branches of the Workers Party in every mining camp.

By creating a powerful Workers Party in Illinois, and making the state Farmer-Labor Party a reality, in these measures, the miner will see offered him the opportunity out of his wretched conditions.

The miners are awakening and are becoming more friendly to us, so let's get on the job and win their confidence, our slogans a branch of the Workers Party in every mining camp, a successful state Farmer-Labor convention in Peoria on the intervening Sunday of the district United Mine Workers' convention.

WORKERS MARCH MAY DAY THRU NEW YORK CITY

First May Day Parade Since 1914

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, April 25.—The United Front May Day conference is planing a monster parade to take place in connection with the May Day celebration this year. This will be the first time since 1914 that the workers will march on the streets on Labor's International holiday.

Besides the parade which is being planned a number of open air rallies and indoor meetings will also be held.

In Harlem there will be an open air meeting at 110th Street and 5th Ave. In lower Manhattan the open air meeting will be held at Rutger's Square. In Brooklyn, a meeting is scheduled for Grand Street Extension.

Two indoor mass meetings will be held, one at Central Opera House, 67th street and 3rd avenue. At this meeting the Freiheit Gesang Verein which recently gave two concerts at Carnegie Hall, will be heard in a special May Day program. Brooklyn Labor Lyceum, 949 Willoughby Ave., will be the scene of another indoor rally with the Lithuanian Mandolin Orchestra, the Aida Chorus, and other musical numbers. Prominent speakers will address all these gatherings.

This year the workers will show their solidarity to protest against the rottenness and corruption that has been exposed in the highest government circles; against capitalism and the government which upholds it.

Workers, come in thousands and demonstrate. For Recognition of Soviet Russia. Demonstrate against the laws aimed to bar immigration and fingerprint aliens here. Fight for a Farmers' and Workers' Government.

Weather Agreeing, Y. W. L. Soccer Team Will Play On Sunday

Rain and the Park Commissioners interfered with the football soccer game scheduled for last Sundey at Humboldt Park. Previous to the bad signs of weather the Danes, who were scheduled to play the YWL, were told that they could not get a permit for Humboldt Park as long as they were to play the Young Workers League, for fear that the husky young reds may overthrow the government and win prestige by coming out ahead of their opponents.

However, if weather permits, the Young Workers' League will play this Sunday at their own grounds on Winemac and Robey. This game with the Danes is scheduled for 3 P. M.

Death Brings United Front To Mexico

By BERTRAM D. WOLFE

In face of the tremendous loss of their greatest national figure, Felipe Carrillo, and their greatest international leader Nicolai Lenin, the peasants and workers of the federal district here joined hands irrespective of party or faction in the most complete united front that Mexico has ever seen. In the auditorium of the school of engineering assembled members of the Agrarian, Communist, and Labor Parties and of the Socialist Party of the Southeast. Louis N. Morones, leader of the Mexican Federation of Labor, presided over the memorial meeting. Gutierrez Cruz, president of the League of Revolutionary Writers, bitter personal enemy of Morones, stood on the same platform to recite a poem he had written in honor of Nicolai Lenin. What was perhaps more impressive was the joint presence of long-standing political enemies on the same platform united in the bond of a common sorrow.

Inspirational Atmosphere.

The vast auditorium was decorated by the Union of Communist Painters. The center of the platform was occupied by an enormous canvas of the face of Lenin painted by Mexico's greatest artist, Diego Rivera, who had known the great Communist leader personally, and put all his love and admiration for the man in his futuristic canvas painted in jet black upon a red background. To the side of the Lenin painting was one painted by Xevier Guerrero of the dreamer's face of Felipe Carrillo, martyr governor of Yucatan, Socialist leader killed by the rebels in the recent uprising. The foreground of the stage was decorated to represent the soil, symbol of the agrarian movement in this dominantly agrarian country. The soil was jet black and torn by red furrows, and on it stood red plows with black steel blades. Above the stage hung a silver hammer and sickle, and o'ertopping everything else, the red star of Communism, illuminated, and casting over everything a strong red glow.

The side walls bore manifold legends such as; "The rifle in proletarian hands is the guarantee of liberty"; "The hennequen of Yucatan ties the sheaves of Russian wheat"; "Peasant, the earth yields a hundred for one and you get one for a hundred"; and most prominent of all—"Lenin has died but his work continues."

The meeting was opened by a speech of Diego Rivera on behalf of the Communist Party of Mexico. He traced the significance of Lenin in the world revolutionary movement, declaring that Leninism consisted above all in the judging aright of the role of the farmer and peasant in the revolutionary struggle. He pointed out that the slogan of 1905 of "a workers' and peasants' government", the slogan, "All power to the Soviets" of 1917, the new economic policy, the so-called Trotzky shears, and the formation by the Communist International of an international peasant-farmer organization, were logical realistic applications of the leninist estimate of the significance of the peasantry.

"Lenin Lives—Carrillo Lives!"

Turning with great emotion to the lifelike face he had painted on the stage, he declared: "Lenin lives! Carrillo lives! In the audience and in the Mexican region there are thousands of peasants, rifle in hand, avenging the death of Felipe Carrillo and carrying on his work to complete socialization of the land. In Russia there are millions of peasants rifles in hand ready to defend the work of Lenin and carry it to its conclusion in the socialization of the entire world. His work is the man and will live forever."

Followed two minutes of profound silence on the part of the audience and then Manuel Carpio, private secretary of the Minister of Agriculture, Ramon P. De Negri, got up the speak. He read De Negri's address to the audience for De Negri was on the Western battle front with the president. Lenin, declared the address, was a man of sober realities. He preached no creed or dogma. He created no glistening dreams. For this he was the greatest leader the workers and peasants had ever had.

The workers, the address continued, demand all and will continue to demand all till they win all. Lenin understood that to win all, a dictatorship of the proletariat was necessary. In place of the dictatorship of the Czar, he proposed neither the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie nor a personal dictatorship by himself, but the dictatorship of the working classes.

Leninism, declared De Negri's message, implied a new social ethics. Sooner or later humanity would put into practice this Leninism. The triumph of labor was written on the dawn by Lenin. His name will live while lives on the earth one man who toils.

Of Felipe Carrillo, De Negri's message spoke more briefly, but with equal intensity of feeling. He told how the Maya Indian and the mestizo (mixed breed) worker, had received a baptism of ideas from their great leader and how the Yucatan peninsula had been working out the problem of the emancipation of those who toil, under his able guidance. "The cowardly attack upon Felipe Carrillo is useless," concluded the minister of Agriculture. "His work lives on and his murder will be costly to the traitors who have perpetrated it and the rebel leaders who are morally responsible for the assassination, for he is transfused into the blood of a host of workers and peasants and they will avenge his death and complete his work."

Followed the secretary of the Agrarian Party, Lauro G. Galoca. He summed up what Leninsm meant to him with a few simple maxims such as "he who works shall eat, and he who does not work shall not"; "To each what he produces"; "Where there is no economic liberty, there exists none of the liberties whatsoever," and the like. The justice he preached, applied to Mexico meant redistribution of the land to those who tilled it. Caloca emphasized what he called Lenin's gift of knowing how to be mistaken.

Rifle Necessary Adjunct.

Followed again two minutes of silence and then a poem to Lenin by the revolutionary poet, Gutierrez Cruz. A band of 75 pieces played a funeral march and then Deputy Mena of the Socialist Party of the South East, of which Carrillo had been leader, spoke of the work of Felipe Carrillo in Yucatan. "Felipe's motto," he declared, "was: 'Give the toiler land, books and liberty.' Now from his death we learn to add to land, books and liberty, a rifle to protect these dearly bought freedoms from the oppressor."

Perhaps it is this realization of the lesson of the necessity of a proletarian dictatorship that explains the sudden drift toward Communism in certain circles in this land of contradictions, during the last month or two. Be the explanation what it may, the drift is obvious. The fact that Luis N. Morones stood on the same platform with Deigo Rivera tho Morones said never a word, is eloquent of that tendency. The frank praise on the part of the Minister of Agriculture for the dictatorship of the proletariat is even more eloquent. "We thought we could do it peacefully, but the rebellion has proved us mistaken. We see we may have to borrow a few leaves from Russian history," declared Robert Haberman, ever an avowed enemy of Communists and Communism, in a recent interview to an American newspaper. At all events, the loss of the greatest leader that the struggle for social freedom has produced, brought for a night at least, the united front for which worker and peasant are longing, and all factions of the farmer-labor movement voiced their gratitude as Mexco acknowledged its debt.

By LOUIS ZOOBOCK.

THE contention of many agricultural scholars that tenancy is only the first step on the "agricultural ladder"—in other words, the first step toward farm ownership—is absolutely without any foundation. An investigation by the Department of Agriculture for the period January, 1920, to March, 1923, for 94,000 farmers in 15 states showed that 8.5 per cent lost their farms thru foreclosure or bankruptcy and "that 15 per cent were in fact bankrupt, but still held their farms"; that "the percentage of farm owners who lost their farms varied from 6 per cent in the North Central States to nearly 20 per cent in the Mountain States." Another report showed very clearly how difficult it is for an agricultural laborer to acquire a farm out of his earnings. In 26 farm management surveys made in different parts of the United States it was shown that if the agricultural workers tried to buy a farm of average value there would be nothing left to live on in 13 out of 26 communities surveyed. "In other words, even making no allowance for living expenses there would be less than enough to make the annual payments on interest and principal, the deficit ranging from $28 to as much as $722. In eight of the remaining communities, after meeting the annual payments for interest and principal, there would be less than $200 for annual living expenses. Only in three communities was the remainder for living expenses above $300."

The farmers, under pressure of financial capital, are forced more and more into the status of landless agricultural workers; it has become next to impossible for an agricultural worker to acquire a farm; this will especially become clear when we describe the actual living conditions of the farmer-laborer.

In 1920 there were over 4,000,000 agricultural wage earners. Since that date the number has considerably increased.

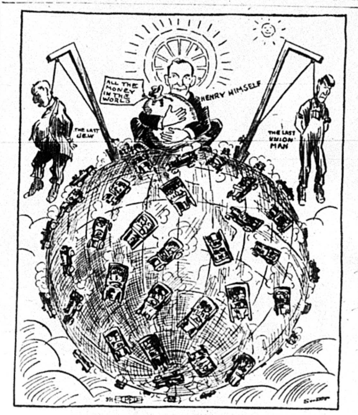
The type of work performed by these workers can be classified into regular and seasonal labor.

The development of machine agricultural production; the heightened land values, caused thru the speculation of financiers, tend to prevent laborers from becoming land owners and to fix them as a distinct economic and social class. The "hired man" is now an established institution on the farms of the United States. The conditions of work of the 'hired" regular laborers are deplorable. They are characterized by long hours, poor housing and lack of social recognition. The hired men are "expected to do with their might what their hands find to do." The type of more or less regular labor work either by the month or year; they are boarded in separate boarding houses provided for them by the employers. Another class of farm workers lives either in self-owned or rented houses and hires out for wages by the day or month. In the South, where the Negro is the larger source of farm labor, racial lines are observed and the Negroes are separately housed and fed.

In many places the hired men suffer under poor living conditions and harsh treatment. This is especially true in those places where the factory system of agriculture appeared. On the huge estates operated by managers, the wages are often exceptionally low. The large estates embrace whole towns and counties and are a law unto themselves; they are dictators of the lives, liberties and happiness of their employes, because they control the schools, churches and local governments, as well as the chance and means of labor. Not seldom the workers are paid in coupons or scrip which must be traded out at the estate store. The absentee landlords, who generally live in the East or in Europe, thus sapping labor of its just dues and the local community of its income. In the South, as it is well known, considerable peonage exists.

One of the worst features of farm labor is that of seasonal employment. Seasonal labor at present comprises a large proportion of the farm workers. It is made up of workers who hire out usually for the crop season, and those who work in gangs, at day labor, or at specified tasks six to eight weeks in duration.

The industries of the cities are the greatest ultimate source of supply of seasonal agricultural workers. Thousands of city workers, during periods of industrial depressions, emigrate to nearby farming communities for a few weeks or a whole season in order to supplement their meager earnings. The conditions of life of this class of agricultural workers are such "as to inevitably weaken their character and physique, to make them carriers of disease, and to create in them a habit of unsteadiness and migration." On the farms these workers are regarded as social pariahs; they are usually lodged in barns and stacks. When they return to the city to spend time between seasons, "they not only meet the unhealthy and demoralizing influences of the cheap lodging houses, saloons, houses of prostitution, and other similar establishments in the slums, but they fall easy prey to gamblers, small private bankers and all sorts of parasites." Such is the lot of the seasonal agricultural worker.



The Dream of Henry Ford

Child Labor.

In the South conditions are shocking. Here, as professor J. Smith has described there is a very "large class of one-mule tenant croppers who are forced early every spring to sign papers that mortgage away their crops long before they even break ground to plant them. They must have bacon, bread, coffee, clothing, and mule-feed; they want tobacco, ribbons, chewing gum, and other indulgences, but before the landlord will sell to them or 'stand for them' at the country store they must sign the papers, tho it takes the bread from their babies mouth, keeps the winter shoes from their little feet, and deprives them of their only cows that supply their babies with milk. The landlord sees to it that the papers are signed either with name or crossmark, and he furthermore sees to it as a rule that the amount he 'stood for' comes out of the crop before any of it can go for shoes, dresses, ribbons, or anything else for the personal use of the cropper. Such is the tenant system of very poor thruout the Southland, and it applies to white and negro alike. It guarantees the rent to the landlord, and it insures poverty to the tenant and deprives him of his freedom. He binds himself out for a season for bread and clothes for himself and family." This description explains why the children of the agricultural laborers work on the cotton fields of the South; Thruout the cotton regions, children between the ages of 6 and 15 work in the fields performing a large proportion of the labor.

Somewhat similar conditions prevail in other parts of the country. In the sugar beet fields, "children of 5 and 6, thin, weed, pull, top, pile and cover beets at the various stages of the season." They work between 10 and 14 hours a day, which leads to countless accidents. A national Child Labor Committee says: "we saw wrists that were swollen and lame, hands that were sore, cracked and full of dirt, and knees that were sore, cracked, and calloused. The glare of the sun is a very severe strain upon the eyes of many children." Fingers accidently amputated in "topping" the beets, rheumatism and other ailments from exposure to all weathers; were cited as being all to common. On the cotton fields of California children as young as four pick from sunrise to sunset, etc.

The hours of labor of the agricultural wage earners are exceedingly long. They range from 9 to 14 per day according to the type of farm, season and employer. In many places, where piece work prevails, the hours are longer; and in the sugar beet fields men, women and children work literally "day and night." This is probably true in other agricultural work done by the job. Saturday half-holiday is given only by a few individual farmers. In brief, the working day on the farm is longer than the working day in industry; and the agricultural workers have neither leisure for recreation nor time for sufficient rest.

The wages of the agricultural workers are miserably low. In 1920, the average monthly wage of the farm laborer was $46.89 with board and $64.95 without board. Since that date there was a decided drop in wages. In 1921, the monthly wages of the agricultural hand were: $30.14 with board, and $43.39 without board, and by October 1, 1922, the figures were $28.97 with board and $41.58 without board. At present they are still lower. The figures show that between 1920 and October 1, 1822, monthly wages with board declined 38 per cent; without board 36 per cent while the cost of living declined only 23.2 per cent for the same period.

The figures quoted above represnt the average wages of the farm-hand thruout the U. S.; in many regions the wages are very much lower than the average quoted. In the South, where the cropper system of tenancy prevails, "life is reduced to its lowest terms in money." A study of conditions of 329 farmers in Chatham and W-ms counties, North Carolina, has shown the following results:

GROSS DAILY INCOME (1921)

		Per person daily
135	White Owners	34c a day
41	Black "	32c " "
38	White Renters	14c " "
13	" Croppers	8 " "
36	" Croppers	10c " "

The above figures are fairly representative of the conditions which prevail thruout the South. The croppers, as shown, live on an average cash income of 8 cents and upon some such pauper wage the South over. Can they hope to ever secure and pay for a farm of their own?

Housing Conditions

The housing conditions of the landless farmers are shocking. They are characterized by unendurable filth, primitive sanitary facility and overcrowding. Thruout the rural regions of the United States, a marked contrast is noticeable between the housing conditions of the farm owners and farm tenants. An investigation of the Interchurch World Movement made in 1920 in some of the best farming sections of New Jersey and Pennsylvania shows wretched housing conditions of the tenant farmers; the houses were described as merely places, whose function was "to furnish a roof and rooms in which to eat and sleep."

In the South, the housing of the tenants is particularly bad. On many plantations, it is the custom to supply the house free of rent; the reason being that most of these rent houses "are not fit to house the landlords' hogs." The houses are usually very small, consisting of two or three rooms; the negro tenant's house often does not possess even glass windows; and "light and ventilation are received thru the opening that is protected from rain and by a small door on hinges." In most of the dwellings of the farmers "it is possible to study astronomy thru the holes in the roof and geology thru cracks in the floor"; and it is in a building of this kind that as many as ten people are housed.

The housing of the large numbers of migratory workers is beyond any description. The types of housing and accommodations include barns, "shacks on wheels," "bunk houses," shacks which are often mere coverings from the weather, etc. On the truck farms of Maryland, the camps provided for the workers are barn-like shacks; usually one or two rooms are shared by 30 to 100 persons of both sexes and all ages. In the Michigan sugar beet fields, it was found that 14 families of four and five persons, and four families with from six to nine persons were living in one room shanties. One family of eleven, the youngest child, two years, the oldest 16 years, lived in an old country store which had but one window; the wind and rain came thru the holes in the walls, the ceiling was very low, and the smoke from the stove filled the room. Here the family ate, cooked and washed. In Tuscolo county a family of six was found living in a one-room shack with no windows; light and ventilation were thru the open door.

Such are the living conditions of the landless farmers; conditions which they were thrown into by the ruthless exploitation of the capitalists. The natural question to ask is: How to remedy these conditions? And there is only one answer to be given; remove the cause; destroy the system that generated these evils, and this can only be accomplished thru the organization of a strong class-conscious Farmer-Labor Party, whose slogan should be: A Workers' and Farmers' Republic of the United States.

Emphasis on Communist Education

By MARTIN ABERN

Comrade Rebecca Grecht writes interestingly in the DAILY WORKER on the subject, "Communist Education—A Pressing Need." Substantially, there can be little disagreement with her opinion that Communist education has not been sufficienly emphasized and that there is a need of co-ordinating the various phases of Party activity so that each balances the other in a beneficial way.

A big problem of the Party is to gather organizational strength. A strong organization campaign is essential. The Party has been carrying on political struggles beyond its organizational strength. It has gained much influence among sections of the workers and farmers thru its political activity, especially in the campaigns for a mass Farmer-Labor Party and for the protection of the foreign-born workers. Its political influence exceeds its organizational strength. It is necessary therefore that the Party gain more than it has organizationally from its political and industrial activities. Unless such an organizational strengthening is obtained, then the political value of the Party's work is somewhat diminished. In Germany, for instance, the Communist Party carried on immense campaigns among the workers; its ideas dominated the masses, but recruits to the German Party in a corresponding degree were not obtained. The masses did not fully recognize that it was the Communist Party of Germany which was instrumental in putting forward these ideas and slogans. Consequently, much of the work of the German Communist Party did not materialize in organizational gain. It did not receive the proper credit for its work. Much of the work must perforce, therefore, be done over again, in a measure, in order to turn the minds of the workers directly towards the German Communist Party as the genuine working class leader.

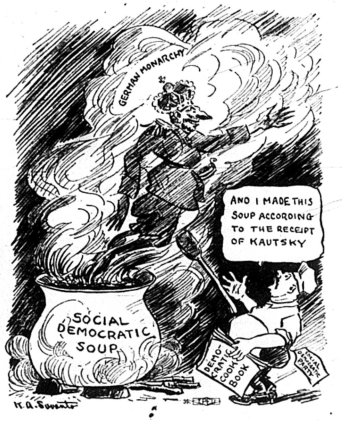
The Workers Party has been, and is, the dynamic force behind the Farmer-Labor movement. This is recognized in a greater or lesser degree, but not sufficiently so. The emphasis of the Party has been on the campaign and propaganda by the Workers Party for the formation of a mass F.-L. P. and not enough on the need of organizing the influence thus gained into the ranks of the Workers Party itself. Propagandically, from the standpoint of gaining much influence for the Workers Party among the rank and file trades unionists and other workers, the July 3rd Conference in Chicago is an example. Leaving aside the question of the formation of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, there can be no doubt that the Party enormously increased its prestige and influence.

But passing events, the swift development of the Farmer-Labor movement, sweeping into its ranks many who formerly opposed such a movement, or were lukewarm toward it, have resulted in the Party not holding entirely the influence obtained thru its farmer-labor party campaign. This is in part because the Party stressed the political necessity of a mass farmer-labor party, but not enough the role of the Workers Party and the need of organizing those workers close to it into the ranks of the Workers Party. Because the Party placed foremost, it seems, the necessity of the formation of a farmer-labor party and not enough of the W. P. itself, many now accept the F.-L. P. movement, but do not see the positive role the Workers Party played in it. Today there are more who will stress the need for a huge organizational campaign by the Workers Party.

Our Party played a tremendous role in the recent United Mine Workers Convention. It is necessary to organize this influence into membership into the Workers Party. Only the Communists, in the last analysis, can be depended upon. Many miners are very sympathetic to the efforts the Party comrades made at the U. M. W. A. convention. Strong attempts must be made to bring them into the Party and to acquaint them closely with the role and program of the Workers Party in order that the future activities in the U. M. W. A. can be even more positive and steadily broadened, and the work of transforming the U. M. W. A. into a revolutionary organization hastened.

Party Education Is Imperative.

Political, organizational, industrial and Communist educational activity must go on simultaneously, in as close a degree and ratio to each other as is physically possible. Then our members will better understand and more surely carry out the Party's political directives and other work. Even as the political influence of the Party is greater than its organizational strength, so also is the political activity not sufficiently countered by a corresponding Communist understanding on the part of the members as a whole. In efforts to get out mass political propaganda, we have often run away from the members insofar as the mass of the members did not always comprehend clearly what the Party was trying to carry out. There was not sufficient clarity of the members on policy. The Labor Party policy, among others, is one. If there is to be a 100 per cent response from the membership, they must fully know and understand what is wanted. The need of more intense Communist education is hence, as Comrade Grecht says, obvious.



Back Again!

The Two Forms of Education.

Our educational work takes on, of course, the forms of internal education, or education within the Party, and external education, or education among the masses. With the latter we need not deal here, except to say that our propaganda among the masses must deal with the elementary principles of the class struggle and the A B C of Communism. We must not speak above the heads of the members of our class who have, on the whole, never been affected by radical or revolutionary doctrines, but, on the contrary, have been poisoned against them.

But the problem and need of the education of the membership has reached a point where every possible action to satisfy this need must be taken. The level of Communist understanding of the members must be raised; it must easily be above the understanding of those outside the Party, if the Party members are to make their influence felt among the sympathetic, neutral or non-partisan workers. Not only in America are we faced by this situation, but even in Russia the Party is confronted with the task of raising the cultural level of the nuclei (the Party political units) in order that they may distinctly remain far ahead of the non-partisan elements. Of course, purely pedagogical means are not enough; for the raising of the Party intellectual standard is a political problem, which means that besides the internal teaching mediums, the whole Party must carry out the Party tasks. Thus, thru schooling and struggle the level of Party understanding is raised. Every member, then, must be drawn into Party life and made to understand that he is a necessary part of the Party organism.

Bring Branch Discussions To Daily Questions.

There must be at the Party meetings, especially in the branches, more discussions on topics very close to the daily lives of the workers. The large political problems will interest the Party member, of course, but these must, further, be brought closer to his daily life and to the lives of other workers. The branches should have discussion by the members on life in the shop. Every member can and should speak five or ten minutes on conditions as he finds them in his shop and how it affects him and his fellow workers. These are matters which are close enough to him to understand thoroly. This is always interesting.

An effort should be made to develop more systematically the Communist education of the members. Theoretical training will be obtained, in a large measure, thru study classes, lectures, discussions on important current events, a study of the labor movement, its problems in this country, etc. All branches must institute study, lecture, or shop nuclei classes. Whether the lecture, text books, or other methods will have to be employed by a branch or shop nucleus will have to be determined by the local conditions and teaching facilities, but a strong effort must be made to increase the educational and teaching apparatus. It is to be hoped that the Party can institute soon District and National training schools where the selected comrades can go thru a course of Communist theory and practice. One thing is certain, that not as much has been done as is possible, even with the physical limitations prevailing in the Party. Still, unless the Communist understanding of the members is increased in a much greater degree, the Party will find itself greatly handicapped in its organizational, industrial and political activity.

Education Thru Class Struggle.

Organizers and speakers who have visited the membership from coast to coast are frank to declare that not only must there be a greater intensification of Communist educational activity, but that there must be carried on activity to make the members understand how to carry out even the elementary and routine work of the Party.

To build up the Party, to increase its political and other activities, we must have a trained officialdom. Functionary training must be made a vital part of our education. Organizational and functional strength, trained officials, will be obtained thru actual work in carrying out the Party program and thru functionary classes to hasten the development of trained officials. Functionary classes should be started wherever possible to teach the members how to handle meetings and other posts, large and small, in the Party. Each member should be assigned duties to perform with a view to building up the Party and learning thru work and experience the best methods of procedure. Communist education, whether in theory or in training of Party functionaries, cannot be gotten just from text books. A theoretical training is essential. At the same time, we must recognize that one of our slogans is: Education, not only thru books, but education thru active participation in the class struggle, in the daily lives and struggles of the workers. Education thru activity and activity thru education is our method.

Making the Work Cohesive.

Another need, in the writer's opinion, is to bring the members closer to the Central Executive Committee of the Party, and other official bodies, such as the District Executive Committees.

The Central Executive Committee must not be removed from the members, as if one were composed of the untouchable goods and the other of the lowly meek. Of course, this situation or impression by no means prevails.

There can be no doubt, however, that it would produce a healthy effect if comrades active in the various political, industrial, or other spheres, were brought more often before the Central Executive Committee to discuss and give their points of view.

Youth Is Keynote In Problem.

In carrying out its political and other policies, the Party must not forget the Young Workers League movement. In the Young Workers League, an English-speaking young Communist movement is being developed. The real basis for an American leadership of the Communist movement which can make itself felt in the American labor and political movement is here being laid. Every encouragement should be given to the young workers' movement. Those who are joining the Young Workers League are new to the radical and revolutionary, or Communist movement. Their brains are open to clean cut Communist education and activity. They have not most of the confusion which many comrades of the Workers Party brought with them from the Socialist Party. The latter is nothing to be scornful about; it is merely a condition of fact. The young workers have been born into a period of militarism and imperialism; there are no pacifist illusions about them. They can grasp Communist thought and action without difficulty, whereas many Party comrades who have lived in the period of social reform and pacifism find it difficult. These are but a few of the reasons why the Party must lend strong encouragement and aid to the Young Workers League and thus lay a real basis for a strongly-knit Workers Party.

Shop Units Organization of the Party.

A very essential matter which must claim the attention of the Party more than ever before is the shop nuclei, or shop unit form of organization. The shop nuclei form of organization has been proved the correct political Christmas Eve.

A big bright star was to rise on Christmas Eve to unite all men—but no star could yet be seen. The mother of Doctor Federoff was busy making pies and was happy because a Christmas star would rise in the evening, because there would be pelmenis in the house, and for once, no potatoes at all, and, above all, because Vassia was her only son—her all. And there would be napkins, and a table cloth, and kerosene oil, and sweets, and pelmenis—the best pelmenis in the city.

Joy mixed with deepest sorrow—was the mother's; sorrow mixed with keenest joy—was the son's. The Doctor chopped wood and heated the stove for his mother, and his heart was overflowing with a fervent tenderness, with a fervent love for his mother. His mamma, his mammy, troubled and happy at the same time, was fussing around the pelmenis, sweets and the mutton pie.

On Christmas Night a ball was given at the Voyenkom's. There was an orchestra, waiters, geese, pork, cognac, cavalry, jjonka, cakes, pies, candy, tableaux vivants, games of forfeit, charades, flying post, speeches. It was a joint meeting of the third element, i. e., the intelligentzia, and the representatives of the Communist munist Party.

But nothing special was happening on Christmas at the house of Ivan Petrowitch Bekesh, for if some people could and did find various provisions in the starving city, Bekesh was completely helpless. Together with his wife, mother, god-mother, and child he was forced to live on potatoes which, altho including all his rations up to July, were in just sufficient quantity to end the starving family's days by certain death in spring.

Early on Christmas Eve Doctor Fedoroff and the writer Iakov Kamynin stepped in to see Ivan Petrovitch Bekesh. In the blue twilight they came, walking in the crisp snow along many side-streets. Skirting the fields they came thru the suburbs and past houses buried in snow to the roof. They found Ivan Petrovitch playing vingt-et-un with his wife, mother, and god-mother. He took his guests into his study containing a double-bed, a Japanese fan, and a table with postal cards arranged in symetric order. Kamynin who nearly reached up to the ceiling, sat down without removing his hat. Ivan Petrowitch knew why the writer and the doctor had come. Still he said:

"Well, how did you blow in? It's quite an age since I saw you."

"On foot" answered Kamynin. "Yes."

"Ha, ha, ha," Bekesh snickered, "of course."

"Have a smoke; the makhorka is quite strong; how are you getting on?"

"Hm... poor business. We live and eat, the truth to tell, there is precious little to eat."

Silence. Smoke.

"We came to see you about the diary."

"Oh, I see, about the diary. All right, I have not changed my mind, but.."

"Then you agree to sell it?"

"I have not changed my mind, but, really, of what use is it to you? Amusement, I suppose."

"I need it" said Kamynin and drew the smoke.

"It is for Olga Veralskaya, for my dear Olenka"—Doctor Fedoroff was thinking with acute pain.

"Yes, I suppose, as material for your writing."

"That's it. I need it as material."

"But allow me to ask, Iakov Sergeyevitch, what you found interesting in it."

"Well, you know... Quite a lot, yes."

"Are you going to write a novel around it?"

"Well, I do not know. Perhaps."

They remained silent.

"How about the diary?"

"I am afraid I can not give it to you at this price."

"What price?"

"The one agreed upon. I am selling it to you only because you are a writer. I would not sell it to any one else."

"But nobody else would buy it except as wrapping paper."

"You are right. You are absolutely right. Remember, however, that I put all my soul into it, all my life."

"May be."

"And you want it for a thousand roubles!"

Doctor Fedoroff looked at the trembling hand of Ivan Petrovitch Bekesh and at his pale forehead. Ivan Petrovitch sat unnaturally erect, fidgeting as if he were on strings. And in the movements of his body, in the sweat of his forehead there was something loathsome, something cringing, calculating. Ivan Kamynin, who had written fifteen books, and who looked like another Don Quixote, sat there with his bony legs spread wide apart, with his hat on, smoking wearily, speaking slowly and also wearily. "Olenka, Olenka, dearest, precious" thought Fedoroff and his heart was filled with love and pain.

"Upon my word, Iakov Sergeyevitch, I do not know where it is. Parts of it are in the lumber room and you have other parts. Let us speak of something else."

"Nonsense; let us have done with that first."

Ivan Petrovitch got under the table and took out a bundle of copy books.

"How disgusting all this. Very disgusting. And what if one believes in nothing"—thought Doctor Federoff and turned his glance away. Kamynin rolled up another cigarette and began to undo the bundle.

"Have another smoke! The makhorka is quite strong... Well, how much, then?"

"There is some of my poetry here, too."

"All right, how much do you want for the whole thing?"

"Oh, you want to know the price? Upon my word I did not intend selling it. I really do not know."

"What human wretchedness" thought Doctor Federoff. "And what if one believes in nothing? Olga Veralskaya believes in nothing, and yet her comb is sewn up carefully with cotton so that no one may notice it is broken. And mother, mammy dear, is busy making pelmenis in the city. And all for him, for Doctor Fedoroff. But the diary is for Olga Veralskaya." Then the Doctor said aloud:

Ivan Petrovitch was watching Kamynin turn the pages, and suddenly his face brightened.

"All right, I accept your offer; only, please, leave me this copy book. It is quite small; it contains the story of my love for Olga Veralskaya. Her own notes on the margin are a precious memory for me. My first love. It is nothing to you. But to me her notes are most important. She wrote them in pencil. Leave them there."

"Yes, I can leave them" said Kamynin.

"No, no, take them too," said the doctor with emotion.

"Leave them, doctor," said Kamynin; "it's a trifle."

"Vassia, you are the friend of my childhood days, leave them with me" —pleaded Bekesh.

"All right, it's all the same to me, all the same. Still I am very sorry" —said Doctor Fedoroff. "All right."

"My soul. And so cheap!"—this from Bekesh.

And again the two walked silently thru side streets, in the deep snow, in the blue twilight. Only the red light in the West had now gone out, and the twilight was driving the starry Christmas nails into the firmament. A beautiful woman was coming towards them. She was wrapped in a shawl and two pails were hanging from a beam across her shoulders. Ivan Sergeyevitch looked intently at her and stopped, spreading his legs wide apart—which made him look like Don Quixote and a pair of scissors at the same time. Then he said:

"Have a smoke... There is beauty even in pain. What a beautiful woman. Yes... and do you know, I've got three poods* of cod liver oil and potatoes, and I can go on living and cultivating beauty for two years. I must write a book. I have written fifteen books already and each about a different woman. My wife, I think, is living with Tanatar. What does Olga Veralskaya really represent? She is very beautiful. What a beautiful woman—the one with pails!"

"It is the wife of Bekesh"—said Fedoroff.

"Maybe. But Bekesh is already selling his diary and I have still plenty of cod-liver oil."

"Iakov Sergeyevitch, are you not afraid?"

"I am, but I must write the book." —Kamynin added that he had beside potatoes and cod-liver oil also some denatured alcohol. Then the two separated.

"Kamynin's wife was absent. Keeping his hat and coat on, Kamynin found an old sword, peeled some potatoes with it and cooked them. He was crouching on the floor, and as he went into his work his mouth twisted convulsively to one side. He drank some denatured alcohol, some cod-liver oil, and soon fell asleep. His face now bore a calm and bright expression, tho his lips were still nervously contracted.

And Doctor Fedoroff had pelmenis. There were also pies, napkins, a big lamp, and his mother was fussing about and repeating:

"Eat, Vassenka, eat, my darling, have some more, my boy."

The food was nice, but there were not enough pelmenis to appease his hunger. And his mother had been too busy to do her hair up for Christmas or to remove her old apron.

But all over the earth people were celebrating the holiday when Satan cast his spell over the earth for the last time before the coming of spring, sunlight and joy.

A note was brought to Doctor Fedoroff.

AT CHRISTMAS people usually dress in their best clothes, go visiting their friends, retire at 4 in the morning, make merry, organize soirees, five o'clock teas, balls, make love and feel reborn as it were, tho in reality they remain the same; they suffer exactly as they did before or dodge suffering—also as they used to do. On this particular Christmas day everybody went to the Communist Club. All day long comrade Tanatar was driving thru the city in his troika,* giving rides to every girl he knew.

And all night long Tanatar, the handsome Caucasian, Tanatar, lay like a huge tired cat before the holy images in the empty house of his father. The image lamps were burning in front of him, the silver of the ikons was shining dimly. Comrade Tanatar lay there crouching as if ready to leap, and his eyes, deep-set under the eyebrows, intense black spots on his dark thin face, seemed frenzied with the yellow reflection from the image-lamps. His wife, pale and white, appeared on the threshold and said noiselessly:

"Get up, Samuel." And Tanatar pressed more closely to the floor in maddening, agonizing fear. Once, at the front beyond the Volga, Tanatar stepped accidentally on a black lizard. Its bowels leaked out, its eyes started from its head; if Tanatar's wife had seen that lizard then, she would have noticed that Samuel's eyes on this Christmas night were exactly like the eyes of the lizard on that day in the steppe.

FIGHT TO STOP DEPORTATION OF 13 POLITICALS

But U. S. Is Bent On Driving Out Radicals

By LUDWELL DENNY.
(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

NEW YORK, April 25.—To prevent unjust deportation of 13 alien political prisoners, members of the Industrial Workers of the World, who were granted conditional commutation by President Harding, the American Civil Liberties union and General Defense committee are appealing to Secretary of Labor Davis to reopen hearings on these cases. A protest meting called by the two organizations at the Civic club, New York, passed a resolution asking Secretary Davis to take action which will permit the men to remain in the United States on the ground that they were convicted solely for expression of opinion which does not render them undesirable residents that deportation would add another penalty to their imprisonment, and that they merit special consideration in view of Harding's action.

This appeal was orginally to have been made in behalf of 17 aliens. But William Weyn, a German, has died from tuberculosis, following imprisonment. Jacob Torri has already been deported to Italy, where the Fascisti are awaiting to "get" him. The acting immigration commissioner in Washington has already reopened the cases of John Avilla (Portugal) and Morris Levine (Russian).

A recent supreme court decision in the case of five of the men overruled the district court on the ground that they do not come under the ex post facto provision of the immigration act by which Secretary Davis had ordered their deportation. The supreme court further ruled that deportation cannot legally be considered a punishment. The court returned the cases to the secretary of labor because conviction under the espionage act does not constitute proof that the convicted are undiserable residents. The secretary of labor may on either grounds, however, declare them undesirable. This Davis can do without further hearings. The five men referred to others than Avilla whose case has been reopened, are: Wm. Moran, Australia; Herbert Mahler, Canada; Piero Nigra, Italy; Joseph Oates, England. Except Nigra who served a full term of 18 months, these men served full five-year sentences at Leavenworth and refused Harding's commutation.

Five others, held at Ellis Island for two months after accepting Harding's commutation, are out on bond under appeal against the decision of Justice Manton denying release on writs of habeas corpus. Their cases are awaiting arguments in the U. S. court of appeals. They are Richard Brazier, England; Joe Graber, Poland; Peter Green, Czech-slovakia; Don Sheridan, Scotland; James Slovick, Russia.

The four remaining cases are pending in the courts: Harry Lloyd and Bert Lorton, England; James. Mulrooney, Australia; James Phillips, Russia.

Most of the men left their native country many years ago, have forgotten the language and are without friends or relatives there. They are penniless and if deported some must leave behind wife and children who are American citizens. Richard Brazier, one of the men, told the Civic Club meeting. Roger Baldwin, Civil Liberties union, presided. About $130 was raised for the defense.

The Central Illinois Company serves Buffalo, Lanesville, Mechanicsburg, Illiopolis, Niantic and Harristown. The Decatur division of the Power and Light lines and their control will be in charge of M. L. Harry, general manager of the Decatur division.

The Western Illinois Company serves La Harpe, Blandinsville and Stronghurst. These lines will be operated from the Monmouth offices of the corporation, which are in charge of R. F. Carley, Galesburg, and general manager of the Galesburg-Monmouth division of the company.

"Suspicious Person" Fined.

CANTON, Ohio, April 25.—Nick Calot is asking what makes a "suspicious person" suspected, and of what. He gave Calot a $25 fine and costs.

THE ASIATIC GIANT AWAKENS

LABOR AND CAPITAL CLASH IN CHINA

THREE CHIEF FIGURES IN BIG CONFLICT

By JACK ARMITAGE.
(Exclusive to the Daily Worker.)

HONGKONG, March 24—The teeming millions of the East—approximating some 1,000 million dollars, including the Eastern Soviet Republic—must, with the awakening which is even now taking place, have a marked influence on the economic status of the Occidental worker. Whether that influence eventually will be good or evil, must depend largely on the outcome of the struggle for supremacy which is taking place.

Today, all the nations of the East are in the melting pot. The state of flux in which they find the Orient has opened before the eyes of foreign capitalists vistas of illimitable wealth, can they but gain control.

Some of the cleverest brains in the capitalistic world are busily engaged on this problem—such men as Hugo Stinnes (German industrialist), Robert Dollar (American shipping magnate) and Sir N. J. Stabb (general manager, Honghong and Shanghai Banking Corporation) being three among many that cross one's mind.

Any attempt to cover such a vast field in one article, even in a cursory manner would not only be futile, but must of necessity prove misleading. To discuss even the economic position of the nations of the East in one article would prove a herculean task. For that reason, and as China is receiving particular attention from the capitalists just now, I propose to confine this article to that country.

A Common Misapprehension.

Many people labor under the misapprehension that China finds itself barely able to support its 400 or 500 million people, and is therefore, in a state of chronic poverty. That statement is a frigid and calculated capitalistic lie.

The fact of the matter is that China, with its age old conservatism and economy is in a better position regarding natural resources than any other country in the world. The potentialities are unbounded. Her economic and financial positions are both remarkably solid.

There are, in China, immense deposits of the finest coal and iron, thousands of square miles in extent, which have been but barely scratched while, as an agricultural nation, even with her antiquated method of cultivation with the hoe, she is able to compete successfully in the world's markets, so industrious are her people and so extraordinary the fertility of her soil.

The national debt of China is little more than $2 gold per head, while such nations as Britain approximate some $700 gold per head. Small wonder then that the foreign capitalist is working assiduously in this uncultivated field of wealth.

Chaos Fostered by Capitalists.

For generations past China has been torn by internal dissensions. These have been more marked since the Revolution of October, 1911, and the inauguration of a Republic in February, 1912. Internal bickerings, largely fostered by foreign capitalists apparently have afforded increased opportunities for exploitation, tho, up to the present, the concessions wrung from China have been more apparent than real, China has always managed temporarily to shelve her internal quarrels in the face of the greater menace of foreign intervention. In order to get a grasp of the situation some conception of the aims and objectives, also the past history of the three outstanding Chinese leaders is essential.

Three Outstanding Figures in China.

These undoubtedly are, Dr. Sun Yet Sen, the Southern Socialist leader; General Wu Pei Fu, military dictator at Peking; and Chang Tso Lin, Manchurian War Lord.

A glimpse into their past history disclosed that, with the exception of Sun Yat Sen, each of these leaders has trimmed his sails to any passing political breeze. Both Wu Pei Fu and Chang Tso Lin have been opportunists pure and simple, while the Socialist leader, Sun Yat Sen, has remained true to his principles in the face of many adversities and temptations.

China's Socialist Leader.

Sun Yat Sen, son of a farmer, born 1866 in the Hsiangsang district of Kwangtung province, was educated in the Alice Memorial Hospital, Hongkong, graduating as a licentiate of Medicine and Surgery, in 1892. He started practice in the Portuguese settlement at Macao, some 40 miles from Hongkong, where he organized the Young China Party, subsequently settling in Canton where he became an active revolutionary.

After the failure of the attempted revolution at Canton, in 1895, he fled to Macao, and thence proceeded to Hongkong, Japan, Honolulu and America, gathering many adherents to the Reform party.

Kidnapped.

Dr. Sun's movements were closely watched by the Chinese Government, and, on his arrival in England in 1896 he was tracked day and night by agents of the Chinese Legation. On October 11, by order of the Chinese Minister he was seized outside the Legation premises and held under the pretext that he was a dangerous lunatic. He managed to get in touch with Dr. Cantlie, who demanded his release, but for 12 days the Chinese Minister managed to keep him prisoner. In the meantime, Dr. Cantlie had raised such an outcry that the Chinese authorities were forced to desist in their plan for shipping Sun to China, where his shrift would have been extremely short, and at the end of the twelfth day the Socialist leader was released. On his release he continued his tour as a revolutionary propagandist, travelling thru Europe, America and the East.

President.

The outbreak of the Wuchang rebellion found Sun in England, but he came to China at the end of 1911 and was elected Provisional President of the Republic by the Nanking Council. On the abdication of the Manchus, he resigned the Presidency, with the understanding that Yuan Shi Kai should be elected in his stead, and toured South China, spreading the doctrine of Socialism as he went. That tour is today bearing fruit, for the South has produced a crop of sturdy rebels who have been the biggest factor in preventing the reintroduction of a Monarchy.

In 1912, he was invited by the President to return to Peking, where the populace gave him a splendid welcome. He immediately set about effecting a number of much-needed reforms, and defeated many of the get-rich-quick schemes of American and European financiers, whose deadly enmity he has ever since retained. For a time his enemies, combined with his restless rebel spirit kept him on the move, but everywhere he gained adherents to the doctrines of Socialism.

His strong advocacy of a genuine republican form of Government caused the overthrow of the corrupt Kwangsi officials at Canton in 1921, at the hands of General Chen Ching Ming, and Sun Yat Sen was invited to the presidency of the Southern Republican Government, being elected in April of that year.

Socialistic Rule at Canton.

On my visit to Canton in February, 1922, I was particularly struck with the improvements in city planning and sanitation which Dr. Sun had introduced. Workers were given better wages and shorter hours, and —an innovation practically unknown in China—public parks and recreation grounds were provided for the masses. This policy had a direct repercussion on Labor in the adjoining British Colony in Hongkong, where Chinese workers demanded some relief from the awful conditions of slavery prevailing under their capitalistic task-masters.

I was also fortunate enough to obtain an interview with Mr. Frank Lee, at that time Director of Foreign Affairs. The policy of Sun Yat Sen, as outlined by Mr. Lee, was one in every way beneficial to the worker, and was being courageously pursued in the face of almost incredible difficulties and opposition from foreign financial interests, both American and British.

An Inspiring Strike.

In this policy Dr. Sun had the backing of the Kuomingtang, a powerful Radical political party, and also the support of organized Labor. Indeed, he was largely instrumental in organizing the Chinese Seamen's Union, which inflicted such a salutary lesson on British capitalists in the strike which took place in January, 1922, followed later by the general strike and the complete capitulation of the employers.

That strike constitutes one of the most inspiring illustrations of the value of organization in the history of the workers' struggle for emancipation. The solidarity displayed by the Chinese worker was a revelation to one who had had considerable experience of the genus blackleg in Occidental industrial upheavals. There were no scabs.

A Socialistic Judas.

However, even China was able to produce a traitor, tho not of the working class. He appeared in the person of General Chen Ching Ming, who had been previously one of the strongest supporters of Dr. Sun's policy. It seems that jealousy of his leader had rankled in the mind of this Judas, and within a year Dr. Sun was compelled to flee from Canton to Shanghai. Chen, who it is asserted was bribed by Hongkong financiers, hatched a plot for the assassination of Dr. Sun and his wife, both of whom narrowly escaped with their lives.

For a time Labor Unions and leaders, who were unswerving in their loyalty to Sun, were subjected to much persecution, but eventually, owing to the disgraceful rule of Chen Ching Ming, Sun was requested by the populace of Canton to return, which he did, being received with open arms.

The ship of state, under Sun, has navigated some stormy seas, but in spite of several international gales and numerous internal stiff breezes he has weathered the storm.

Within the past few months foreign financial vultures saw—or thought they did—an opportunity to plunge their beaks and talons into the carcass of an apparently defunct Southern China. But the "corpse" proved disconcertingly virile, for, with the danger of further depredations by foreign birds of prey, China's internal quarrels were quickly forgotten, and a united front was presented to the common enemy.

The fancied opportunity arose over the disposal of the Chinese Maritime Customs surplus. The C. M. R., it must be explained, is guarantee for certain foreign loans. All foreign obligations having been met there usually remains a surplus, which, so far, has been paid to Peking. As the South is at war with Peking, this allocation of all surplus funds caused a pretty little squabble with Chinese leaders apparently irreconcilably divided.

Sun threatened that he would meet only his proportion of international obligations with Southern customs funds and retain the balance for the use of his Government. This, however, did not suit the Powers and seventeen warships of various nationalities were rushed to Canton. To the surprise of foreign diplomats, Chen Ching Ming, Wu Pei Fu and Chang Tso Lin all joined forces with Sun Yat Sen to repel the "foreign devil." The grab did not come off, and altho foreign warships still remain at Canton, their numbers have dwindled to seven and the immediate danger of foreign invasion has been staved off.

Sun and the Soviets.

There have from time to time been quite circumstantial reports regarding an alliance between Sun Yat Sen and the Soviets. That Dr. Sun always has been well disposed towards the Union of Soviet Republics is true. For what genuine working class advocate could be otherwise? But, so far, there has been no introduction of an actual Soviet regime in Canton.

JAP DIET IS CALLED IN AN EXTRAORDINARY SESSION FOR JUNE 25

TOKIO, April 25.—Plans for an extraordinary session of the Japanese Diet, June 25, are being formulated, it was reliably learned today.

There was no announcement, however, as to the purpose of the session or as to official plans.

In the meantime Japan continued deeply interested in the question of American immigration. Newspapers continued to discuss it. The general tone was not inflammatory.

$200,000 Deal By Indiana Governor Described In Court

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 25.—Nearly $200,000 worth of notes floated by the Meyer-Kiser Bank of Indianapolis for Gov. Warren T. McCray, represented practically nothing but McCray's own responsibility, J. J. Kiser, vice president of the bank, testified today in the federal court trial of the governor.

McCray is charged with using the mails in a scheme to defraud.

Altho many of the notes bore the signatures of various men and firms, the governor's signature was the only thing that gave them value, Kiser testified.

Obregon May Have To Back Up On His Indemnification Plan

(By The Federated Press)

MEXICO CITY, April 25.—Labor hostility is growing against Aaron Saenz, secretary of foreign affairs, and other responsible members of the Mexican government who have promised that Mexicans as well as foreigners in Mexico would be reimbursed for their losses during the de la Huerta revolution. Labor readily understands why Americans under the protection of the browbeating imperialism of the United States be indemnified but it does not see why Mexican landholders and industrialists should be paid for losses in a revolution which they themselves caused. It looks as if the Obregon government will find it difficult to carry out this part of the promise.

FRANCE TRIES DIVISION OF CHINA, RUSSIA

Joins U. S. In War on Recognition

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PEKING, China, April 25.—France is leading the opposition in China to official recognition of Soviet Russia, according to Rosta News Agency reports.

The Chinese people realize that the Russians are their friends, but the Chinese government is allowing foreign powers, chiefly France, to influence its policy in regard to Russia.

Koo Fears Red Troops.

China, thru Dr. Wellington Koo, minister of foreign affairs, protests against the presence of Soviet Red Army troops in distant Mongolia, but seems to fear nothing from the many "friendly" European soldiers walking Peking streets.

While France demands gold payments of the Boxer war indemnities, Soviet Russia offers to relinquish her claims if the money will then be spent on education in China.

Dr. Koo insists that 20 per cent of the Boxer indemnity go to his own department. This Mr. L. M. Karakhan, the extraordinary plenipotentiary representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, declined to allow.

Dr. Wellington Koo seems to be dissatisfied with Dr. C. T. Wang, who signed the draft of the new relations between China and Soviet Russia. It is possible that Dr. Koo refused to accept Dr. Wang's work because of personal feeling, and for that reason the minister of foreign affairs, Dr. Koo, attempted to reopen the discussion with Mr. Karakhan. Mr. Karakhan was ill and sent his secretary to deal with Dr. Koo, reminding him that the agreement was signed and discussion therefore closed.

Agreement Nine-Tenths Good.

Dr. Koo himself admitted that the agreement was nine-tenths satisfactory to China, while Mr. Karakhan found it only five-tenths satisfactory to Russia. The Soviet government was willing to go half-way toward effecting a settlement with the Chinese government, Mr. Karakhan felt, because the people of China sympathized with the attitude of the Russian people expressed thru their government.

Mr. Li Chia-ao, Chinese representative at Moscow, called on the People's Commissary of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Chicherin, at the latter's request. Chicherin requested the Chinese representative to convey to his government that the Soviet government considers the situation in China most serious. The failure of the Chinese minister of Foreign affairs to recognize the agreement already signed by Dr. Wang is held as an act hostile to the Soviets and may have the gravest consequences, for which the responsibility will fall on the Chinese government, Mr. Chicherin informed Mr. Li Chia-ao.

Chicherin refused to open discussion with the Chinese representative in Moscow on the question of recognition, claiming that it would unnecessarily confuse the proceedings which are taking place in Peking.

The Trade Unions--May Day, 1924

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

The years 1923-24 bear eloquent testimony to the utter inability of the American trade union movement to extend organization in a period marked by industrial activity.

1923 was one of the "boom" years that the United States boasts of to less fortunate countries. In all lines of manufacture and construction there was a demand for workers. Wages increased, especially in the building trades, but dissension and dualism weakened the building trades department. Today there is hardly a large city that has not two or more building trades councils waging war to the knife on each other. Building trades union membership has decreased.

Rail Transportation.

In the transportation industry the shop crafts—machinists, blacksmiths, boilermakers, electricians, sheet metal workers, etc., have been almost wiped out. On only a few of the big railroad systems is there even a semblance of organization of these trades and this is unable to function effectively because of the loss of morale consequent on the loss of the strike in 1922. The engineers, firemen, conductors and trainmen are well organized but they have no connection with the rest of the labor movement. They are really property holding institutions and not unions in the real sense of the word.

Coal Mining.

In the coal mining industry organization is at a standstill. The officialdom of the United Mine Workers, instead of urging every coal miner in the country to join the union actually proposes that from 150,000 to 200,000 miners be forced out of the industry. This is strange strategy but stranger still when the fact is known that these thousands are members that it is proposed to starve out of the industry.

The organization campaigns of the United Mine Workers in West Virginia—potentially the richest bituminous field in America—have proved failures. There are now more non-union miners in that state than ever before and the coal mined by them is forcing many union mines in other states to close.

Steel

In the steel industry the widely-advertised organization campaign conducted under the safe and sane auspices of several international unions with the blessing of the American Federation of Labor was nothing short of a disgrace.

The campaign to organize the lowly steel workers was heralded as a movement that would confound Communist and other critics of the American Federation of Labor officialdom. "You claim that we never organize any workers. Well, here we are tackling the United States Steel Corporation. Another thing: Foster did a fairly good job but he was too radical; lots of workers were frightened away. You got to be conservative so they can't get nothing on you."

Something like $60,000 or $70,000 had been left over by the Foster committee and this was a nice nest egg for the treasury of the organising committee. The work started, cautious publicity appeared every once in a while—not too often—and finally it was announced that the organizing committee planned to proceed very slowly and carefully to develop some sort of an enveloping movement that would leave the Pittsburgh district no option but to capitulate.

For a long time now there has been a great silence. No more publicity appears but from authentic sources I learn that these cautious committeemen have organized almost one steel worker for every thousand dollars in the treasury—60 steel workers, $60,000.

Joking aside, never has there been a more glaring example of the inefficiency, timidity and general all-around bankruptcy of trade union officialdom than the pseudo-organizing campaign in the steel industry. Labor organization is at its lowest point in steel.

Textiles.

In the textile industry a period of prosperity preceded the present chaotic condition. Many northern mills are moving to the south where labor is still cheaper and this has resulted in tremendous hardship to workers affected by the change.

The feature of the situation that is of major importance, however, is that during the prosperous period no substantial organizational gains were made nor was any militant organizational campaign attempted. The textile workers face the coming depression without any unity between those organizations existing in the industry and with no possibility of maintaining even a 25 per cent organization.

Marine Transport.

In marine transport conditions have gone from bad to worse tho work has been plentiful. The seamen's union has practically disappeared and port after port has refused to deal with the longshoremen's union and has gone open shop. There is probably more demoralization in the marine transport industry than in any other that was at one time fairly well organized.

Lumber.

In the lumber industry there is no organization except in the Pacific Northwest where the Industrial Workers of the World carry on a sort of guerrilla warfare with the timber barons. The great timber industry of the southern states is entirely unorganized and the will of the lumber trust is law.

Metal Mining.

In metal mining there has been absolutely no improvement since last May Day. The industry as a whole is in rather a stagnant condition due to the loss of European markets and importation of copper from South American countries—from properties owned by American concerns. The amount of organization is negligible.

Electric Light and Power.

The electric light and power industry—one of the most strategically important from the standpoint of both labor and capital because of its vital necessity to big industry—is at least 90 per cent unorganized. The gigantic electric monopolies are not troubled by labor organizers and the American trade union movement has permitted this great industrial monopoly to develop with but little attempt to organize it.

Distributive Trades.

In the complicated processes of distribution in the United States there is little if any labor organization. The "white collar slaves" are entirely unsympathetic towards the trade union movement and outside of a feeble organization of retail clerks and a few scattered unions of the office-workers, organization is non-existent.

Food Industry.

In the food industry with some 2,500,000 workers, including both the basic processes of manufacture and distribution there are perhaps 75,000 organized workers—milk-wagon drivers, cooks, waiters and meatcutters and butcher workmen.

Metal Trades.

In the metal trades, outside of railway transport, one seeks in vain for any substantial organization in the great metal working centers of the Middle West and Atlantic seaboard. A few isolated unions of machinists, boilermakers, sheet-metal workers, blacksmiths, etc., are all that exist and the present prosperity has resulted in no increase of organization.

Has Passed Peak.

The numerical strength of the labor unions has decreased during the most favorable time for organization—when there are plenty of jobs. In 1923 the American Federation of Labor lost over 250,000 members and the loss this year will be still larger.

The conclusion seems warranted that with its present policy and leadership—to say nothing of structure—the American Federation of Labor reached the zenith of its power during the war and that with the renewed warfare of the employers it has been cowed and made even more conservative. The programs of class-collaboration emanating from many heads of international unions and even from Gompers himself is evidence that the open-shop drive killed what little fighting spirit that was left. From now on the officialdom will become more brazen in support of the capitalist class and capitalist system.

It does not need to be emphasized that the failure of the trade union movement to increase its strength during a prosperous period is a grave danger to the working class; the trade unions are the most powerful weapon the workers of this nation have altho compared with the power of the capitalists it is a feeble thing indeed.

The treachery and incompetency of the existing leadership is being shown both by practice and precept to the workers of America. The Communists have a monopoly of the left wing movement within the unions and on such issues as class farmer-labor party have been able to convince thousands of workers of the necessity for building a militant labor union movement coupled with a fighting class party of workers and farmers.

Because of their failure to initiate such campaigns as these and because of their actual sabotage and betrayal of the masses the bureaucrats, in the coming stagnant industrial period, are going to lose. They may retain their hold on the union treasuries but not on the minds of the union members.

More and more it is apparent that the future of the American labor movement depends upon the activities of the Communists and the left wing elements organized around them. Without this force in the arena of the American class struggle the situation would be hopeless indeed.

Thaw and Mooney.

Crazy Harry Kendall Thaw, heir to $6,000,000 of the vintage of Pittsburgh, has been declared sane in a Philadelphia courtroom. It is stated he will be freed.

Yet Tom Mooney, brilliant young leader of the working class, sits in a prison cell in San Quentin, Cal., still serving his life sentence.

Thaw committed murder and then pleaded insanity to escape the electric chair. All of his actions, especially his conduct in the Philadelphia courtroom, these past days, prove Thaw an incurable nut. He is just as much a lunatic now as he was when he beat up New York showgirls and artists models, hired for the purpose, for the pleasure it gave him: or when he attacked young boys, especially secured for him. He is just as hare brained now as he was when he bit live rabbits, or submitted them to other tortures.

But Thaw has six million Pittsburgh dollars on his side. He has the wealth of the steel and coal czardom of Western Pennsylvania on his side. Money saved Thaw from the electric chair. It is now going to save him from the madhouse. Capitalism stands by its parasites thru all the bad places. It is taking care of Thaw.

Tom Mooney never killed, or thought of killing any one. But he was a good labor organizer in San Francisco and greed hated him. So he was framed-up and sent away for life. Courts, juries, witnesses, practically everyone concerned, has admitted Mooney was framed. But Mooney is an enemy of the bosses. He is penniless. Capitalism hates him. So it keeps him where it thinks he can do no harm.

Thaw goes free. Mooney remains in prison. There is only one power than can change that. That is the power of the working class. When will the workers use that power?

Edgar Dickens, 6914 South Laflin Street, has made the first page of the Chicago Tribune. And he has got his picture on the last page. That's going some for an ordinary worker—a street car motorman.

Usually the first page of any issue of this yellow press is reserved for the big bandits of business, for political grafters mislabeled "statesmen," for insane parasites among the rich, like Thaw, and for the matrimonial difficulties of the "best people."

But Edgar Dickens was an exceptional worker. He had travelled 1,822,500 miles, during half a century, over the street car tracks of Chicago. And at the age of 74 he still slaves on, driving his car. And for this he is rewarded with an 18-line write-up; what the Tribune city editor would call a human interest story; but really a payment in full for unexampled obedience in wage slavery.

And in the meantime the Chicago Tribune, with all the other Chicago dailies, absolutely ignore the strike of the carworkers in Pullman and Hegewisch, and they have forgotten that there is a strike of the garment workers. Revolting labor must be punished with dead silence, when it is not openly attacked.

Victor F. Lawson, the open shop editor and owner of the Chicago Daily News, has been re-elected a director of the Associated Press. This will insure that this extensive capitalist news agency will not deviate one whit from its consistent anti-labor policy. News will continue to be poisoned at the source, by the Associated Press.

The DAILY WORKER May Day issue, as are all issues of the DAILY WORKER, is strictly the product of proletarian journalists. What do you think of it?

This May Day finds the capitalist system weaker than ever before. May the process continue.

Around The Recognition Maypole

By PROJECTOR.

War Dept. Film Pacifist Propaganda

"Powder River," an Epic of Mud, Blood and Folly.

The cartoonist who draws the "Not a brain cell working" in our metropolitan press certainly slipped a peg when he failed to feature the U. S. Marines' use of the war film, "Powder River," as a recruiting argument. The picture has the official O. K. of the War Department, it is made by the Signal Corps of the U. S. Army, and is run under the auspices of the "Veterans of Foreign Wars." Anybody who joins the army after seeing its eight reels of mud, blood, cooties, and poison gas, leavened only with an occasional crap game or welfare worker's doughnut, is to be congratulated on finding his proper vocation. "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's." The army needs him, the army is welcome to him.

Justifies America.

The picture admits that it cannot go into the many reasons why America entered the war but seeks to justify what follows by a reel of confiscated German film showing the submarine warfare in actual progress. This incidentally gives some remarkable and beautiful photography, the best in the whole picture, but that is to be expected since the light values are much better on the water than on the smoky, gassy battlefields in the dusk of the "zero hours." The submarine leaves its base, is tossed around in bad weather, and finally sinks a British sailship and a freight steamer, the latter after a long running fight. It each case the ship's papers are seized, the crew ordered to the boats, and the captain taken prisoner, before the ship is sunk. No special brutality is discernable, one is merely oppressed with the sense of the criminal waste of the products of labor's sweat and blood as these fine vessels are destroyed.

Immediately after a pitiful attempt to "dress" the film with animated flags, and pictures of Wilson and Pershing "fighting for democracy," the soldiers are shown packed like sardines on the big transports, and conveyed by "the biggest battle fleet ever assembled." A submarine tries to get funny, but it is promptly blown to splinters. In the twinkling of an eye the soldiers are seen wallowing in the mud of France. "Digging for Democracy," the inspired sub title writer puts it. They dug all right, it was certainly not to be seen on the surface of the Draft and Espionage Laws, and the picture makes no claim that the boys found it even at the end of their digging.

Sickening Carnage.

From this point on the picture is one continuous repetition of shell fire, wound dressing, trench swimming, prisoner taking and grave digging. The first time on the screen it is more thrilling than the wildest melodrama, but there are four battles shown, each the same succession of mud, mangled wounded, and stiff carcasses to be buried, so the flush of romance soon gives way to drab monotony. Cannon are fired in endless footage and with every recoil comes the thought, "More graves to dig, more houses to rebuild, more labor wasted, labor, blood, labor, sweat, labor weariness, labor, blood," and so on in an endless chain.

THE INTERNATIONALE

The Song of the Workers. Sing it again on this May Day.

Arise, ye pris'ners of starvation,
Arise, ye wretched of the earth,
For justice thunders condemnation,
A better world's in birth.
No more traditions' chains shall bind us,
Arise, ye slaves no more in thrall!
The earth shall rise on new foundations,
We have been naught, we shall be all.

REFRAIN.

Let each stand in his place!
'Tis the final conflict,
The International Party,
Shall be the human race!
'Tis the final conflict,
Let each stand in his place!
The International Party,
Shall be the human race!

The law oppresses us and tricks us,
Exploiters drink the victim's blood;
The rich are free from obligations.,
The laws the poor delude.
Too long we've languished in subjection,
Equality has other laws:
"No rights," says she, "without their duties,"
No claims on equals without cause."

REFRAIN.

We want no condescending saviors,
To rule us from their judgment hall.
We workers ask not for their favors,
Let us consult for all!
To make the thief disgorge his booty,
To free the spirit from its cell,
We must ourselves decide our duty,
We must decide and do it well.

REFRAIN.

Behold them seated in their glory,
The kings of mine and rail and soil!
What have you read in all their story,
But how they plundered toil?
Fruits of the people's work are buried
In the strong coffers of a few;
In fighting for their restitution
The workers only ask their due.

REFRAIN.

Toilers from shops and fields united,
The party we of all who work
The earth belongs to us, the people,
No room here for the shirk.
How many on our flesh have fattened!
But if the bloody birds of prey
Shall vanish from the sky some morning,
The golden sunlight still will stay.

REFRAIN.

MAY DAY IN MOSCOW

By ARTURO GIOVANNITTI.

A rift of wings and clouds around each sentried steeple,
Red flags licking like flames the fold of the great dome,
Silence and sunlight and the bared heads of the people . . .
The Red Army is coming home.

A jury has found Harry Thaw sane Thaw is a millionaire. When he murdered Stanford White his million came to his assistance and proved t the satisfaction of a jury that he wa off his head. He was sent to a craz house. While there he whiled awa the time biting pet rabbits. Doctor hired by Thaw declare this is not sign of sex perversion. Perhaps th rabbits were perverse! If Thaw bi a bulldog, perhaps the alienists might consider him insane. At least he would be taking a chance and that would be an indication of lack of judgment The rabbits should be thankful, however, that they did not feel revengeful and bit Thaw.

The world—or that portion of the population suffering from arrested mental development, that takes the yellow capitalist press seriously—having allowed the murder of Stanford White to cease being a source of irritation to them, and having satisfied their desire for sacrificial victims during the world war, the friends of Harry Thaw thought the time opportune to get him out of the insane asylum, so alienists prove that he is sane, tho when left a moment to himself in court he broke loose and babbled an idiot. Thaw is now declared sa He has five million dollars in his o right. He had only a million when went into the crazy house. Workers grow poor, outside bughouse, working for crazy man whose millions are used to pay them in wages a portion of what they produce for nutty man. Who are crazier than Thaw Answer—The crazy workers who tolerate this crazy system.

Samuel Gompers, president of American Federation of Labor, ca to Chicago recently to fight the injunction that is raising the devil with strike of the dressmakers and is incidentally a thorn in the side of the organized labor movement. Sam held some conferences with women in the Congress hotel. He did not even open his mouth about the injunction. It was not worthy of the great man's attention while there were weightie questions to tackle. He suddenly appeared in Washington. To testif against the Teapot Dome plunderers To drive a nail in the political coffi of Harry M. Daugherty, labor foe? T throw some light on the dark recesses of the Internal Revenue Bureau and Mellon's whisky deals? No! No!! No!! Gompers stood like the boy on the burning deck and eloquently pleaded the cause of a thirsty nation demanding the return of 2.75 per cent beer. Gompers was praised for his action by the Chicago Tribune and the Daily News, two organs that would have gladly slit his throat were he only to utter as many words against the injunction as he did in favor of booze.

May Day Rent Strike Threat Among Hundreds of Chicago Tenants Against Landlords

A "rent strike" is the May Day threat of thousands of Chicago's tenants to their grasping landlords if these robbers attempt to raise the rents again.

Over forty organizations have associated in a Tenants' League to protest the crushing rise in rentals since 1918.

They vow they will not move and that they will not sign leases for rents advanced more than 100 per cent during the last six years.

Plan Centralized Organization.

Trade unions, Workmen's Circle branches, Workers Party and Socialist Party branches, the Jewish Mothers' League, and other organizations are combining in this threat to the apartment monopolists.

The groups are planning a central organization and expect to procure legal aid in their fight. The squeezing landlords will be battled right thru the courts.

Mass Meeting Wednesday.

A mass meeting will be held Wednesday evening, April 30, at Venetian Hall on Douglas Park Boulevard at the corner of Ogden and Kedzie. Plans for the Tenants' League will be completed then and May Day strike tactics discussed.

Mrs. S. Blumin, Mrs. N. Tatarsky, and Mrs. L. Levin of the Jewish Mothers' League, are actively working for the blow against the landlords. They claim that 3 and 4-room flats which rented for $18 a month, six years ago, are now $40 and that the weekly income of most of the families in these flats is $28 to $35. If the rents are increased again this May, these families will have to move to poorer places or join the Tenants' League in protest and defense.

Check Up on Evictions.

Cases of eviction are being checked and will be advertised for propaganda purposes. Reports of landlords' negligencies will also be recorded and used against rent raisers.

About 160,000 families are moving this May in Chicago because of expiring leases. The Northwest side groups want to ward off the excessive expense and inconvenience of changing residence and have formed their Tenants' League. They claim that rents should not be increased this year because of the extensive building of apartments during the last season.

According to J. Ritchie Patterson, in an address before the Women's City Club, coal is no higher, janitor service no higher, labor no higher, and taxes no higher; so landlords have no reason for being rent-hogs and raising rents now.

BIG JEWISH UNION BODY AIDS STRIKE

Garment Victory Seen By I. L. G. W. U. Head

Mobilizing of the funds of the trade union movement of Chicago for the benefit of the striking garment workers begins this evening when strikers' committees start their drive on the unions.

The raising of the big strike fund was authorized by the Chicago Federation of Labor and it has the enthusiastic backing of the Jewish "Gewerkshaft" or United Hebrew Trades, which has between 30 and 40 affiliated local unions in the Chicago district.

Hebrew Trades Help Eagerly.

The "Gewerkschaft" voted unanimously to support the strike at its meeting when Vice President Meyer Perlstein of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union laid the dressmakers cause before them. Speakers from the Jewish organization will accompany strikers' delegates on the rounds to all of the Gewerkschaft locals and it is expected that thousands of badly needed dollars will be speedily raised for the fight on South Market street.

"We are going to win this strike," Morris Rappaport, secretary of the Chicago Joint Board enthusiastically told the DAILY WORKER yesterday. With support from the Chicago labor movement and from the International we can finance the strike right thru the dull season until the Summer rush."

Visiting All Unions.

Anton Johannsen, chairman of the "Committee of 15" of the Chicago Federation of Labor, has laid out a schedule of Chicago trade union meetings and it is planned to cover every one of these meetings with speakers from the ranks of the strikers.

Checks for $10,000 each were received from the cloakmakers' local earlier in the strike and from the Amalgamated Clothing Workers—the last union not connected with the Federation of Labor. The drive this week will be for the purpose of coining the sympathetic expressions of Federation unionists into something that will pay strike benefits and legal expenses entailed by the injunction persecution.

The strikers are hopeful that substantial contributions will be made by building trades' locals. Building trades workers have been enjoying higher wages than most trade unionists and it is believed that when committees of girl strikers face them and tell them the dramatic story of the struggle with "sluggers" and police on So. Market street that they will aid generously.

43 Injunction Cases Wednesday.

The injunction cases are coming to a head this week. Next Wednesday 43 cases come before Judge Charles F. Foell in Superior Court. All the evidence has been heard in thirteen of these cases and they are waiting to see whether Foell will follow in the footsteps of Sullivan and inflict jail and fine sentences, or whether he will realize the indignation of the workers at this unconstitutional overriding of their right to walk the streets and dismiss the cases.

So far Foell has been scolding the girls brought before him, declaring that they had no right to picket—

DAUGHERTY'S CRY OF 'COMMUNIST PLOT' FALLS FLAT

Grafting Harry Still Must Explain Loot

By LAURENCE TODD.
(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

WASHINGTON, April 27.—This time the announcement by Harry Daugherty that he has full proof of a "hellish conspiracy" of soviet agents to overthrow the government of the United States, has failed to evoke more than a weary smile in Washington.

The first three or four times that this bolshevist menace was discovered by the former attorney-general—on the approach of the railroad shop strike and the anthracite coal strike—he was applauded by a large section of the reactionary press. But now that he is out of office, and uses this assertion as a defense of his refusal to permit the senate to inquire into the files of the department of justice, he fails to gain any approval. Even the White House is disappointed that he employed so discredited a bogey.

"Where Did You Get That Cash"

Senator Brookhart of Iowa, one of the "soviet sympathizers" assailed by Daugherty in his Columbus speech, replied: "All his talk of a hellish Communist plot does not answer the ques-

MORE SUPPORT FOR CAR BUILDERS

HOLLAND WILL YIELD SOVIET RECOGNITION TO GET RUSS TRADE

AMSTERDAM, April 27.—Holland will grant de jure recognition to Russia within a short time, it was forecast authoritatively here Thursday. Russia, according to this information, has made recognition by the Dutch government a condition for resumption of commercial relations between the two nations, and Holland has agreed.

Negotiations between Dutch and Russian representatives will be resumed forthwith in Berlin.

SCOTTISH LABOR M.P.'S THREATEN DIRECT ACTION

Roused Over Weak-knee Policy On Evictions

LONDON—David Kirkwood, one of the Clyde left wing members of the Independent Labor Party, who is as much of a thorn in the side of Ramsay MacDonald as in the anatomy of the British ruling class threw another bombshell into the dove cote of labor imperialists and class collaborationists, when he denounced the government for the provision of its Rents Bill which would place the burden of granting relief to prevent the eviction of tenants on the shoulders of the local authorities.

Kirkwood declared the burden should be a national charge. Continuing he said:

"They are not going to get round about us in this fashion. The time has come for the Labour Party to prove to the tenants, particularly in Scotland, that it is going to be of some use to the people who fear eviction.

"Up to this time the tenants might as well have had the Tories in power." (Opposition laughed, and a Liberal Member: Why?)

"Because they have done nothing!" replied Mr. Kirkwood.

"There were two evictions in my constituency this week," he proceeded, "and I give my word of honour that, if they do not stop evictions, I will put the people back into their houses as I have done before; I will defy the law, and my imprisonment will be a greater menace than my being kept on the floor of the House."

"I don't want to break the law. I want to be law-abiding; but I won't stand for my people being thrown out on the streets."

NEW STRIKES CRIPPLE THE PULLMAN CO.

3 More Departments Join Walkout

The steel cabinet workers in the Pullman Car shops, one of the largest and most important departments in the Pullman plant, will strike with the buckers, fitters, reamers, riveters, and heaters unless their wage demands are accepted by the Pullman officials.

Three hundred men, the entire force of the department, signed the demands presented to the Pullman officials Saturday, that the recent wage cuts be abolished and the old wage scale restored. Many of the brass finishers, wood cabinet makers, and battery repair men also joined the strikers Saturday.

DAILY WORKER NOW TO BE HAD THRUOUT THE STEEL DISTRICT

Here is good news for the workers thruout the steel district to the south of Chicago and over the line into Indiana.

With this issue THE DAILY WORKER goes on sale on the newsstands in South Chicago, Pullman, Kensington, Calumet and Hegewisch, on the Illinois side, and in Hammond, on the Indiana side of the state line.

In addition to the workers in the steel mills, there are tens of thousands of workers in other industries, in this far-flung industrial district practically all unorganized, especially the workers in the giant plants of the Portland Cement Co., and the various oil companies.

Workers in the above-mentioned cities should help increase the demand for the DAILY WORKER. Get subscribers. Get workers to buy the paper on the news stands. Spread it everywhere.

THE DAILY WORKER will scatter the seed that will soon result in the building of giant labor unions thruout this whole district.

MINERS SEE PRESIDENT FARRINGTON RIDING IN A SCAB TAXICAB

AUBURN, Ill., April 27.—Altho a bitter battle is raging in Springfield, Ill, between the union Taxi cab drivers and those of the Yellow Cab Co. Frank Farrington, President of the Illinois Miners union patronizes the scab concern. While driving from their homes in Springfield, to attend the.. MINERS ENDORSE AMALGAMATION AND LABOR PARTY

Sub-District No. 4 Meet Supports Howat

By THOMAS MYERSCOUGH,
Secretary, Progressive Miners' Committee.

AUBURN, Ill., April 27.—As if in one voice, the "ayes" rang out Friday in favor of both amalgamation and the Farmer-Labor Party at the convention of Sub-district 4, Illinois, in session here. Both measures were recommended in President Thompson's report to the convention.

In Vice President Parry's report is contained a brief review of the Kansas situation. A Springfield delegate named McGlennon, who was a Howat supporter before the "marriage" of Lewis and Farrington, arose to oppose the recommendation of Vice President Parry that a special international convention be called.

Antidote for Poison.

McGlennon is an old man whose afflictions are many, and include deafness and a tendency to assimilate all the poison news distributed by Editor Ellis Searles of the Mine Workers' Journal. There was a clamor among the delegates for the first opportunity to show Delegate McGlennon how ignorant he was of the facts in the case.

A delegate named Shymanski used the miners' journal to quote some of Van Bittner's "spew" at the recent District 5 convention at Pittsburgh, Pa. This brought Delegate Jones to his feet, and he spared no words in denouncing those who opposed Howat. He stated that he knew Howat well and that he came from the Southwest field, and that as long as Howat lived

Imperialist Plot Near Completion

Morgan Uses $100,000,000 Loan Club to Force Western Europe to Accept His Plan

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, April 27.—Wall Street is satisfied with the progress being made by J. Pierpont Morgan, in Paris, in forcing the Morgan-Dawes plan upon the nations of the Versailles peace.

The familiar Wall Street-Morgan club, of a loan, in this case $100,000,000 to Germany to help her fullfill her obligations under the plan, is being used with good effect.

If the big nations of Western Europe refuse to accept the plan then there will be no loan.

But the British, Italians and Belgians have already accepted the plan, while France is still holding out for revision.

Morgan's offer is that American bankers will subscribe half of the proposed 800,000,000 gold marks ($200,000,000) loan to Germany, if the Dawes scheme is adopted in its entirety, without alterations or political modifications.

Mr. Morgan, in a two hour conference with Louis Barthou, president of the reparations commission, and Sir John Bradbury, British member, assured the reparations officials that an American banking syndicate would subscribe $100,000,000 to the loan. Promises obtained from London indicate that an English group will take $75,000,000, leaving the balance of $25,000,000 to be placed in France, Holland, Switzerland, Italy and elsewhere.

Warns Against Changing Plan.

These tentative pledges, however, hold good only if the plan immediately becomes operative. Mr. Morgan warned the allied politicians that they must keep their hands off and not shackle the experts' businesslike arrangements with political or military considerations or interfere with the German government's complete sovereignty inside its territory so German industry can be made to produce the greatest possible output and be able to compete favorably in foreign trade.

The sharp contrast in the tenor of the French and British, Belgian and Italian replies idicates the chasm splitting Premier Poincare from the other allies. The French premier's communication is almost as long as the other three combined, and whereas Premiers Theunis and Mussolini agree on the experts' conclusions practically without comment, and while Sir William Tyrrel points out that there are only three points for the allied governments to decide on and transmit to the reparations commission, Premier Poincare insists that the entire reports of the Dawes and McKenna committees, totaling 45,000 words, require rewriting.

The letter of Premier Poincare demands that the reparations commission proceed to revise the whole report.

"The governments await the reparations commission to take a definitive decison, giving the experts' report an executive form, as most of the experts' proposals are written under the form of simple indications, and to complete certain points which the experts left for the commission," he says. "It is only after the reparations commission has defined these points that it will be able to present its final conclusion to the governments."

Poincare then objects that "the governments cannot act usefully until they know exactly what practical result the reparations commission will obtain thru the experts' plans."

Desires to See German Action.

Arguing for a further delay, Premier Poincare continues:

"The governments must know what measures the German government has taken for the execution of the decisions of the reparations commission. This decision can be taken only after the reparations commission approves of the projects and laws demanded from Germany."

The French premier then insists that the allied governments must not be considered on the same footing as Germany.

Demands Better Guarantees.

Regarding releasing the French military grip on the Ruhr industry, M. Poincare renews his demand for a larger and surer guarantee than he now holds with the poilus' bayonets in the Rhineland in exchange for Ger-

MEAN'S DIARY GONE; BURNS FACES GRILL

Loss Aids Crippling of Daugherty Probe

WASHINGTON, April 27.—The Senate investigating committee's searchlight was turned on the mysterious disappearance of Gaston B. Means' famous collection of "little black books."

Without the "minute by minute" diary and the documents of the former department of justice agent, upon which much of the case against the former attorney general Daugherty has been built the committee will be seriously hampered and no means will be spared, chairman Brookhart said, to recover the missing papers.

Means, himself, was to be the first witness of the day, Senator Wheeler, committee prosecutor, said. After he has related the story of the alleged theft of his documents by a clever ruse by two mysterious strangers claiming to be officials of the Senate, the committee plans to call a Department of Justice agent.

William J. Burns, director of the bureau of investigation, may be called.

"CAUTIOUS CAL" IS FACING CRISIS SILENT AS USUAL

Immigration, Bonus Bill, Taxes, Big Action

WASHINGTON, April 27.—Decisions which will have a bearing on his own political fortunes and on the nation's economic and political future, will shortly confront President Coolidge. Congress is preparing to put before him three pieces of legislation, all of which involve tests for Mr. Coolidge. These are the immigration, tax reduction and bonus bills.

1.—The President is faced with possible loss of support in California and other Pacific coast states should he veto the Japanese exclusion immigration bill. On the other hand, if Mr. Coolidge signs the bill and no other attempt is made by the government to allay Japan's consequent displeasure, ill-feeling between the United States and Japan may follow.

2.—On the soldiers bonus bill, the issue is stability of the nation's finances versus the government's obligations to the soliders. Secretary of the Treasury Mellon is expected to urge a veto.

3.—The issue involved in the tax bill is regarded as one of insistence upon adoption of the administrations tax-program as against tax relief in some degree of different form. Altho the senate finance committee has reported the Mellon program, the measure finally to come from congress is expected to be more nearly the compromise measure passed by the house.

STREET CAR MEN IN PITTSBURGH, PA., TAKE STRIKE VOTE TODAY

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PITTSBURGH, Pa., April 27.—A strike vote of the 3,200 motormen and conductors of the Pittsburgh Railways Co. will be taken Monday. If the strike vote is favorable the men will go out on May 1st. The traction trust has informed the city council it will not grant the wage increase demanded.

PULLMAN CO. GRIPPED BY 3 NEW STRIKES IN SHOPS

Still other departments, including the switchmen, declared their intention of joining the walkout, because they know that the Pullman Company will try to extend the recent wage cut to all the departments.

Keep Police Out of Homes.

Alderman Sheldon W. Govier assured the strikers that they would be protected against the lawlessness practiced last week by the hired thugs of the Pullman Company.

Alderman Govier assured John Holmgren, heading the strike, that he will see that no strikers in his ward are molested.

"No police officer has the right to enter the home of any citizen without a warrant," said Alderman Govier to John Holmgren. "If any plain clothes man or uniformed officer tries to break into a striker's home, the striker has the right to resist the entrance of such officer."

Next Move Up to Pullman Co.

John Holmgren told the strikers Saturday that it is up to the officials of the Pullman Company to make the next move in dealing with the strikers. He declared he expected the Pullman officials to start negotiations with the strikers soon.

"They must be spending thousands of dollars every day just for their private police," said Holmgren, who is general vice president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen. "Production in the Pullman shops is at a standstill. The strikers are actively picketing every day and the ads put in the papers for riveters and reamers will do no good. From now on we will see to it that new men hired know there is a strike on. They will not go to work when they are told there is a strike. This strike is costing the Pullman Company hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The Strike Is Spreading.

"The strike is spreading, and before long we will shut down the entire plant."

Holmgren told the strikers they were within their rights in telling the thugs and gunmen of the Pullman Company to get out and get out quick.

The DAILY WORKER is the only newspaper in Chicago that is printing news of the struggle of the Pullman workers to thwart the Pullman Company's attempt to wring immense profits out of the lives of their employes. The strikers decided to picket the employment office hereafter.

Tell Workers to Strike.

Even the police know that the strikers are unable to exist on their low wages. One striker informed the DAILY WORKER that two policemen had asked him for a "lift" into South Chicago in his flivver.

"These cops told us to stick together," said the striker, "and we would win out. They told us it was a dirty shame the way the Pullman Company ground the very life out of the workers."

More and more police are in evidence in and around the Pullman plant. Police automobiles, filled with fat sergeants who are said to be getting extra pay for trying to scare the strikers, are overrunning the town.

Strikers are trying to find out why the city pays out good money from the taxpayers' pockets to have its employes walk around on empty lots.

Like the DAILY WORKER.

The DAILY WORKER counted almost 100 policemen and plain clothes men patrolling on foot and riding around in autos, between 103rd and 115th streets, near the Pullman plant.

The strikers sold 1,000 copies of the May Day edition of the DAILY WORKER to the men in other departments as they came out of the shops Saturday noon. The paper has made a big hit in Pullman. One worker said: "We all like that paper in here. It prints news you can't get in the regular newspapers."

Nick Spynow was selling the DAILY WORKER at the 103rd street end of the plant when he was threatened with arrest and his papers were taken from him by a fat police sergeant, who termed the DAILY WORKER "dirty literature." After an argument with several of the strikers, the cop saw he was getting the worst of it, and walked off, grumbling.

Hold May Day Meeting.

Max Salzman will speak to the workers of the Pullman Company on May First, at 8 p. m., in Stansick's Hall, 205 East 115th street, the hall now used by the strikers for their strike meetings. Karl Reeve will act as chairman of the meeting.

BIG ALASKAN SCANDAL MAY RUIN HOOVER

$60,000,000 Salmon Gift to Trust Exposed

WASHINGTON, April 27.—Herbert Hoover, secretary of the Department of Commerce, may be driven from public life like Fall and Denby as the result of the sensational Alaskan salmon fishery expose that is impending.

Charges brought before Senate investigating committees bare the fact that the $60,000,000 salmon industry of Alaska, which produces the tinned food that all America and the world uses, has been turned over to a set of gigantic corporations dominated by the Alaska Packers Association.

Just Like Teapot Steal.

Hoover's gift of the nation's salmon fisheries to the plunderbund follows Fall and Denby's gift of Teapot Dome and the California naval oil reserve to Doheny and runs side by side with the attempt made by Secretary of War Weeks and General Leonard Wood to give away Philippine resources and Week's effort to turn over Panama Canal zone concessions to New York financial interests.

The political future of Herbert Hoover seems to rest on whether the senate will go ahead with the very evident facts in their possession or whether this titanic steal will be covered over because it hits too close to Wall Street.

Under the regulations of the Department of Commerce, drawn up under the direction of Herbert Hoover, fishing grounds have been taken away from the Eskimos, Aleuts and Indians who have been living off them for thousands of years before the forefathers of the hundred per centers inflicted themselves on America. These fishing grounds were taken away by Mr. Hoover and his predecessors on the plea of "conservation" and were then turned over to the companies affiliated with the Salmon Trust.

Poisoned Soldiers During War.

Among the favored corporations are those that sold more than 825,000 cans of decomposed salmon to military commissary departments for the use of American soldiers during the war.

No $100,000 satchel has yet turned up—the senate has not looked for it yet—but the accumulated evidence shows that the Salmon Trust is monopolizing the best salmon streams with the official authorization of the Department of Commerce and that the government of the Territory of Alaska, under Governor Scott Bone, an appointee of Harding, retained by Coolidge, enforces its decision.

Old Friends of Hoover.

Hoover has a long established personal friendship with the Bentley family, which is represented in the Alaska Packers' Association by R. I. Bentley, vice-president, and C. H. Bentley, a director. His intimacy with this family, which is unlawfully benefitting by his executive acts as secretary of the Department of Commerce, is akin to the friendship of Fall and Doheny.

Interlocked directorates bind the constituent companies of the Alaska Salmon Trust to Wall Street. One link is thru Libby, McNeil & Libby, which operates a fleet of salmon ships to Bristol Bay yearly and is interlocked with the Swift Packing Company member of the "Big Five." One of its vice-presidents is E. F. Swift and among its directors are C. H. and C. F. Swift.

The canneries dot the Pacific Coast from Puget Sound north to Alaska. They are especially numerous in the thousands of miles of indented coast in southeast Alaska and again in Bristol Bay, just north of the Aleutian peninsula.

Fishermen and cannery workers go up there in scores of ships every Spring, returning again in the late Summer, the cannery workers go under contract for the season. Conditions are indescribably vile on these ships and in the cannery grounds. Working in slime fourteen hours a day and sleeping in wooden bunks, alive with bugs; eating ptomaine producing canned goods is their lot. Dope peddlers, bootleggers, and gambling sharks abound with company permission.

Especially vicious is the treatment accorded the army of Chinamen and Filipinos. Packed like sardines in the slow sailships northbound, meager quantities of food and water—sometimes only a pint a day—are doled out to them. On the salmon grounds they are under the rule of the gunmen backed up by the patrol navy of the Governor of Alaska.

Labor Agitators Hunted.

The patrol navy of the Governor of Alaska visits salmon grounds to get the local superintendent's reports on "I. W. W.'s" and "agitators" and to make arrests.

Scott Bone, the governor of Alaska, was formerly connected with the old Post-Intelligencer of Seattle, a Lumber Trust organ, later taken over into the Hearst chain of papers. Bone is a staunch old-line republican who believes in "development" of Alaska by big interests.

Last Summer the late President Harding visited Alaska and on his return failed to make any protest against the steal of the fishing grounds, to the keen disappointment of Alaskans.

Alaskan Sea Food Killed Harding.

Shortly after Harding passed away thru indulgence in a poisoned Alaskan crab—grim reminder of the decomposed salmon which the Salmon Trust sold to the United States troops during the war.

THE ASIATIC GIANT AWAKENS

By JACK ARMITAGE.

(Exclusive to the Daily Worker.)

(Concluded From Saturday)

Born in 1873 in the province of Shantung, Wu Pei Fu took his B. A. degree at the age of 21. From his earliest days he was a follower of Mars, and in 1898 he graduated with honors from the Kai Ping Military Academy. After a brief service in the field he again became a military student, entering a military school of which Marshal Tuan Chi Jui was director. From here he was promoted to battalion commander and participated in the campaign in Shansi, Szeuchan and Honan. Early in 1916 he became commander of the Sixth Brigade of the Third Division, Chinese Army. When General Tsao Kun (the present President at Peking) was made military governor of Chihli, Wu took his place as commander of the Third Division, taking part in the fight against General Chang Hsun's monarchical movement in the summer of 1917.

Corrupt Peking Politicians.

A year later we find him in the field against the Southern Constitutionalists. He was successful in recapturing Yochow and Changsha. His return was opposed by Marshal Tuan. The conflict resulted in the downfall of the Anfu political club.

For the better understanding of this three-cornered situation it is necessary to explain that the Anfu Club was a coterie of corrupt Peking politicians who illegally retained their seats in the Peking Parliament, as indeed do all the present politicians at Peking. The public became incensed at the action of these political bandits and the Chihli party (who at present control Peking) saw an opportunity to seize the reins of government. Both parties are equally corrupt and equally unconstitutional, so that North China has benefited nothing by the overthrow of the Anfu party, most of whom took refuge in the Japanese legation. It is significant that every corrupt politician in Peking who has been exposed has sought refuge in the Foreign Legation Quarter.

On his return Wu Pei Fu was appointed vice inspecting general of the three provinces of Chihli, Shantung and Honan. Since then Wu Pei Fu has steadily strengthened his hold over the northern capital, largely, so it is asserted, with the backing of foreign financiers.

China Resents Foreign Exploitation.

In this very powerful backing lays his weakness. Any suspicion of foreign exploitation is deeply resented by the Chinese people, who realize that, for any assistance given, the foreign financier will demand his quid pro quo.

The active support being lent this general is illustrated by one incident. I refer to the recent sale of $5,500,000 worth of arms and munitions by Italy. These were loaded onto trains in the Italian concession, Tientsin, under the supervision of Italian marines. Ostensibly, they were sold to President Tsao Kun, but their destination, and the fact that Wu dictates the policy of the present corrupt Peking government go to show that they were intended for the Chinese Mussolini. It is in the nature of things that the Italian Fascist should lend assistance to the Chinese gentleman of the same ilk. Wu's ambitions are quite evident. For years past he has steadily extended his sphere of military control, and at present he retains a firm grip on the provinces of Honan, Shantung and Chihli, with some support from Hupeh and part of Hunan.

Disobedient Servant.

Militarily he is supposed to do the bidding of Peking, but there is abundant evidence to prove that he is far from being an obedient servant. By far the most powerful of the Tuchuns (military governors), he does not hesitate to impose his will upon the central (Peking) government, even in matters which apparently are outside his domain, and many bitter complaints are heard regarding his arrogance of action and demeanor. Yet, in spite of the fact that he is the head of the largest and best organized striking force in China, he is unable to suppress the brigands which infest the provinces of which he is military governor. Here again we see the hand of the foreign financier, who reaps rich profits from the traffic in arms. Among the best customers are the brigands.

A Remarkable Immunity.

The Lingcheng outrage, with the holding of foreigners to ransom, will be fresh in the minds of most people. It will be remembered that the foreign powers displayed a strange reluctance to act against the brigands. This attitude is also evident with regard to Chinese pirates, who enjoy a most remarkable immunity from attack by the powers.

Disastrous Experiment.

The experiment was made of enrolling 5,000 of the maurauders, including the bandit chief Lao Yang Jen in Wu Pei Fu's army. This experiment ended in disaster, for the old brigand refused to go fighting in Szeuchan and again took up his old trade of plundering villages and towns. Some time ago he was captured, his head cut off and his body cut in as many pieces as he had looted towns. On each of the latter was bestowed a piece of the remains. A gruesome and meaningless ceremony, for the robber army still continues its depredations under the leadership of two of the late chief's principal lieutenants.

Bandits Legal and Illegal.

Another of those who were prominent in the Lincheng attack on the Blue Express last May has also come to grief in the person of Brigadier-General Sun Mei Yao. Like Lao, he chafed under discipline, and became a source of annoyance to his superiors. One day he was invited to a feast, but before he had time to enter the festal hall he and his bodyguard were shot down. This disposes of two prominent brigand chiefs, but the profession is such a lucrative one that others have stepped forward eagerly to fill their places. Indeed, so strong are the bandits becoming that there seems more than a possibility that they will be able to oust the tuchuns. This might prove a blessing in disguise, for bad and all as the bandits are, their depredations are considerably less than those of the corrupt tuchuns, who, under the cloak of "law'norder," are squeezing the life blood from the workers and peasants.

Reunification By the Sword.

But to get back to Wu Pei Fu. In Szechuan he has apparently met his Waterloo. At any rate—in spite of earlier successes—he has received a severe shock, which has to some extent eased the tension for Sun Yat Sen, the Southern Socialist leader, who has been menaced with Wu's forces in the north.

Ample opportunities have been afforded Wu Pei Fu to help in the reunification of China, did he so desire, but to all proposals he has turned a deaf ear, including the blandishments of Sir Robert Ho Tung when he proposed a round table conference of the various military leaders in China.

On each occasion Wu has replied that he believes in the "reunification of China by the sword." He is a typical Fascist, with pipe dreams of himself as the future Chinese Mussolini.

The Manchurian Tiger.

Under fifty years of age, Chang Tso Lin is one of the most virile figures on the Chinese horizon. With no education in his youth, his natural bent has been towards a military career. The Russo-Japanese war found him at the head of a large body of Hunghutze fighting on the side of Japan. At the conclusion of the war he was received into the Chinese government service, taking part in provincial wars and receiving quick promotion for bravery in the field. Eventually he rose to the command of the 27th Army Division, and in 1911 was appointed military governor of Fengtein. Up to the collapse of ex-President Yuan's monarchical movement in 1916, he was one of his most faithful supporters, but when General Chang Hsun made his coup d'etat in 1917 he assisted in restoring the republic. For this he was appointed inspecting general of the three Eastern Provinces in 1918, and in 1920 he fought along with General Tsao Kun (now President) in the suppression of the Anfu Political Club.

A Military Nutcracker.

With the rapid rise to power of Wu Pei Fu at Peking these two militarists became bitter enemies. Nine months ago Chang was prepared to assist Sun Yat Sen to crush Wu Pei Fu, and they undoubtedly had an understanding. It was freely stated that the intention was for Sun to march on Peking from the south in the early spring, while Chang attacked his arch-enemy from the north, with the object, as it were, of squeezing him between the jaws of a military nutcracker.

Since then, however, certain factors intervened which have materially delayed the putting into effect of this military alliance, which bid fair to settle the pretensions of the Chinese Mussolini once and for all.

Russia on the Horizon.

Altho Wu's position has been somewhat weakened by his recent check in Szechuan, Chang also finds his hands full, for he has become engaged in a serious dispute with the Soviets regarding certain border questions. Sun Yat Sen has been preoccupied also, for, apart from the pressure brought to bear upon him by the foreign powers, he has, as already indicated, had serious internal orders to contend with. Again, his financial position has not been too secure, and without a sufficiency of silver bullets an active campaign in the north would be fraught with serious uncertainty.

An Ever Present Danger.

On top of all this is the ever present danger of foreign interference. This has been clearly disclosed in the recent utterances of Sir Edward Pearce at the British Chamber of Commerce meeting at Shanghai on March 11, when he openly advocated an administration of China under foreign experts. While that menace hangs like a dark cloud on the political horizon of China, her internal differences—which to all appearances must be finalized on the battlefield—will remain unsettled.

Two Individualists.

It must not be imagined that because Chang was prepared to support Sun that he had become a convert to Socialism. He, like Wu Pei Fu, is a pure individualist and opportunist, and even had Wu been crushed there would still have remained the makings of a pretty squabble between Sun and Chang, tho the argument certainly would have been advanced one stage farther.

Altho Chang, like the other Chinese leaders, hesitates to commence an active spring campaign in face of the common danger, he is maintaining his forces in a state of preparedness.

Preparation for War.

Reports from Mukden and south along the Peking-Mukden Railway state that trains are having some difficulty in getting thru, and Chang is beginning to gather what railway stock he can put his hands on.

It is stated that strenuous efforts are being made to furnish Chang's troops with complete and up-to-the-minute equipment, and to get them into first-class discipline.

It is interesting to note in this direction that, having failed to secure stores in Shanhaiwan and Tientsin (mostly held by the Italians), Chang arranged for the purchase of a large supply of other arms which are said to have arrived in a Mexican ship. These arms, according to reliable reports, found their way—from what source is not certain—into the Netherlands soon after the armistice of 1918. Arrangements were completed for transporting them to China under the Mexican flag, as Mexico was not a signatory to the arms embargo agreement. The total shipment includes rifles, field guns, machine guns and large supplies of ammunition, the value being estimated at over $7,000,000 Mex.

Plenty of Silver Bullets.

Financially, Chang Tso Lin is in an extremely strong position, controlling, as he does, the resources of Manchuria, which, in addition to its natural wealth, has had lately a big trade boom. Very little of this wealth has gone to Peking, for Chang has steadily refused to remit any taxes to the central authorities. He, therefore, is well supplied with silver bullets. His course of action must have a big influence on the destiny of the Chinese nation, which, as I have pointed out already, must affect not only the welfare of Eastern workers, but the economic status of the occidental toiler also.

DAUGHERTY JUST DODGE WAR ON GROWING TRUSTS

"D. of J." Shuts Its Eyes To Price Fixing

WASHINGTON, April 27.—Further details of the alleged failure of the Department of Justice to prosecute anti-trust cases were laid before the senate investigating committee by Huston Thompson, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission. Thompson took the stand when the committee revised its pre-arranged plan to start with Gaston B. Means.

Altho Sidney Morris and Company, a Chicago stationers firm, was being forced "out of business" for refusing to abide by an alleged price-fixing agreement of the National Catalogue Commission, a stationers organization, Thompson said that the Department of Justice refused to take action in the case.

Thompson said an investigation by the committee was made in 1918-19 into the stationery trade to determine if the anti-trust law had been violated. Evidence in the case was turned over to the Department of Justice in 1920, but it was turned back to the commission by the department three years later with the statement "there was no case," he said.

tion as to where he got the $75,000 in cash, the additional 2000 shares of Wright-Martin Aircraft stock and the other wealth he had laid away, after making affidavit in his tax return for 1920 that he owed $5000 more than his property was worth. If he had proof of that hellish plot, then he was the most incompetent attorney general imaginable."

Senator Wheeler answered the Daugherty speech by saying that the most of the specific statements were false, as to the way in which the senate committee had conducted its investigation, and that the evidence against Daugherty thus far brought the committee was only a drop in the bucket. He finally challenged the Daugherty brothers to permit the senate to read the records of Mal Daugherty's bank, now shielded by an injunction.

"Oiled" Guard Brazening It Out

Anti-administration forces are highly pleased at the outcome of the Daugherty tirade. They see in it a plague which will rest upon the shoulders of the Coolidge candidacy, and will deepen the impression made by the testimony before the Brookhart committee—that the "oiled guard" gangsters, having no ground for defense in their encouragement, are going to brazen it out during the presidential campaign.

MINERS ENDORSE MILITANT PROGRAM

the 14,000 miners of Kansas would live, fight and die for him.

McGlennon was given the horse laugh when he voted against Howat and the committee report.

On reconvening in the afternoon the remainder of Vice President Parry's report was speedily adopted and the convention began considering the report of Secretary-Treasurer Watt. This report, compact in form, was disposed of at once. It contained no itemized report of finances, due to the destruction of record in a fire that razed the building where the office had been located. Watt pointed out that the chief beneficiaries of the existing compensation law in Illinois were the insurance companies of the United States and several European companies.

Delegate Tells of Accident.

Delegate Knudtson of Virden, Ill., described some of the iniquities of the law from personal experience. Knudtson fell down a shaft at the Old West mine at Virden. He described grabbing the rope to break his fall, sliding the rope 250 feet, hitting the cage which was stopped in the shaft about 100 feet from the bottom, and then falling the last distance without a rope to slide on. This miner shows visible signs of his accident yet, but in spite of this he did not get justice in the settling of his compensation claim. The mystery is that he is here himself to describe it.

Under report of the resolutions committee a demand for increased pay for mine examiners was discussed. It was pointed out that inasmuch as the agreement was now signed up for three years the convention could do nothing but indorse the spirit of the resolution, and, after defeating a motion to table, this was done.

Another resolution, denouncing the vicious "gang work" system, and the efforts of the operators to discriminate against "undersized" men and in favor of "huskies," was passed by unanimous vote.

McDonald Calls for June 17.

Duncan McDonald, editor of the Illinois Industrial Review, addressed the convention at the close of Friday's session. He was greeted and repeatedly interrupted with applause, especially when he urged participation in the St. Paul convention on June 17, and in the Illinois state convention, to be held in Peoria on May 18. Besides describing the chaotic conditions that prevail and the causes therefore, he outlined the methods by which the workers can remedy the existing conditions. He deplored the fact that men who claim to be labor leaders should work for men like Small and Essington.

Co-Operative Burying Favored.

"High cost not only applies to living, but it also affects dying," declared George Wones, delegate from Local 694 of Girard, in his argument for the establishment of co-operative undertaking. Nearly all of the delegates are heartily in favor of the move, for in it they can see protection from the greedy private undertaker, who charges to the full amount of the death benefits received. They decided to leave it to the locals for decision and then have the matter submitted to a referendum vote.

A demand that "we return to the system of negotiating for local conditions by sub-districts" was made in a resolution presented and passed by unanimous vote. The miners here have noted with regret that they had no right to discuss the agreement after the conferees at Jacksonville, Fla., handed it over to them.

Thompson and Watt Go to St. Paul.

President Thompson and Secretary Watt were elected by acclamation to represent Sub-district 4 at the St. Paul convention, June 17. A resolution on old age pensions and one proposing changes in the compensation law were also adopted. A few slight changes in the constitution were made and included a provision to protect the eligibility of members who may be forced to temporarily leave the district or the industry thru the closing of mines. An additional safeguard against corruption in elections was also inserted, and one prohibiting members of the union from giving evidence against a brother in contract and compensation cases.

Springfield, Ill., was selected as the next convention city.

The writer was given the privilege of making the closing address of the convention, during which he described the work of the Progressive Committee, the Workers Party and also the mission of the DAILY WORKER. Upon request, he reviewed the much talked of Monongahela City, Pa., meeting of 1921, after which he was accorded a rising vote of thanks.

Soviet Measures, Weights Concern French Company

(Rosta News Agency.)

MOSCOW, April 27.—The Central Chamber of Weights and Measures is in receipt of news from Paris that a special joint-stock company has been organized with the special object of obtaining and exploiting a concession in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for the production of metric measures and weights.

In the organization of this concern there took part some twenty of the biggest French firms manufacturing measuring instruments, two banks, and the international bureau of weights and measures. An authorized representative is leaving for Moscow. In the event of negotiations being brought to a satisfactory conclusion, the capital of the company is to be raised to 2,000,000 gold francs.

which means the right to walk the city streets—but he has not yet actually sentenced anyone yet.

Judge Foell was endorsed by the Federation of Labor when he sought his present office. He was endorsed as an anti-injunction judge. In spite of that fact during the present trials he has ordered pickets to obey the injunction. Reports that workers still held to their rights to walk the streets annoyed him. Foell faces his real test Wednesday when the cases come up. Twenty-nine other cases come up before Judge "Dennie" Sullivan the following Wednesday, May 6. Among these cases is that of Meyer Barkan, cloakmaker and not on strike, who was picked up on a John Doe attachment Thursday as he was leaving his place of employment on South Market st.

many to exert full sovereignty over all the territory.

"The governments must examine under what conditions the gages now held by France and Belgium can be made the object of fusion or exchange with new invisible guarantees to be held by all the allies," he says. "But these operations can only take place after Germany effectively puts the plan into execution, when the governments can determine what guarantees they consider necessary."

Thus, the French reply keeps the problem in a vicious circle. France will not relinquish its hold on the Ruhr until Germany begins paying, whereas the experts and other allies insist that Germany cannot begin paying until France releases the Ruhr economically, and the bankers declare the 800,000,000 gold marks loan cannot be floated until Germany regains the entire control of its territories.

DEFEAT OF THE RAILROAD SHOPMEN WEAKENS LABOR IN MINNEAPOLIS

By KARL SKOGLUND.
(Special to the Daily Worker.)

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., April 27.—The trade union movement here is in a very weak condition on account of the fact that the State University and Dunwoody Industrial Institute are located here.

In both of these institutions skilled workers are being trained to compete with unskilled workers.

The trade union movement is still weakened and at present is unable to function and give protection to the workers.

The defeat of the railroad shopmen in 1922 has lessened the power of the labor movement until today it is unable to put up a fight should a drive for the open shop be started.

Due to bad conditions existing on farms, many farmers moved from the rural districts to the cities and there compete with the city workers for jobs. The Minneapolis Street Railway Company is recruiting these farmers to run the street cars in the Twin Cities for one purpose only, to prevent the street car workers from becoming organized.

Minneapolis as a whole is not a manufacturing city. On the contrary, it is a place where commodities are exchanged thruout the Northwest. The milling industry is the chief industry here, employing several thousand men. It is run on part time basis, that is, it runs at top speed whenever there are orders, but in the meantime the mills are closed down.

Machine Shops Non-Union.

We also have a few machine shops, among them the Minneapolis Steel and Machinery Company, a part of the Steel Trust, run on a strictly open shop basis. This concern is organizing all of the smaller machine shops into a manufacturing association, and has been able, so far, to exclude the metal craftsmen from becoming organized in their respective unions.

Since the convention which organized the Farmer-Labor Federation took place new developments have arisen. The officials of the Minnesota State Federation of Labor, together with the reactionaries of different types, have launched an attack on the Farmer-Labor Federation as being a party controlled by Communists. There is no doubt but that the American Federation of Labor officials in Washington have given instructions to the officials in Minnesota to launch this attack for one purpose, namely, to destroy the Farmer-Labor Federation and bring Minnesota back to the policy of "rewarding your friends and punishing your enemies".

We also have an element in the Federation whose only interest is to capture the Federation for the Democratic Party, which has been wiped out of existence.

Huge sums of money are being spent by these politicians to enable them to have their candidates elected and by so doing take control of the committees of the Farmer-Labor Party in the state and deliver them over to the capitalist class.

Party Activities Of Local Chicago

The United Front May Day Celebration will be held in Chicago, on Thursday, May 1st, 1924, 8 p. m. at the North Side Turner Hall, 820 N. Clark street, to demonstrate for the Class Farmer-Labor Party in the U. S. and against American capitalism.

There will be a number of excellent speakers in various languages.

Among the speakers thus far selected are:

William F. Dunne, Editor DAILY WORKER; Alexander Bittelman, member Central Executive Committee, Workers Party and former Secretary Jewish Federation; J. Kowalsky, Secretary Polish Section Workers Party; A. Presi, Editor, Alba Nuova, Italian Weekly; John Williamson, N. E. C. of the Young Workers League; B. Sherman, Left Paola Zionist Jewish Socialist Party.

In addition there will be speakers in Russian, Lithuanian, and South Slavic.

There also will be a concert program consisting of the Freiheit Singing Society, and the Russian Grand Opera stars Nita Obstrastzova, coloratura soprano, and Gabrielius Hrzanowski, baritone.

The demonstration is held under the auspices of the United Front May Day Conference. Admission will be 25c.

In order to accommodate the overflow, an additional hall has been arranged for at the same address and in the same building namely N. S. Turner Hall, 820 N. Clark street.

To Sell Daily Worker.

At the United Front May Day Conference held April 23rd, it was decided that delegates to the CCC and other party members available, should distribute advertising material for the May Day meeting and sell the May Day edition of the DAILY WORKER during the lunch period at factories and other places to which they will be assigned.

The DAILY WORKER office at 1113 W. Washington Blvd. will be where the comrades will meet, and the time will be 10 o'clock Thursday morning, May 1st. There the members will receive copies of the May Day edition of the worker, advertising material for the May Day meeting, and their assignments as to what factory they should go. Also members of the Y. W. L. are asked to participate in this work.

Martin Abern, City Sec'y.

CANNON AND BROWDER TO SPEAK AT T. U. E. L. MEETING

James P. Cannon, member of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party, will speak at the next monthly meeting of the Trade Union Educational League, Wednesday, April 30, at Northwest Hall, corner North and Western Aves. on "May Day and the American Labor Movement."

Coming on the eve of May Day the lecture shold prove of extreme interest to every militant worker in Chicago. In Duluth and other cities local Labor bodies are uniting in the celebration of this international day of Labor. The united efforts on this day, the crystalizing unity of Labor on the question of a political party of its own—all these manifestations of today will make of greater interest the lecture of James P. Cannon on the history of May Day and it's special significance to the American Labor Movement.

Earl Browder, editor of the Labor Herald, will also give his monthly resume of the most interesting developments in the field of Labor—a feature of every monthly meeting.

These lectures promise to further establish the popularity of the monthly meetings of Chicago's militants.

ARMENIAN BUREAUS ORDERED TO UNITE

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party considered the question of the situation in the Armenian Section of the Workers Party at a meeting held recently. The result of the Boston convention held in February, was the organization of two separate bureaus, one representing the former Armenian Workers Party and the other the Armenian Federation of the Workers Party—S. D. Hunchakist, both of which were recognized as sections of the Workers Party. The former decision of the Central Executive Committee gave these two sections three months' time in which to combine.

Numerous objections to the delay in bringing about unification and the fact that two newspapers are being published—one by each of the respective groups, have reached the Central Executive Committee from the Armenian Branches. In the light of these protests, the Central Executive Committee has decided that the unification must take place immediately. It has sent to each of the two Armenian Bureaus, the following decisions to govern the unification:

1. That the bureau elected by the branches of the former Armenian Federation of the Workers Party—S. D. Hunchakist and the bureau elected by the Armenian Workers Party, both of which are recognized by the Party as sections of the Workers Party shall immediately combine and that the Bureau shall consist of the ten members selected by the Boston convention.

2. The two papers now being published by the respective groups, shall at once be combined and published under the name, "THE PROLETARIAT" with the line underneath, "The Combined Banvor and Gordzavor".

3. That THE PROLETARIAT shall be edited in the following manner:

(a) The Bureau shall appoint an editor and two associate editors. If the editor is of one group, the two associate editors shall be of the other group.

(b) These three shall constitute the editorial board under whose direction the paper is issued.

4. Should there be a deadlock in the combined bureau of the Armenian Section, over any question, the question shall be referred to the Central Executive Committee of the Party for decisions, each group having the right to submit their views of this question.

Unquestionably, the decisive action of the Central Executive Committee will result in creating a better condition in the Armenian Section and creating a basis for building up a strong movement among the Armenian workers in this country.

DOLL OF TODAY LARGELY WORK OF MERE BABES

Children Are Employed Under Bad Conditions

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER.
(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

SONNEBERG, Germany, April 27.—Few people who buy "made in Germany" dolls for their children know that the doll of today is largely the product of child labor. In the Sonneberg district, famous for its toy dolls, the economic distress of families with children is such that the children must begin to earn bread by working at dolls when happier children are still playing with them.

The children are chiefly employed at making the arms and legs of dolls out of a combination of pasteboard, sawdust, and a glue-like mass containing cement. The vapors and fine particles of dust arising from the process are inhaled by the youngsters, many of whom contract tuberculosis. Then, as the dolls are hung up to dry, the children must inhale the odors exuding, which are declared by physicians to be highly detrimental to health. The children must usually sleep in these same rooms without previously ventilating so that the drying dolls may not be damaged.

The children are also employed at stuffing so-called rag dolls. For this purpose they are given rags gathered by the head of the family and not disinfected, with every opportunity in the world of contracting disease. The dust and fuzz flying about the room as a result of pulling rags to bits settles in the children's noses and throats.

A number of welfare organizations, including the American Friends, are trying to provide living conditions in Sonneberg which will make further child labor out of the question.

Workers Fight For June 17th In Cleveland

CLEVELAND, Ohio, April 27.—Labor leaders in this city are attempting to put the July 4 convention of third party hopefuls before the June 17 Farmer-Labor convention at St. Paul in the minds of union men. The sentiment of the rank and file is favorable to the Twin City meeting, and it is expected that many representatives from the unions will join the coming conference to elect a delegate to the June 17 convention.

A writer in the "Citizen," edited by Max Hayes for the Labor Council, says: "Every local union should not only send delegates, but should instruct them to demand that a real independent Farmer-Labor party be immediately launched in the state of Ohio."

The emphasis of union leaders here upon July 4 is due to the convening of the Conference for Progressive Political Action and also the meeting of the Farmer-Labor party and the Socialist party on that date in this city. Workers of Cleveland will have to show that their duties as hosts cannot detract from the importance to them of the St. Paul convention and the formation of a class Farmer-Labor party in Ohio.

Mayor Condemns Police Imported Against Pickets

DOVER, N. H., April 27.—Mayor Waldron has issued a public statement condemning the use of imported police in strike-breaking efforts at the Pacific Mills. The Mayor says:

"The out-of-town officers came here with chips on their shoulders, as is shown by the fact that machine guns were brought to shoot down the natives. . . . Where union labor is a factor in a municipality it must be recognized and is entitled to constitutional rights and should not be hounded like a pack of wolves, as was done last week."

Nashua and Haverhill police have been hired for strike duty here in Dover. The local police department, acting in behalf of the mill bosses, hired the outside police for supporting their prohibition of picketing.

Bert Emsley and Fred Beal, organizers of the One Big Union conducting the textile strike at the mills, were arrested and convicted early in the month for picketing the residence of the mill superintendent. The headquarters of the O. B. U. are in Lawrence, Mass.

State Guards Scab Mine.

BELL COUNTY, Ky., April 27.—Two companies of Kentucky guardsmen have been ordered to proceed "under cover" to the camp of the Liberty Coal and Coke Co., in this County "to supress labor trouble in the coal field."

CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION SEES LYNCHING OF WHITE WORKERS IN THE NORTH

(Special to The Daily Worker)

TOLEDO, Ohio, April 27.—If the Salvatore Rose case is left unchallenged in Toledo, workingmen of the north will be lynched as readily as Negro workers of the south, according to the letter revelved by Mayor Brough from the American Civil Liberties Union headquarters in New York City.

Rose was speaking on a street corner last August when suddenly a mob of uniformed policemen seized him and his pregnant wife and hustled them into a waiting auto. The couple were driven 25 miles out into lonely country and then Rose was almost lynched. A noose was put over his head, as both he and Mrs. Rose have sworn in affidavits, and he was lifted from the ground several times by the police pulling the end of the rope over the limb of a tree. Rose was saved from death by hanging only when one of the mob threatened to expose the participants.

As a result of the shock of kidnapping and the subsequent events, Mrs. Rose's child was still-born. She and her husband were unable, because of their condition, to bring court action at once against the city officials.

The Civil Liberties Union charges the Mayor and other city officials with failure to investigate the case and bring the guilty to justice because the mob was made up of uniformed city police.

Rose had gone to the Mayor just before he was taken by the police and told that he had been threatened. Just because the man is a worker and "radical," the police acted on the notion that he had no civil rights and attempted to make another blot such as the lynching of Wesley Everest in Everett, Washington, and of Frank Little in Butte, Montana.

MAKE MAY DAY ATTEMPT TO HALT CHILD MURDER

Five Nations Lead U. S. In Care of Babes

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, April 27.—The campaign of the American Child Health Association to make May Day a child's health day reveals some startling facts about "advanced" America that will not please the 100 percenters.

The United States stands behind five other nations in the infant mortality rate. It is behind sixteen other nations which have lower rates of fatality among mothers at childbirth. Even in over-crowded Italy only 5 per cent of the mothers die in childbirth, while this country's rate is 8 per cent.

Backward United States.

Eighteen states of the United States do not keep a register of births; so that statistics in this country are far from complete. New Zealand loses fewest of her babies in the first year.

Dental defects amount to 75 per cent of the children. Tuberculosis claims a large per cent; as do various other deficiencies caused by American inattentiveness to the welfare of mothers and children.

Because May Day is celebrated out-of-doors by the children of so many communities, the American Child Health Association is making a special effort that day to encourage and increase out-door life for children, especially in the crowded cities. The association is focussing attention upon the shortcomings of this country in regard to its children.

Soviets Provide for Mothers.

Soviet Russia shows more concern for her mothers and children than the United States. Mothers are given special care and exemption from work for eight weeks before and eight weeks after childbirth. Mothers who work bring their infants to a specially provided nursery where the children are carefully attended to all day. In the United States mothers who work are given no asisstance except from the meagerly equipped charity agencies and after their children are born, most of the youngsters must be left in the care of neighbors, older children, or left to run the streets. Some mothers are even forced to lock their children in their rooms during the day.

Contraceptive information is scarcely tolerated here while many European nations make the furtherance of such knowledge, especially among working women, a matter of state concern

500 CAPMAKERS MAKE DEMANDS; MEETING MONDAY

Unemployment Fund, $40 Wage, Sought

A May Day strike of Chicago Capmakers, local number five, involving 500 workers is threatened if the bosses do not accede to the demands of the union by April 26th.

Forty-eight weeks' work guaranteed, an unemployment fund and a $40 minimum wage comprises the union's demands. Granting these modest requirements would bring the capmakers the enormous annual wage of $1920, not raising them to the class seriously disturbed by income tax calculations.

A strike committee of ten was elected Wednesday night. The committee has already ordered a roll call meeting Monday evening in Crawford Hall, on Roosevelt road, at which meeting there will be reports of the activities of the committee which has been trying to effect advance settlements in certain shops.

The agreement with the Capmakers' Association does not expire until May 15; so that organization has been given an extension of time in which to accept the new conditions laid down by the union workmen. This extension of time is likely to work to the advantage of the union men in effecting quick settlements with non-association shops who cannot face the competition with an organization still holding its workers.

If the Association does not respond favorably by the time their agreement with the union expires the strike proposed will be extended to their shops.

The chairman of the strike committee is Richmond, secretary, Brody. The publicity committee is composed of: Martin, Wright, Brody. The law committee is: Wright, Duffield. The picketing committee is: Wright, (business agent of the union), Mann, Penter, Lipson, Isenberg. The settlement committee is: Wright, Rumac, Rappaport, Buscalevitch.

If it is found necessary to call the May Day strike, the capmaking industry in Chicago will be effectively set back until the bosses settle.

German Workers Put Up Stiff Fight To Save Eight-Hour Day

LUDWIGSHAFEN, Palatinate, Germany, April 27.—For five weeks 20,000 workers in the aniline industry of this city have been holding out against an attempt of the bosses to abrogate the eight-hour day. Their strike funds have been exhausted; the bosses are showing no signs of meeting the workers even half way; yet the workers and their families continue undaunted.

The workers would perhaps be back at work even now, under the stress of economic necessity, except for the fact that the International Workers' Relief has erected sufficient soup kitchens in Ludwigshafen to make it possible for the striking and locked-out workers to receive sufficient food to keep them from starving.

Miners Must Dig Dirt Gratis For Coal Operators

CARLINSVILLE, Ill., April 27.—The Shopher mine at this place which has been shut down for many months, is preparing to resume operations after a conference between the owners and miners' officials.

It appears that a vote taken on the question of the conditions agreed to, brought forth a heavy opposition to the agreement. This was because, it is alleged, five important conditions, previously enjoyed by the men at this mine, have been forfeited in the settlement. These conditions, won as a result of hard fights, will mean much loss in wages for the miners and increased profit for the operators.

It is said that one of the conditions forfeited is that which pays for the removal of slate and other dirt, and that now much of this work must be done "free gratis."

Furuseth Fights For Foreigners.

WASHINGTON, April 27.—Andrew Furuseth of the Seamen believes that he still has a chance to secure a reasonable clause in the immigration bill now in conference of the branches of congress, safeguarding the right of alien seamen to remain in American ports until they can ship at fair wages. House conferees are Johnson of Washington, Valle of Colorado, Vincent, Sabath and Raker. Senate conferees are Reed of Pennsylvania, Sterling, Keyes, King and Harris.

Georgia Workers Distrust Lying Church Prelates

MOSCOW, Russia, April 27.—Because the Georgian people have no longer confidence in their church dignitaries, the High Court of Georgia sentenced the guilty Primate Catholicos Ambrosius and four other prelates much more lightly than they would have if the churchmen had been considered dangerous. The Primate Catholicos Ambrosius was given eight years' imprisonment, two members of his council got five years, and two other members received sentences of two years each. Two of the men tried were amnestied and four were acquitted.

The charges against all the men were: high treason; plundering and concealing of the church valuables; the embezzlement of church proprety, owned by the State; and that in February 1922 the Catholicos Council at Ambrosius' instigation sent a memorandum to the Genoa Conference in which they asked for the intervention of the Western Powers in Georgian affairs. This note contained such fantastic stories about the Soviet order that the workmen of Tiflis were greatly aroused against the prelates. The contents of the note were published in full and brought forth a storm of indignation among Georgian workers.

Russia and Italy Co-operate In Trade And Art

(Rosta News Agency.)

MOSCOW, April 27.—A Russo-Italian Chamber of Commerce is being founded in Moscow. The tentative statutes were signed for Italy by the then Italian Charge d'Affaires, Marques Paterne, and Mr. Krassin, the People's Commissary of Foreign Trade for the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. The object of the Chamber of Commerce is to give all-around assistance to the economic rapproachment between Italy and the Union by promoting trade, industrial and agricultural relations, organizing mixed companies, regulating questions of transport, and so forth.

The People's Commissariat of Foreign Trade has accepted the invitation extended to the Union of Soviet Republics to take part in the art exhibitions at Venice (Italy). The Commissariat proposes to send a party of art productions, mainly of handicraft industries, to be sold in Italy.

Soviet Republics Pile Gold Rubles In State's Bank

(Rosta News Service.)

MOSCOW, April 27.—The net profits of the State Bank of the U. S. S. R. for the past working year aggregate 15,689,000 gold rubles, of which 9,700,000 gold rubles have been turned over to the Exchequer.

About 15,000,000 gold rubles have been turned over to the Exchequer by March 1st, 1924, as net profits of the enterprises controlled by the People's Supreme Economic Council as well as other departments. The largest share of this sum has been received from State enterprises, controlled by the People's Supreme Economic Council, and, in particular, from the Textile Trust, which gave 9,500,000 gold rubles.

Russia Goes After Persian Trade In Organized Fashion

By Rosta News Agency.

MOSCOW, April 27.—With a view to restore the export of certain specific foodstuffs from Persia into Russia, the State Trade Department has organized buying agencies in all the main markets of Persia. These agencies have already started the purchasing and export of rice, dried fruit and other Persian agricultural produce.

The Board of the State Trade Department has decided to start a general agency at Berlin, which shall control and direct the work of representatives of the State Trade Department in other countries.

Russ Matches for Persian Rice

MOSCOW, April 27.—(Rosta News Service)—The Matohes Manufacturing Syndicate has concluded a contract with a Persian firm for bartering 10,000 cases of match boxes against rice, at the price of 1 case for 4 poods of rice. The Syndicate is now negotiating the sale of a big order of matches to Persia, and it has also sent samples of matches to Turkey thru the delegation of the Russo-Oriental Chamber of Commerce, which left recently for Constantinople.

American Dollar Diplomacy in Action

By JAY LOVESTONE.

ARTICLE V.

The World Banker and Manufacturer.

The World War has given tremendous impetus to the expansion of American industry. America has become the leading industrial, trading and banking nation of the world. Abstractly one might still contend that the United States is a self-sustaining nation. But we are already dependent, if not for our livelihood, at least for our prosperity, on the world market. Our wheat growers look toward Liverpool for the price they are to receive for their produce. The cotton growers of the South, as well as the steel workers of Pittsburgh are closely interwoven with the markets of Europe. The World War has increased the dependence of the United States on the world for the disposal of its surplus.

The tremendous increase of American industrial interprises since the war can best be seen from the following figures. From 1914 to 1919 the number of establishments in our industries rose from 275,791 to 290,105. At the same time the number of wage earners in these establishments increased from 7,036,247 to 9,096,372. The capital invested in these industries rose from $22,790,979,937 to $44,569,593,771, during this period. The value of the products rose from $246,434,724, to $62,418,078,773. For instance our iron and steel and their products increased from $4,281,997,816 to $8,711,843,201. The value of our crops leaped from $6,112,000,000 to $8,133,046,000; animal products $3,783,000,000 to $6,513,600,000; manufactures $9,878,346,000 to $17,697,000,000; mineral output increased from $2,118,300,000 to $5,607,000,000; forest products $568,820,000 to $1,680,900,000.

The national income of the United States has increased from $33,200,000,000 to $52,457,000,000 in this period. From 1912 to 1922 the total national wealth of the country increased from $186,299,664,000 to $320,803,862,000 or a gain of more than 72 per cent.

Our merchant marine has grown from 5,427,536 tons in 1914 to 17,062,460 in 1922. Ships of American registry carried 45.5 per cent of our foreign trade during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923. In 1913 ships of American registry carried only 11 per cent of our imports and 9 per cent of our exports.

America has become the banker of the world. The Department of Commerce in its annual report has stated that the world required no less than $4,692,000,000 to pay its current commercial obligation to the United States. Since the armistice November 11, 1918, European loans to the extent of $1,146,750,000 have been floated in the United States. In war debts alone the allies owe America over $11,000,000,000. America has more than half the world's gold. In the last calendar year alone the world has imported $332,715,812 in gold. How rapidly the world's gold has been drifting into the United States can be seen from the latest figures of the Department of Commerce showing that for the 11 months ending November 1923, we imported $1,608,570,909 worth of gold. For the same period in 1923 we imported $3,504,500,031. Since the war only four Scandinavian loans have been placed in London at the total value of $37,000,000. At the same time there were ten loans placed in dollars in New York at the total value of $162,000,000.

America has been turned from a debtor nation into a creditor nation. In 1915 the European capitalists held $2,704,000,000 worth of United States railway stocks and securities. Two years afterwards more than half of these holdings were transferred to American hands. In 1914 more than ¼ of the stocks of the United States Steel Corporation were held in Europe. Today the proportion is less than one tenth. Because of the great need for credit for their huge borrowings, France and England sent over the best of their gilt edge securities during the war. Thru the investment of capital abroad the United States has become the silent partner in the fate of every established order in the world. In 1923 alone American capitalists bought foreign securities to the value of $410,000,000. Our foreign trade has increased from $2,250,822 in 1913 to $7,508,424, imports from $1,608,570 to $5,013,299. In 1917 the United States exercised political or territorial control over 67 per cent of the petroleum produced thruout the world, and over 72 per cent of the petroleum produced was in the financial grip of Wall Street. The 1913 oil production reports show that 72.5 per cent of the total world oil supply estimated produced was in the United States. Adding the quantity of crude oil imported, one finds that the United States today controls at least 80 per cent of the world's available oil supply. But nearly 50 per cent of our own petroleum resources in the United States have been exhausted. Thus about 7.8 of the estimated world oil resources now lie outside of the United States. This accounts for the growing attention that the United States is paying to Mexico, the Caribbean republics, and the South American republics which fall in the second greatest oil area in the world.

Of the supply of corn estimated as having been raised in the world in 1923, the United States produced a quantity more than three times as great as that of all the other producing countries combined.

Nearly three-fourths of the world's known coal reserves are in North America. More than half of the world's supply is in the United States. Out of the estimated supply of coal produced in the world in 1923, 1,335,000,000 metric tons, 43.5 per cent were produced in the United States. A noted French economist summed up the European view of the American imperialist power in this fashion, "One fact dominates all others: the rise of the United States to world hegemony. Lord Robert Cecil has compared the position of the United States after the great war with Great Britain after the Napoleonic wars. That comparison is not quite exact; because the British hegemony was even essentially European while that of the United States today is universal, controlling an immense reservoir of raw materials of manufactured products, and of capital, the United States has become an economic centre in connection with which all the world must work and trade."

Money Oligarchy's Record In Ancient Judea Is Exhumed

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, April 27.—Striking parallels to modern economic cycles are found in the development of capitalism and despotism in ancient Judea, as shown in the book Bible and Labor, by Father Joseph Husslein, S. J., editor of America, and published by Macmillans.

"The long arm of the heartless exploiter of the poor reached to every corner of the land," he says, dealing with the period after the breakdown of the primitive land laws. "Exorbitant profits remained in the hands of unscrupulous middlemen. Great fortunes were accumulated by princes and merchants, while the people sank into the poverty that degrades. Collusion was common between the men in public positions and the oppressors of the poor. Not merely were judges bribed, but the laws themselves were written to accommodate rich clients. False prophets and idolatrous priests brought the power of religion to the support of the moneyed oligarchy. . . . The last stage had been reached into which the great nations have drifted in their turn, a stage of national wealth and national corruption, with excessive riches in the hands of a few and excessive poverty the lot of the many. The Hebrew nomad, the Hebrew farmer, the Hebrew empire builder, had now at length become the Hebrew proletarian."

ANTI-CHILD LABOR FIGHT AGAIN BEFORE CONGRESS FOR ACTION

WASHINGTON, April 27.—Twice thwarted by decisions of the Supreme court, federal regulations of child labor was to be taken up by the house in the form of a constitutional amendment.

Congress previously passed laws regulating interstate commerce in child labor products and taxing commodities producted by child labor, but in each case the Supreme Court ruled the leglislation unconstitutional.

A large majority in the house had declared itself in favor of the resolution when it was brought up, but considerable doubt existed as to whether the majority was sufficient to secure the necessary two-thirds vote.

Under the special rule granted for consideration six hours debate will be allowed before the vote.

Slogans of Yellow Unions.

BERLIN,—Three slogans will mark the celebration of May 1, the international workers' day, in Germany this year, according to the May day proclamation issued by the General Federation of Trade Unions. These slogans are: "Maintenance and Restoration of the Eight-Hour Day," "Reestablishment of Social Legislation," and "Defense of the Democratic-Republican Constitution."

Poor Man To Pay Rich Man's Family For His Accident

(By The Federated Press)

OAKLAND, Cal., April 27.—What happens when a rich man runs down and kills a poor man You know the answer—his insurance company settles the matter out of court and the rich man gets off with a fine or a light term in jail. But when Peter Torres, a poor man with a family to support, accidentally caused the death of Antone D'Avila, wealthy San Lean dro banker, Judge Wood ordered hi to serve five years on probation, pay $265 court costs and his boa while in jail awaiting trial, never drive an automobile in his life agai and to pay $15 a month to D'Avila family for 20 months. The slain man attorney objected that the relative did not wish to accept this money, b the judge waved him aside and sa to Torres: "Altho you are a po man and D'Avila's family is rich, want you to make this payment that you will be reminded each mont of your responsibility for the acc dent."

Jap Labor Seeks Suffrage.

TOKIO.—The worldwide agitation among labor organizations for action on the political field is reflected in the resolution of the Japanese General Federation of Labor to work for universal suffrage. A reactionary militarist cabinet is blocking the 13th annual convention of the federation.

LUMBER TRUST CONSPIRACY AIDED BY DAUGHERTY, FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSIONER SHOWS

By LAURENCE TODD
(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, April 27.—Every man, woman and child in the United States has been compelled to pay tribute to the pirates of the lumber trust, shielded by the department of justice while taking at least $25 per 1,000 board feet in excess profit during the last four or five years, Chairman Huston Thompson, of the federal trade commission, told the senate committee probing the lawlessness of former Attorney General Daugherty.

Whether the Weyerhaeusers, the Kirbys and the other lumber barons secured the collusion of Daugherty and his predecessor, Palmer, in the war they have waged upon organized labor, and upon the I. W. W. especially, as they secured the help of these officials in robbing the general public, was not brought out in testimony.

Hanged Frank Little.

It is significant, however, that the conspicuous leaders of this steal, which involved literally hundreds of millions of dollars taken from the pockets of the home-builders, tenants and the consumers who pay all the costs of business, were the dark forces behind the lynching of Frank Little, in Butte, the jailings and killings thruout the northwest and California and Utah, and are the forces that stood behind Palmer and Daugherty in their lies concerning the evidence upon which the I. W. W. political prisoners were sent behind the iron bars.

Conspired to Restrict Production.

Thompson explained that the Southern Pine Association of which John Kirby of Texas, has been one of the chiefs, was investigated by the commission in 1920, and in the summer of that year a formal report was made to the department of justice. The commission urged Palmer to begin criminal prosecution of Kirby and his associates under the Sherman law. The commission gathered, analyzed and turned over to the department of justice some 22,000 letters and documents, proving a conspiracy to fix prices of lumber to the retailers and to restrict production.

Thompson handed to Senator Brookhart, Senator Jones, Senator Wheeler and Senator Moses a series of big charts, sent out weekly to all members of the Southern Pine Association, showing three red-filled tubes in a "trade barometer." The three columns represented orders, shipments and production. There was a "key" which explained to the manufacturer that when shipments or orders increased, a lower production and higher prices were indicated. By the use of this price-fixing scheme, which had been agreed upon in meetings of the association, the average price of southern pine was moved up from $15.29 a thousand in 1915 to $50 a thousand at the period of the inquiry. The profits of the manufacturers were $25 a thousand higher than they had been at the time the price-fixing was begun.

Daugherty Wouldn't Prosecute.

Daugherty came into office in Mar. 1921, to find that one Mitchell, a lawyer under Palmer, had filed a bill in equity in court at St. Louis, to enjoin this illegal setting of prices. Mitchell had started several other cases, on less evidence and won them in the United States supreme court. But Daugherty failed to take any further action. The price-fixing still goes on.

Similar schemes were worked, and are still being worked, by the West Coast Lumbermen's Association, the Western Pine Association, the Hemlock and Hard Wood Association, the Maple Flooring Association, and other groups. The West Coast Lumbermen, second in importance only to the Southern Pine, were brought into alliance with the latter, and no criminal or civil action has even been begun against them.

Daugherty Yields to Conspiracy.

Senator Wheeler brought out, by questions to Thompson and to his assistant, W. B. Wooden, who has spent several years on these cases, that Daugherty lost all interest in prosecution of the lumber crowd when two lawyers from Columbus, O., came here and consulted him on behalf of the conspirators. It was reported that Daugherty seemed exceedingly intimate with these visitors, and that one of them was J. E. Todd, his former law partner. This J. E. Todd has appeared in many lines of activity requiring the delivery of the favor of Daugherty as shown in testimony before the committee.

"Either I am crazy or the world is crazy," jubilantly wrote Manager Case of the Weyerhaeuser Sales Co., in one of the letters read by Thompson, showing that pine flooring had sold at $90 a thousand in Nebraska.

A big campaign on the part of clergymen, school teachers and women's clubs, to "Own your own home," was financed by the Southern Pine Association—and then it boosted the price of lumber a few more points.

Leaders of Crooked Combine.

Leaders in the Western Pine Assn., Wooden said, are the Anaconda Copper Mining Co., Blackwell Lumber Co., Weyerhaeuser Sales Co., Boise-Payette Lumber Co. and Crookston Lumber Co. The statute of limitations against the officers of these and other companies guilty of criminal conspiracy has not expired. But the federal trade commission does not expect to see the criminals punished, nor price-fixing against the public curbed, under existing conditions in the administration.

5,000 Tenants Plan To Strike Against Landlords May Day

Forty Jewish trade unions with a membership of over 5,000 were represented at a meeting which organized for a rent strike against the May 1st increase in rents. A Tenants' League was organized at the meeting, held at 2242 Le Moyne street, and the union representatives decided to advise their members not to pay the increase in rents and not to move.

"Until we force measures thru the legislature curbing the rent-hogs, we must refuse to pay the advance in rent," Louis Benanshon, chairman, told his audience.

J. Ritchie Patterson declared in an address before the Women's City Club that coal is no higher, janitor service is no higher, labor is no higher, and taxes are no higher, so there is no reason for the increase in the rents this year.

Greetings! Steel Workers!

This is the first time that the DAILY WORKER has really had an opportunity to send its greetings to the steel workers in the far-flung industrial district that stretches away to the south of Chicago and over into the State of Indiana.

We are able to send you greetings, steel workers, thru the fact that the rebellion of labor at the huge plant of the Pullman Company, at Pullman, has created a great demand for the DAILY WORKER, all along the furnace-blazing southern shores of Lake Michigan. Therefore, just as a starter, the DAILY WORKER is now on sale on the news stands of South Chicago and Pullman, of Kensington and Calumet, of Hegewisch and Hammond.

The DAILY WORKER is the only daily newspaper that is giving the news of the spontaneous and growing walkouts of the workers in Pullman and Hegewisch. The whole bosses' press is silent except for the paid advertisements of the panic stricken employers, calling for strikebreakers. These "ads" are being carried conspicuously by the subsidized sheets of the "open shoppers," the Tribune and the Daily News.

The DAILY WORKER is being hailed as an emancipator by the workers on strike in the steel belt; just as it has been considered by the striking garment workers in Chicago, as their valiant champion. The Pullman strikers get large bundles of it and dispose of hundreds of copies among the workers who still remain on their jobs. This is the only means of publicity they have for their struggle. And it is the first time they have had this daily method of communication.

There is no need now for the workers in South Chicago, Hammond, Calumet and Kensington, not knowing what is going on in Pullman and Hegewisch. Every day they can get the news of the latest developments of interest to themselves. And they can get it off the news stands in their own they can get it off the newsstands in their own town.

This is a new weapon, a new power, at the disposal of the tens of thousands of workers in this unorganized industrial area. We know that the workers will take full advantage of it. Thousands of workers reading the DAILY WORKER, from South Chicago, all the way down to Hammond, Indiana, will mean the beginning of a new era, the beginning an epoch of organization of labor in this almost untouched non-union territory.

Workers of South Chicago, Pullman, Kensington, Hegewisch, Calumet and Hammond! Again the DAILY WORKER greets you! All together and forward for greater victories for the whole working class!

Hoover Also Hooked

Herbert Hoover appears a little late upon the stage where is presented "Washington Scandals of 1924," but it is no small part that has been assigned him. Supposedly buried in the department of commerce Hoover has been neglected by all but the Communist and left-wing press; his use of American famine relief funds for subsidies to the counter-revolutionary army of Yudenitch has aroused no great indignation among the middle class elements prosecuting the Teapot Dome and Daugherty investigations but now Hoover is found to be closely connected with wholesale theft of the fabulously rich salmon fishing rights in Alaska.

These preserves appear to have been given outright to the Alaska Packers Association—a name that carries in Alaska all of the odious significance that attaches Standard Oil in the states.

Hoover has been engaged, as secretary of the department of commerce, in giving first aid to the enterprising American babbittry who with his sympathetic assistance, have been acquiring such profit-making fields as were easy to grab and as yet unassimilated. Hoover has been carrying out the pledges made during the Harding campaign and has been giving away, in conformity with the program of a "businessman government," sundry valuable natural resources.

The Alaska salmon fishing fields exceed beyond calculation the wealth of the naval oil reserves that were given to Doheny and Sinclair. Their wealth is inexhaustible and consists of a food supply that has become a staple diet of millions.

The Alaska Packing Association is an employer of slave labor—its contract system means just this. It fosters the lowest forms of vice and takes profit from them; for years its activities during the salmon season have been a scandal but have been given publicity only in labor and radical papers.

Herbert Hoover has been the petted darling of the liberals; his efficiency has been lauded to the skies and he was popularly supposed to have been above the sordid political struggle.

He is an expert on food supplies and now seems to have turned that knowledge to good account—in the interest of one of the most vicious corporations that exploit the American workers.

One by one the idols fall. Against their will the American masses are being shown by brutal facts that every agency of the national government is merely an adjunct of the profit-making machinery of privately owned industry or an instrument of oppression for use against resentful and disillusioned workers.

Hoover as an aid to counter-revolution in Hungary and Russia perhaps was a little too far removed from the American class struggle for the full importance to be understood by the American masses; but Hoover as the protector of the notorious Alaska Packers Association is something that can be easily grasped.

The exposure of Hoover helps some in the process of disillusionment that is taking place so rapidly and that is giving the American workers and farmers a clearer insight into the purposes and processes of American capitalist government than they have ever had before.

Before and After

Len Small, gloating over his recent re-nomination as governor of Illinois in the republican primaries, and proud of his control of the republican party machine, last week graciously allowed his "labor official" following to have an anti-injunction plank inserted in his republican platform.

But hardly 24 hours had passed after the adjournment of the harmony state republican convention, when Circuit Judge E. S. Smith issued an injunction against union men, ordering them not to picket the scab moving picture shows of Springfield, the convention city.

The voice of Len Small and his political henchmen have not been raised against this injunction issued within view of the state house itself. Judge Smith issued the injunction against the whole of organized labor in Springfield, and then set the hearing on it two weeks hence, during which time pickets will not be allowed to let the public know that a strike is on. And during that time the strike can be broken.

The anti-injunction plank is a good one, no doubt, for Len Small to buy the support of reactionary labor officials with. It is an excellent plank for him to use in walking back into office. But even before re-election this slight pledge to labor is ignored. The only conclusion then possible is that it will be completely discarded after election.

An anti-injunction plank in an old party platform doesn't mean anything. It will only have value as the rallying cry of a class Farmer Labor Party.

"Abolition of the Use of Injunctions in Labor Disputes," is one of the slogans of the Farmer-Labor Convention called to assemble at Peoria, Ill., May 18th. All labor interested in a real fight to abolish injunctions will quit the old parties and join the united front of Illinois labor that will be created at Peoria next month.

Bed-Time Stories, Maybe

Harry M. Daugherty, the former labor-baiting head of the department of justice, threw a boomerang when he charged that it was the long arm of Moscow that forced his expulsion from Coolidge's strike-breaking cabinet.

From the Chicago Daily News to the Wall Street (N. Y.) Journal, the bosses' press groans under the terrific blow dealt their anti-Soviet propaganda by the silly alibi of the pal of the world's greatest sleuth, William J. Burns.

The Wall Street Journal states the situation when it wails that, "The 'red' plea of Daugherty hasn't helped his case." And it will help make the "red" hysteria stuff of the employers' press pretty sterile matter in the future.

Daugherty was just another pea in the same capitalist pod, like his predecessor, J. Mitchell Palmer, of the Wilson regime, and Mr. Burns, whose "red plot" exposures have shown big on the front page of the daily press, without resulting, however, in a single arrest or prosecution. We suggest that the anti-Bolshevik fiction of Daugherty, Palmer, Burns and the rest, be hereafter published as bed-time stories. But we doubt if even children can any longer be frightened by them.

Keep an Eye on China

Washington and Western European imperialism is getting ready to launch a new attack on China. There can be only one reason. China is getting ready to recognize and open trade relations with Soviet Russia, even against the interference of dollar diplomacy at Paris and Washington.

The old war cry against China, "hostility toward foreigners," is again being used. But we find that "the most daring outrage" reported in a Peking dispatch to the Chicago Tribune, April 26, is an alleged robbery committed against six junks of the Standard Oil Co. In support of John D. Rockefeller's oriental oil fleet, the United States government landed marines from the U. S. S. Monocacy, in a preliminary effort to impress the natives with the importance of submission to American gold.

No doubt, if the natives of China are not as obedient to Rockefeller, as the people of the United States, then American troops, American battleships, submarines and airplanes will be sent across the Pacific to teach them this lesson. But the workers of the United States ought to have something to say about that. And they will.

May Day Greetings

By MATT TENHUNEN.

Half a year ago the revolutionary workers of America only had a slight comprehension of the fact that we need, above all, our own daily newspaper as a weapon in our struggle. That thought changed into activity, altho many among us said that it could not be done.

About four months ago it was decided that the publication of the DAILY WORKER would be commenced on January 13, but still there were many who doubted whether it could be done.

Three months ago the DAILY WORKER commenced to appear, but, as usual for workers' papers, in a rented building, with rented machinery and under temporary agreements. Therefore a heavy burden of rent, interest and profits to carry. And while the element nearest the DAILY WORKER sweated with plans to purchase a building, machinery and fixtures, made drawings and specifications for a home and press of its own for the DAILY WORKER, there still were many among us who thought it could not be done.

Now the DAILY WORKER has been established, it has its own up-to-date building and printing machinery, all paid for. Are there still comrades who can say that it cannot be done?

I know that the DAILY WORKER has the best, the most up-to-date and modern building, printing machinery and fixtures that any one could have secured for the funds that were available for the purpose. I know that with the aid of this printing outfit the DAILY WORKER and other party publications can be issued most economically; but the success of the DAILY WORKER is not benefited alone by its own home and printing plant. The DAILY WORKER was not established for the purpose alone of getting it a new home and press. It was established to guide and develop the class struggle of the workers. The principal progress of the DAILY WORKER will be shown by the wide extent of its subscriptions' Therefore all friends of the DAILY WORKER must obtain subscribers for it!

When we have secured a building, presses and fixtures, when we are sacrificing a great amount of the labor and funds of our party in giving out a paper for 15,000 subscribers, then it can be easily realized that with the same expense we can have the educational influence of our paper reach 25,000, 40,000, why not hundreds of thousands of workers? Indeed, why not?

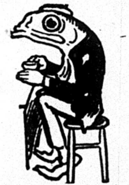
Many will, of course, again say that it cannot be done.

But it can be done if the membership of our party and the friends of the DAILY WORKER spend a half of the time in circulating the paper that they have spent in the past in carrying out all kinds of minor affairs, which the paper will carry out in the future. And if the membership of the party will understand the significance of its own paper and how the work can be accomplished thru it.

As a matter of fact not much, as yet, has been done toward circulating the DAILY WORKER. It has, in reality, obtained the circulation it has itself without any special effort or organized work. It is the party's turn to work now. Every member of the party must be something now. Especially in Chicago, toward which every one looks as if it were a Mecca, how much has each one done for the circulation of the paper?

Away with incapability! Principal issues to the front! The circulation of the DAILY WORKER is one of them! The circulation of the DAILY WORKER must be increased, first to 25,000, then to 50,000, and then always upward. Fifty thousand subscribers for the DAILY WORKER in Chicago is not much. When we have that, then workers' dailies must be established, too, in New York, Cleveland, Detroit, and the West. Not only one DAILY WORKER in Chicago, with 50,000 or 100,000 subscribers, but a DAILY WORKER of its own for every large industrial center, with tens of thousands, nay, hundreds of thousands of readers! This alone will lead us to victory! And all of this is possible within a few years with good, intelligent, earnest effort! But it requires the work of all of us. As a beginning let each one of us secure a few new subscribers for the DAILY WORKER!

How many of your shop-mates read THE DAILY WORKER. Get one of them to subscribe today.



The Poor Fish says he is tired of hearing about the death of workers in industry; the capitalists risk their money and the workers risk their lives and it's a fair proposition.

Thirty-Five Years (1889-1914)

By CHARLES RAPPAPORT

Thirty-five years! I had the good fortune to take part in the first Congress of the second International at Paris, where the transfer from America to Europe of the celebration of the first of May was voted on. As always, those who proposed it could not have foreseen all the consequences of the revolution. Some presented it as a holiday of labor. Others looked on it as a pledge of international solidarity, of proletarian brotherhood. Still others did not wish to see in the first of May anything more than an occasion for renewing the memory of according to public authority, by a legal and correct proceeding, the formulation of the workers' demand.

May Day Issue

It is interesting to notice that it was precisely in France, where the Congress took place which introduced May 1, we could take a hand in this paradox. The French Marxists, the Girondists, good theorists and excellent propagandists, but mediocre men of action, typical representatives of the Second International—that is to say, revolutionists in theory and opportunists in practice, —the French Marxists at Paris, to celebrate the First of May by impeccable steps, according to public authority where the program of workers demands was laid down.

In revenge, the revolutionists, those who followed Allemane, one of the militant members of the commune thought that the first of May, not summoning to arms, did not have revolutionary value.

The historical truth, —and France itself, jeers at both (ideas). The First of May of 1890 witnessed a bloody fight—a class fight, and notably at Fourmy, a town of the industrial and proletarian region of the North. The French bourgeoisie fired Lebel guns—then the new thing—on the workers in celebration. This slaughter contributed to the development of class consciousness in France and even to an electorial success of Paul Lafargue, the son-in-law of Karl Marx,—the first Marxist in the French parliament.

For thirty five years the world proletariat has not stopped celebrating the first of May. Useless now to compare one meaning of the proletarian holiday with another. The first of May is a proletarian reunion. It is at the same time a workers' holiday, a demonstration of the fight against capital, an act of international solidarity, and of a review of our world forces. The first of May has survived all the proletarian crises. It is celebrating at present its first great victory. A country forty times as big as France is celebrating the first of May in the name of the proletariat in power, by a working class which has abolished Czarism and—let us hope for ever—has done away with capitalism. In present day Russia, the first of May enters into his home, into his house, and into his stronghold.

Proletarians of all countries, look with joy and confidence to Russia. It is the country of hope in a better future, which is no longer a hope, but an accomplished fact.

The proletariat there is celebrating the first of May as a victory over capitalism and the powerful builder of a new world.

Whose turn is it next?

WAR!!

By HENRY GEORGE WEISS.

We must have war. Down with the Japanese!
Let hatred wake, and murder walk the land.
The yellow dogs must go! Say what you please,
The Teapot Dome we'll settle with the brand.

Up with the flags and let the boy-scouts drill;
Call out the citizens and beat the drum;
Put Old Abe's picture on the screen, and thrill
The patriotic hearts of all the dumb.

On to Berlin! Excuse me, Tokio!
Wipe out the yeller heathen—cursed race!
Conscript the husky morons—let us go—
You bet we'll keep Cal Coolidge in his place.

Slay, tar and feather, lynch and jail the reds,
Burn, beat, and murder all the pacifists,
Behind bars with the wobblies, break their heads,
—We'll make a dozen fortunes out of this!

Goose-step the willing heroes to the fray,
(We ought to lose a million dubbs or more),
Down with the japs! Oh, this is candy, say
On to the front! we must—we must have war!

May "Liberator" Is Splendid Combination Of Art And Revolt

From the May-bloom cover, drawn by Hugo Gellert, to the ad for the Bertrand Russell-Scott Nearing debate, the May Liberator offers an array of springtime revolutionary inspirations.

The vigorous May Day Song, by Michael Gold, beginning:

"Follow the drum, follow the drum," and ending:

"Thunder the song, Labor's spring song, at the foe," is headed with one of Fred Ellis' stirring cartoons. The joyous workers are shown following their red flags and the thumping drum. The only criticism to be made of the drawing is the lack of women workers in the marching crowd, and this is almost unforgivable.

Old May Day and New.

The old May Day and the new, the original Saturnalian celebrations and reversal of the usual order of society and the later demonstrations by workers, are shown to be intimately associated by Robert Minor's careful article on "The Story of May Day." Much new data is added to this fascinating subject and Minor has presented it with appealing simplicity. He leads up to the conclusion of today: "All news is the news of the Revolution—impending.

"'We carry Death out of the world,
We bring Summer into the world.'"

Max Bedacht paints a word picture of the brewing political storm in this country. How well he says that "Communists not only interpret and analyze history—their prime object is to make history." And he shows how in the coming crisis the Workers Party of America is going to "make history."

"'Dear' Government," by Scott Nearing, supplements Bedacht's article with some significant facts and statistics on the cost of government.

The articles on the two most brilliant figures of the international revolutionary movement, Marx and Lenin, help to show these men in their real characters and value. The one concluding "The Life and Work of Lenin," by Karl Radek, reveals how far the successors of Lenin in all countries must go to have his clear understanding of the revolutionary movement and the intimate contact with workers.

List of Fine Features.

The activities of the United States government (industrial and money lords) in Honduras are recounted by Bertram D. Wolfe. Alexander Bittelman again explains the vicious bills now in Congress, which threaten the lives of the foreign born. Robert Minor's cartoon of Secretary of State Hughes' Japanese "jingoism" and flag-waving to hide the Teapot Dome government from workers is a graphically strong emphasis on the current situation in America.

Floyd Dell concludes his "Literature and the Machine Age," which has found many eager readers, and the book reviews are more interesting than usual in their brief characterizations.

Liberator "fans," young or old, party members or not, will find the May issue well worth their attention.

Immense Russian Workers' Parade To Honor May Day

MOSCOW, Russia, April 27.—Peaceful demonstrations will mark the May Day festivities in Russia this year. The workers will supplant the Red Army in the chief parades. Hundreds of thousands of workers and their families will gather in a great procession to the improvised wooden shrine in Red square, which houses the body of Nicolai Lenin. The workers will honor their dead leader in their joint manifestations of homage.

The change from a military May Day demonstration is made, according to dispatches, to show the world the tranquil state of the powerful Russian Soviet Republic and its peaceful attitude toward the peoples of other nations.

John Fitzpatrick and the loca Farmer-Labor Party leaders who "injected" themselves into the Smal campaign for the Republican nomination for governor of Illinois, have s ceeded in bringing about a Unite Front between Small, Thompson and their enemies. The hatchets that th rival factions hitherto buried in each other's political necks may now b hurled simultaneously into the anat mies of the working class. Fitzpatrick's strategy in urging the workers to go to the polls for Small on primary day, in order to defeat the Chicago Tribune and State's Attorney Crowe, "enemies of labor," which they are, of course, had the result of closing the ranks of labor's enemies and leaving the ranks of labor divided.

William Hale Thompson and Robert E. Crowe, formerly enemies, now agree on the same state supreme court judge, a certain De Young. Is he an "injunction judge"? He is a capitalist judge, and therefore an injunction judge. The labor fakers were denouncing Crowe as an enemy of labor and boosting Small as a friend. Now these two crooks unite when it suits them, leaving the workers with their fingers in their mouths. Did the labor leaders know what they were d ing? Perhaps. The Chicago Tribune no longer uses its best cartoonists to draw caricatures of Small, nor does it use its most vulgar editorial write to pillory him as a public thief. The Daily News has called off its dog The fight is over and only the poor betrayed workers are bitten, as usual.

Yes, as silent and almost as ignorant, tho not quite so strong. We never could get that Samson slant on the little lad in the White House. He always looks to us like a little boy after taking a pill. The Chicago Tribune believes that Judge Gary should b muzzled and prevented from eulogizing Coolidge, else the voters migh think Calvin is actually a friend Big Business. This should form t basis for a good bedtime story.

SCAB AGENTS HUNT FOR JOBLESS TO TAKE PLACES OF STRIKERS IN PULLMAN

The streets of Pullman were filled yesterday with automobile loads of riveters and car workers from Davenport, Iowa, seduced here by labor agents who assured the workers that there was no labor trouble here and that they would receive good wages.

There are one thousand carmen unemployed in Davenport and this is a fertile field for the activities of the labor sharks.

The workers who are lured into the scabby Pullman shops must pay their own railroad fares with the promise that after thirty days the money will be refunded.

On arriving here most of the workers, when they learn of the strike, refuse to work and are obliged to fall back on the generosity of the strikers for food and transportation back to their homes.

This is a big drain on the slender resources of the strikers, and the trick of bringing the men here under such conditions is partly with the object of breaking the strikers financially.

More Expected Today.

Four hundred more workers are expected from Davenport today and five truck loads are promised from Lockport, Illinois.

Yesterday's strike meeting was the largest and most enthusiastic held to date. While new to organizational problems, the strikers are learning the lesson of solidarity and discipline very rapidly and their militancy and willingness to do hard work that is required in order to bring the strike to a victorious ending, augurs well for the future of the newly organized local of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen.

Strike Continues to Spread.

The members of another department of the Pullman shops joined the strikers yesterday. They are the benchmen, vestibule fitters, steel cabinet workers and brass finishers.

It was learned today that the freight car shop of the Pullman company planned to turn out no less than 3,000 freight cars during the next two months, but the strike has completely crippled this program and no more men are hired for the freight shop, tho men were being taken on in large numbers up until the day the strike started.

A scab dealer from Bettendorf, Ia., by the name of Jansen, is the agent of the Pullman company in shipping the men here. So furious are the victims of his trickery at the way he has flim-flammed them into coming

POLICEMAN SHOOTS AT DAILY WORKER MAN IN PULLMAN STRIKE ZONE

Shots from a policeman's' revolver gave excitement to the Pullman strike zone yesterday afternoon. The shots were fired by Officer Minton at Nick Stynow, a car builder, agent for the DAILY WORKER at 113th St. and Watt Ave., as the Calumet shop of the Pullman Company was letting out its employes.

Minton first struck Stynow in the face with his fist and told him to stop selling that "——————" paper. Seeing Stynow again on the job he drew his club and rushed. Officer 4864 rushed with him. Stynow ran and Minton fired.

Stynow threw himself flat on the ground and the shots passed over him. Arrested and taken to the Kensington Avenue station the police didn't know what charge to put against him.

Captain Wheeler stopped Sergeant No. 432 from holding him on a mere "selling without a permit" charge, saying he had a right to do that but eventually he was charged with selling newspapers that contained circulars. He was bailed out and will appear in Municipal Court at 8855 Exchange Ave. this morning. John Holmgren, of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, will be there, bringing with him Alderman Govier, who is taking an interest in the case.

The law gives newsdealers the right to enclose circulars provided the newspaper consents. In this case consent had previously been obtained from Karl Reeve, the DAILY WORKER representative in the strike zone. The circular advertised a labor meeting.

PULLMAN STRIKE EXPOSES THE "COMPANY UNION" AS AN ENEMY OF WORKERS' BEST INTERESTS

The strike of the steel workers of the Pullman plant, and the general dissatisfaction of the switchmen, wood carpenters, steel cabinet workers, battery makers and practically every department of the plant should prove for all time the fallacy of the "company union," or "employee plan of representation."

Many of the above departments have joined the walkout of the fitters, buckers, riveters, reamers, heaters and brass finishers, and a general strike of the entire fifteen thousand is threatened at any moment. The Pullman Company's "Bureau of Industrial Relations" has been proven an ironical joke on the Pullman employees.

Pullman Lackeys Rule.

The elaborate plan worked out by the Pullman Company as a substitution for an honest to God union proves to be nothing more than a further hold by the officials of the Pullman Company on the conditions under which their employees shall work. It is an added instrument by which the Pullman Company can speed up production, keep down wages, and in general meddle in the affairs of the Pullman slaves.

The final and most powerful tribunal it is found by examining the "Plan of Employee Representation," published by the Pullman Company, is the "Bureau of Industrial Relations," which "consists of executive officers of the company appointed by the president, and which will report direct to the president." Thus right at the start the management of the "union" which claims to benefit the employees is directly in the hands of the Pullman Company president and his hirelings.

This bureau, by which the altruistic Pullman Company's president, E. F. Carry, wants to settle "promptly and fairly all questions which arise as to wages, working conditions and such other matters as may be of welfare and importance to the employees," shall have the "final decision" in all disputes.

In other words, the Pullman Company, with its unequaled record as a money grabbing, strike breaking, labor smashing corporation, lets its employes have the say as to their conditions by allowing the president of the company to "finally settle" all disputes.

President's Servant Controls Men.

The president's executives forming this industrial relations bureau include "a supervisor and such assistants as the president shall appoint for the handling of the work of the bureau." The supervisor, directly reporting to the president, "shall appoint reprsentatives to act on each local committee." He also has the power to issue notices for the meetings for the nomination of employees to act on committees; to call meetings of the employees, to call meetings for special elections, to receive reports of grievances of the employees' local committees, to submit these grievances, to the bureau of industrial relations, to appoint special sub-committees to in-

RUSSELL COMPARES THE PROSTITUTE WITH THE SOCIAL LEADERS

NEW YORK.—A woman who sells herself successively to different men is branded as a prostitute, whereas a woman who sells herself for life to one rich man whom she does not love becomes a respected society leader. The one is exactly as bad as the other.

But, adds Bertrand Russell, British scientist, "the individual should not be condemmed in either case; but the institutions producing the individual's action." This is part of Russell's plea for New Morals for Old, the first of a series on modern sex relations published by The Nation, New York.

"The ideal to be aimed at is not lifelong monogamy enforced by legal or social penalties, but "that all sexual intercourse should spring from the free impulse of both parties, based upon mutual inclination and nothing else," he says.

DRESS ASS'N MAKES OFFER TO STRIKERS

Negotiations Opened By Weakened Bosses

Garment strikers who crowded the meeting hall at 180 W. Washington St. until there was no more standing room cheered the news that the Chicago Association of Dress Manufacturers was cracking.

The information was conveyed by Vice-President Meyer Perlstein, of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, who announced that several members of the association had opened up negotiations for the settlement of the strike in their shops.

Association Begs Union.

Further evidence of the weakening of the bosses' combine was revealed when Perlstein told of a message he had received from the association promising an agreement if the union would only call off the strike.

The Association, in effect, admitted that it was hard hit by the strike. The message pleaded that the bosses could not "afford" to surrender to the strikers but would gladly consent to an agreement in six months or a year if the union called the strike off now.

Union Stands Pat.

This transparent ruse did not succeed. The union officers sent back word thru the messenger that the Association shops could get back their workers whenever the employers signed the union's agreement. The agreement must be signed before the strike would be called off.

There are more than 30 shops in the new association which was organized last March under the direction of Dudley Taylor and the Employers' Association of Chicago. This association has been the stronghold of the strike breaking forces. It has hired most of the "sluggers," used its influence with Judge "Dennie" Sullivan in getting the injunction and whipped weak bosses into line.

No Compromise on 40 Hours.

Referring to the settling of several independent shops earlier in the week Perlstein assured the strikers that there had been no compromise on the 40-hour week.

Since the walkout began nine weeks ago 1,500 strikers have been returned to work in settled shops, said the speaker. The union's program now is to stand firm until the busy season. Meanwhile the bosses who hold out are greatly handicapped in getting out samples and otherwise preparing for the rush profit period.

N. Y. Local Handles Katz.

Strikers laughed when they heard that Katz & Dolinsky, a scab concern at 325 W. Jackson Boulevard, had seen tho uselessness of trying to operate in Chicago during the strike and was opening up a New York shop for their orders. The New York dressmakers' local, said Perlstein, has wired that it will take care of the scab firm when it attempts to begin operations. Katz & Dolinsky sunk much money on their "sluggers" during this strike.

MEXICO CITY, Apr. 28.—The Communist Party of Mexico has opened its second national congress here.

LABOR BANKER IS AMONG BACKERS OF MR. BERRY

Joins Hands With Legion Politician

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, April 28.—Headquarters for Major George L. Berry, scab-herding and strike-breaking president of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, have been opened at the Waldorf-Astoria, as a center of activity from which to forward his aspirations for the vice presidential nomination on the Democratic ticket.

Major William F. Deegan, former state commander of the American Legion and Tammany politician, is in charge of the headquarters. His co-chairman is Peter J. Brady, local labor fakir and at present head of the Federation Bank.

Thus we see carried out locally, in New York, the sort of United Front policy that exists nationally between the reactionary machine of the American Federation of Labor and the American Legion. As Berry is the connecting link between the two groups that comprise the American Fascisti, so Pete Brady fills that function in New York, trying to unite the adventurers behind the Federation Bank with the depraved rats in the American Legion.

Cannot Sway Labor.

Berry and his supporters are having rough sledding in this state endeavoring to get indorsements of central labor bodies.

Recently the Schenectady Central Labor Council replied to the Berry outfit that they did not indorse scab herders for anything. Later Berry wrote one of his acquaintances in Schenectady, asking about the political complexion of the trades assembly, and was informed that they were union men who placed the welfare of their fellows above Tammany politics. The major thus far has not replied to this.

Pete Brady is due to meet more decisive rebuffs at he hands of the trade unionists of New York City than he met with his labor bank venture before he gets thru apologizing for George L. Berry. Many militants are awaiting an opportunity to repudiate Berry in no uncertain terms, particularly as this city was the scene of his most recent strike-breaking activities.

It is generally considered that Berry has no chance of obtaining the nomination to which he aspires, as Tammany knows that his anti-labor record would defeat the ticket. The pressmen, however, would like to see him elected, not because they are in favor of him, but because they would welcome anything that would relieve them of him

BELGIUM LINES UP ENGLAND AND FRANCE FOR THE DAWES PLAN

PARIS, April 28.—Belgium attempted today to mediate between France and Great Britain in their differences that have arisen over the Dawes experts' report.

Conferences between Premier Theunis and Minister Hymans of Belgium and Premier Poincare started at the Quai d'Orsay. They were the first official pourparlers on the experts' findings.

While the Belgians were attempting to bring the French and British viewpoints together, Poincaré was attempting to renew Franco-Belgian co-operation and realign this united front.

Trying To "Deliver" To Ford, He Admits

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, April 28.—A sensation was sprung in the Senate agriculture committee today when chairman Norris read into the record a telegram in which President Coolidge was quoted as saying he hoped Henry Ford would not do or say anything "that will make it difficult for me to deliver Muscle Shoals to him as I am trying to do."

The telegram which was one of a number turned over to the committee under a subpoena to a local telegraph company, was sent to "William J. Cameron or Ernest G. Liebold, care Dearborn Independent, Detroit, Michigan," by "James Martin Miller, National Dress Club, Washington." Liebold is Ford's private secretary.

The message dated October 12, 1923, was read into the record by Norris and reads as follows:

Cal Trying to "Deliver."

"In private interview with President Coolidge this morning he said incidentally: 'I am friendly to Mr. Ford, but wish some one would convey to him that it is my hope that Mr. Ford will not do or say anything that will make it difficult for me to deliver Muscle Shoals to him, which I am trying to do.'

Norris said that he had established thru White House records that Miller, a former Washington newspaper correspondent, had called at the executive offices on Oct. 12, 1923, the date on which the telegram was sent.

Weeks declared that he did not believe the President had made any such statement.

"Certainly the President did not express any such views to me," he said.

Ford Scolded Weeks.

The Ford interview referred to in the message was a scathing attack on Weeks for his sale of the Gorgas power plant to the Alabama Power Company.

Weeks said that after the Gorgas plant had been sold, Ford had denounced him and later called on President Coolidge and then made "a social call" at his office.

Weeks said his reply to Ford's statement concerning the sale of the plant was not "gone over with Mr. Coolidge."

"I consulted the President about the sale of the plant," Weeks said, "but I do not want the responsibility placed on the President."

Then Coolidge Came Thru.

"After Ford called on the President on December 3," Norris said, "the President delivered his message to Congress and recommended disposition of Muscle Shoals by the government. Then, on December 12, Ford came out for Coolidge for President."

EXPLOSION ENTOMBS 104 MINER VICTIMS OF SCAB WHEELING STEEL PLANT

BENWOOD, W. Va., April 28.—Four bodies already found in the open shop mine of the Wheeling Steel Corporation here indicate that none of the 115 men sacrificed in yesterday morning's explosion will be brought out alive.

First reports were that the men were only bruised, but they expired soon after being brought to the surface. Two other charred bodies were found in a mine motor, 2,500 feet away from the entry.

Debris of rocks and dirt block the work of rescuers and a drizzly rain makes the waiting women and children at the mine mouth shiver with cold.

This is the third disaster in this mine within two years. It has been open shop all the time.

BENWOOD, W. Va., April 28.—In the third explosion within two years in the open shop mine of the Wheeling Steel Corporation, over a hundred men were entombed yesterday morning shortly after they had entered the mine for work. The cause of the disaster has not been determined.

Two of the buried miners were brought out by rescue parties early in the afternoon and rushed to the hospital. The men were dazed and badly cut up from rocks and debris hurled about in the explosion. They were not suffering from gas or burns; so mine bureau workers assume there has been no fire in the mine.

Disinifect Tourists.

PHOENIX, Ariz., April 28.—Arizona's disinfection of all railroad passengers from California as a preventitive against the foot and mouth disease, became effective today.

At three points, Kingman, Yuma and Wickenburg, incoming travelers must subject themselves to a disinfection solution strong enough to kill any lurking germs. Baggage is fumigated.

The state's ban on California automobile travel has not been lifted.

Probe of Labor Spy System By Solons Demanded By The Workers Party of America

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party of America sent the following telegram to Senator Smith Brookhart, Chairman of the committee investigating the Department of Justice while under the direction of Attorney General Daugherty:

Senator Smith W. Brookhart,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

The Workers Party of America in the name of hundreds of thousands of workers demand that your committee not only investigate bribery and corruption in the Department of Justice during the incumbency of Attorney General Daugherty but that it also investigate the labor spy system of the Burns Detective Agency and the activities of the Department of Justice in the Shopmen's strike in 1922. The use of governmental agencies against the workers who fight for better wages and working conditions and the labor spy system of the Burns Detective Agency maintained to destroy the workers' organization are of greater interest to the working masses of this country than the exposure of bribery and corruption.

C. E. RUTHENBERG,
Executive Secretary, Workers Party of America.

The labor spy system in vogue in the United States in which the Burns Detective Agency played a great part and the part played by the Department of Justice in fighting the shopmen's strike in 1922 are questions of the utmost importance to the whole working class movement of this country. Investigation of these activities of the paid agents of the capitalists will show how the governmental power is used under the capitalist system to weaken and destroy the workers' organizations and to make impossible their winning a higher standard of living for themselves.

The demands made by the Workers Party should have the support of the American Federation of Labor, A. F. of L. Railway Employes' Department, of all of the railroad unions and of the central labor bodies thruout the country.

It is organized labor particularly that suffers thru the activities of the agents of the capitalists. The Workers Party calls upon the organizations named above to support its demand made upon the senate committee thru resolutions and public meetings demanding that the investigation now going on includes the labor spy system of the Burns Agency and the activities of the Department of Justice in labor disputes.

Streetcar Strike Looms In Detroit Over Wage Demand

(By The Federated Press)

DETROIT, April 28.—Platform men on the municipally owned street railway lines are going into another struggle against city officials and against whatever public opinion is influenced by the daily papers, for revision of the wage scale from the present rate of from 62 cents to 70 cents an hour to a new level of from 72 cents to 80 cents.

In addition to an increase in wages the street railway workers want 25 per cent of the runs straight day runs, 25 per cent straight night runs, 30 per cent of the runs to be completed in 12 1-2 consecutive hours.

"They will have the highest wage scale of any streetcar employes in the world if they are granted this increase," the members of the department of street railway bureaucracy protest.

And the men answered that wages on a people's railway ought to be the highest. If it can not pay higher wages than a privately owned system it is because it is inefficiently managed, they add.

PULLMAN STRIKE EXPOSES THE "COMPANY UNION" AS AN ENEMY OF WORKERS' BEST INTERESTS

vestigate special conditions thruout the company's activities." He is to advise all parties interested in regard to decisions on the part of the management."

He has the power to "see that a statement of the facts in any grievance is prepared and furnished to the general committee."

He "shall arrange the necessary routine, and see that complete records are kept."

Employes Not Allowed.

This paternalistic scheme pretends to allow an equal number of representatives of the employes to act on committees with the Pullman officials, but under the union-breaking plan the bureau of industrial relations, which i snothing but a sugar-coated name for the officials of the Pullman plant, and the Pullman official appointed by the president as supervisor, have all the real power in their hands.

Despised Stool Pigeons.

It is a well known fact in the Pullman plant that those employees who are allowed to act on those committees are the stool pigeons of the Company, who go among the men, find out what they are up to and report back to the Pullman officials.

These traitors to their class are the most depised men in the Pullman shops, because altho employes, they curry favor with the Pullman president by doing his dirty work for him.

Cloak for Union-Smashing.

The plan of "employee representation" has been in effect since June 1st, 1923. Has it bettered the conditions of the employes? Has it raised their wages, shortened their hours, reduced their living costs? On the contrary, since that time, while pretending to deal fairly with employees, the Pullman Company has tightened the screws even harder on the employees. It has introduced one cut in wages after another. It has reduced the scale of pay, on the piece work system, time and again. It has made the men work faster and faster, making of them nothing but broken pieces of machinery It has made the men work in the open air, in all kinds of weather, telling them if they don't like it they can go home. It has crippled and maimed hundreds, and when it came to paying compensation, squirmed out of its obligation wherever possible. What pensions have been paid are entirely inadequate to support one man, let alone a family.

Not content with reducing wages, the Pullman Company has increased the living costs of its employees by raising rents of its company houses from 5 to 15 dollars a month on every house. This is what the employe plan of representation has done for the slaves who work for "Mr. Pullman."

Employes "Get Wise."

For a time the employees might have been encourged with the hope of rubbing shoulders with some of the bosses in the committee meetings. They were flattered by being called "committeemen," and fired with ambition to please the Pullman officials by being contented slaves, in the hope of being admitted to the society of the Pullman officials. But after a few wage cuts, after the institution of the merciless speed up system, which is the application of the sweat shop method to the steel industry, the employees got wise. They have said "Keep your damned title of 'committeemen.' We're tired of being stool pigeons. You can have those empty honors; but give us the money to raise our families decently. Make our working conditions safe and comfortable so we wont be half sick all the time."

Nothing In Common.

The workers who have just gone out on strike have realized that the Pullman Company will sacrifice the lives of their employees every time as long as it will bring them in a little money. The slogan of the Pullman Company is, "Don't allow the unions to get a foothold. Increase profits and dividends, even if you have to make human wrecks of the employees."

The striking Pullman employees know the workers and the Pullman Company have nothing in common. They have found that any so-called "union," promoted by the Pullman Company which is formed to increase Pullman activity is out to make more profit.

Honest-to-God Union.

The Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, just organized by the riveters, reamers, buckers, fitters and other steel workers, is out to raise the standard of living of the Pullman workers. They are tired of interference with their interests by the Pullman Company and are thru with all organizations run by the Pullman Company which are formed to increase crease profits by further grinding down of the workers.

CAR WORKERS! STAY AWAY FROM PULLMAN! STRIKE IS NOW ON!

All car workers over the country should take notice that there is a strike on in the car shops of the Pullman Company, at Pullman, Ill.

Agents of the Pullman Company are trying to recruit strike breakers thruout the middle west in an effort to fill the places of the car workers who have gone out against wage reductions.

Hundreds of these workers, ignorant of the strike at Pullman, upon arrival, have immediately returned to their homes. In order not to put themselves in the position of strike breakers, and to avoid needless expense.

Car Workers!

Stay away from Pullman!

PULLMAN SCAB HUNTERS CURRY WOODS FOR HELP

here that this man, Jansen, may be run out of town by their friends back home.

The following telegram was sent by the infuriated workers of Iowa to friends in Bettendorf:

"Jansen, labor agent for Pullman, should be run out of town. There is a strike on at Pullman. Tell boys not to come here."

The DAILY WORKER reoprter went into the employment office and found 2 men waiting for work, sitting on benches. He stood in front of them and advised them to walk out as there was a strike on. As the reporter left a company fink came in. He was armed to the teeth.

The men walked out and thanked the reoprter for the information. A member of the Boilermakers' Union will address the strike meeting tomorrow and will bring officials of his union with him. He will try to get financial aid for the strikers.

PULLMAN, April 28.—John Holmgern, speaking here today to a large gathering of striking workers of the Pullman shops told his audience that Florence Pullman, also Mrs. Frank O. Lowden keeps what is known as an "ideal farm where cows, pigs, horses and other animals are treated ideally," in a manner that would cause the slaves of the Pullman car shops to grasp, with astonishment. Lowden got the title of the "gentleman farmer" from this farm and expects to rope in the votes of the bankrupt farmers of the Northwest thru his nodding acquaintance with the animals who are so ideally cared for. The speaker said, that when a Lowden pig is indisposed the best specialist immediately rushed to the animals bedside, while the workers in the shops—who pile up the Lowden millions—and their wives and children could starve without interfering with the serenity of the Lowden-Pullman conscience.

Strikers In Cheerful Mood.

The strikers are cheerful over yesterday's meeting. There will be monster gathering later in the week and the strikers have arranger to order two thousand copies of the DAILY WORKER which will contain an advertisement of the meeting.

Two members of the Young Workers League, Sam Green and John Harvey, were on the job early yesterday morning selling the DAILY WORKER, and turning prospective scabs away from the shops. They were intimidated by the police and threatened with violence unless they desisted.

Some Police Sypathetic.

A detective approached the young workers and informed them that the "Captain" had issued orders to arrest anybody selling papers. Some of the police are friendly with the strikers and it is amusing to see the efforts of the bosses to induce those sympathetic officers to drive the pickets away from the gates.

John Holmgren, General Vice President of the Brotherhood of Railroad Carmen and leader of the strike, speaking before the big strike meeting yesterday anounced that the dicks were prevented from entering the homes of the strikers thru the efforts of Alderman Govier and that Captain Pat Wheeler of the 9th ward was insstructed not to allow his men to enter homes of strikers without warrants.

Hits Frank Lowden.

"Frank O. Lowden, candidate for the vice presidency of the United States on the Republican ticket, thru his wife Florence Pullman owns most of the stock in the Pullman Company," said Holmgren. "Besides that," he continued, "he owns hundreds of company houses. The money that is made by Lowden thru Florence by this wage cut and in the recent raise in rent is enough to buy her husband the vice presidency and leave something over to purchase a couple of cabinets as Doheny and Sinclair did."

"They say the high cost of living is reduced, hence a reduction in the cost of living. This is a lie, as the latest Department of Labor report shows an increase in living costs. Rents have gone up from 10 to 100 per cent. The company takes away from the workers, by means of the wage reductions, enough money to buy the presidency.

Holmgren showed in his speech that the workers have nothing to gain by supporting the democrats and republicans who are jointly the agents of the Pullman company and other big trusts. If the workers could see this and organize politically in a class Farmer-Labor Party, they would not be beaten on the heads during strikes and thrown into jail by the democratic and republican tools of Big Business.

The Brotherhood of Railway Carmen is the union to which William Z Foster, the great strike leader, belongs. Foster is the man who brought almost half a million steel workers together in the great organizing campaign of 1919. His name is greeted with expressions of confidence by the steel workers thruout the country, while he is held up as a bogey man to the workers by the steel trust and all the big corporations.

HIRAM JOHNSON NOT WANTED BY LAFOLLETTE MEN

Newberry And Mooney Issues Kill Him

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, April 28.—In Hiram Johnson's latest threat to sever all connection with the Republican party, some observers see a bid for the third party nomination. But to this suggestion the leaders of the independent movement are returning an emphatic negative.

Johnson's refusal to vote to unseat Newberry for buying his way into the Senate from Michigan has killed his "progressive" following. And the left wing labor movement, which controls the balance of power in the insurgency against the old parties hates Johnson for his refusal to pardon Tom Mooney and Billings and other California workers imprisoned for life on Chamber of Commerce frameups.

The political future of the California senator, therefore, bids fair to be comparable to the fate of that man who had no country. He has won the enmity of the regular Republicans, and has not gained the trust of the liberals. He seems to be fated to pass finally from the ranks of those who figure materially in national politics.

Wanted LaFollette's Place.

LaFollette's name will be on the ballot in from seven to a dozen states unless he keeps it off by main force. The political power he represents today is uncomputed, because uncertain, but it is very great. But not even LaFollette could transfer it to Johnson, even if he wished to, which he does not.

Johnson might stand in better repute with the progressives had he not, during the early days of the Harding regime, put himself in the position of trying to appear "regular" by failure to vote on Newberry and his support of the tariff. This phase of his political development was succeeded by a gradual breaking away from the administration, that break culminating in the announcement of his candidacy.

Lefts' Victory In French Vote Looks Likely

PARIS, France, April 28.—The left wing politicals are massing their forces for the coming election of May 11 and stand a good chance to win, according to reports. The leaders are men like Edward Herroit and Paul Painleve and are far from the "radicals" they are pictured by their conservative opponents.

President Millerand is expected to resign if the lefts make their victory. Judging from the recent by-elections, the lefts will gain at least 150 seats, or the same majority that the national party has now.

BEWARE OF THE CRIMES OF THE PULLMAN COMPANY

THE strike against the Pullman Co. is spreading. The pluck and courage of the strikers is growing.

In this hour of spirited struggle the strikers must beware of the crimes that the Pullman Co. is ready to perpetrate itself, but shoulder onto the strikers, if it can, in an effort to create prejudice against the worker.

The past uprisings against the Pullman Co. have shown that it requires a rare courage to go out against this huge and wealthy corporation that has powerful connections in the strongest citadels of finance and industry.

Carroll D. Wright, for a time United States Commissioner of Labor, in referring to the Pullman strike starting May 11, 1894, and the greater railroad strike following, said it was "probably the most expensive and far-reaching labor controversy which can properly be classed among the historic controversies of this generation."

In order to create public prejudice against the strikers, in 1894, the railroad corporations deliberately instigated the burning or destruction of their own cars (they were cheap, worn-out freight cars), and everywhere had thugs and gunmen as its emissaries to preach and provoke violence.

In the words used by Gustavus Myers, in his "History of Great American Fortunes," the object was three-fold, as usual: to throw the onus upon the strikers of being a lawless body; to give the newspapers an opportunity of inveighing with terrific effect against the strikers; and to call upon the government for armed troops to shoot down, overawe, or in other ways thwart the strikers.

The tactics of the Pullman profiteers are no different today then they were thirty years ago.

Rifle squads in automobiles today parade the strike zone. City police invade the homes of strikers and threaten their women and children. The strikers have been dispossessed of their first meeting hall, thus being denied the right of free speech and free assemblage.

The tactics of the Pullman crowd up to the present time have shown that they are capable today of the crimes they committed in past years, when their workers were out fighting for their rights.

The Pullman crowd is capable of again burning freight cars and blaming it on the strikers. It is capable of instigating its gunmen to make insane speeches and blaming them on the strike organizers and the rank and file spokesmen of the workers.

Not only the strikers, but the workers generally must beware of the crimes that the panic stricken Pullman Company will commit in the hour that it believes its profits are being seriously threatened.

The issue must be kept clear, as the ranks of the strikers must be kept unbroken. It is a battle of low wages against high profits.

It is a battle that the workers must win.

STEEL WORKERS' SEDITION TRIAL STARTS APRIL 30

Six Farrell, Pa., Defendants Face Jury

MERCER, Pa., April 28.—The Mercer county grand jury returned true bills against each of the six Farrell defendants charged with having violated the sedition law. The trials will start Wednesday and will continue for about two weeks.

The defense has retained three of the best attorneys in Mercer county, and is prepared to wage a battle against the steel barons.

Mercer, where the trials are to be held, is a small country village nestling on the outskirts of the steel belt, and the inhabitants, mostly rural folks, for weeks have talked nothing but the cases of the six steel workers and their coming trials.

The farmers, surrounding Mercer are all preparing to leave their spring plowing and journey to the county seat to hear the trials. They will find that they have much in common with the six defendant steel workers, who have been pulled away from the glowing furnaces where steel rules and rushed into the quietness of this little rural town, now all astir over their arrival.

Sedition will be defined by the prosecutor, and the easy going rural folks, with first and second mortgages on their farms, will realize how near they are to prison when they protest against the system which spends millions of dollars educating them on how to raise "bumper crops" and then robs them of the crops after they have raised them.

Recalls Chattel Slavery Days.

In this locality, when the abolitionists of Civil War days opened their doors to the runaway black slave and arranged for his journey farther north, a new slave from the masters' steel mills arrives to be placed on the block, and all the arguments used against the black slave will be used against his modern brother, the wage slave.

The greatest trials in the history of the Pennsylvania labor movement, of far reaching importance, will be held in this little town of Mercer, and the six sturdy steel workers facing the wrath of the steel barons for daring to voice a protest against wage slavery face the future realizing that the master's lash always strikes first those in the front ranks.

One can but admire the cool courage of the defendants. All the injustice heaped upon them in the centuries past has schooled them in how to be cool when under fire, and with a grin rippling over their Slav features and a shrug of their broad shoulders they await their turn before a jury of their alleged peers.

Ready to Go to Prison.

One of the defendant workers expressed their views, when interviewed by the DAILY WORKER correspondent. He exclaimed that when one speaks for the working class he must be prepared to go to prison.

The working class have every reason to feel proud of their brothers now facing their masters' court at Mercer. Upon such backs and shoulders does the burden fall, and the thousands of rebellious steel slaves will await the outcome of this battle, knowing that their own welfare depends upon same.

INDIANA'S GOVERNOR PUTS O. K. ON FORGERIES AND HIGH FINANCE

INDIANAPOLIS, April 28.—Continuing his frank admission of forgery, and misrepresentation of his financial condition, Governor Warren T. McGray on cross examination in Federal Court today, stoutly maintained he was innocent of any attempt to defraud and said "he always believed he was right in what he did."

The Governor defended his career of high financing thruout a ceaseless questioning by District Attorney Elliott in the trial of McCray on charges of fraudulent use of the mails.

Altho McCray plainly showed the effects of the tremendous strain he left the stand with the same confidence that has characterized him thruout.

The Governor defended himself solely on the declaration that he had intended to do no wrong. On direct examination by his attorneys, McCray admitted signing the names of other persons to notes and discounting them as genuine paper with banks.

McCray said he had not intended for anyone to lose a nickel on the noter he put out. While his vast farming interests in Indiana and half a dozen other midwestern states were prospering, he said he had never doubted hir ability to repay $1,000,000 worth of notes which, according to the evidence were forced or worthless.

NO ERROR WRIT ALLOWED SLAVIC WORKER IN COURT

Steel Lords Sentence Buksa For W. P. Work

By J. A. HAMILTON.

YORKVILLE, Ohio, April 28.—John Buksa, member of the Yorkville South Slavic Branch of the Workers Party, has been refused in the Circuit Court, at Wheeling, W. Va., a plea for writ of error in respect to the sentence of three months in jail and fine he received May 17, 1923, on a charge of violating the "Unlawful Publications Act." He was distributing the Program of the Workers Party on a trolley car in Wheeling, in March, 1923, when arrested. A further appeal is being made to the State Supreme Court, one of the points at issue being the constitutionality of the Act.

One of the flock of "criminal syndicalism" laws produced by the war hysteria, was this West Virginia Act, passed in 1919. It reads: "It shall be unlawful for any person to speak, print, publish, or communicate, by language, sign, picture, or otherwise, any teachings, doctrines, or counsels, in sympathy or favor of ideals, institutions, or forms of government hostile, inimical, or antagonistic to those now or hereafter existing under the constitution and laws of this state or the United States, or in sympathy or favor of the propriety, duty, or necessity, of crime, violence, or other unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing economic or political reform, or in sympathy or favor of the overthrow of organized society, the unlawful destruction of property, or the violation of law".

"Steel Hand" Against Buksa.

Buksa is afflicted with progressive paralysis and for six years has been unable to work at his trade of mining. He is a Trustee of the Miners' Temple at Bellaire, elected by vote of the miners in Eastern Ohio.

His present trouble really dates back to the strike in the Yorkville Tin Mill, owned by the Wheeling Steel Corporation, early in 1922, during which company guards shot to death one of the strikers. The widow succeeded in forcing the Company to pay $33,333.33 damages. One of the principal witnesses was Mike Buksa, one of John's sons. The informant who secured the arrest of John, happened to be superintendent of one of the mills of the Wheeling Steel. The jury was mostly mill workers, and in spite of having to assimilate the unlawful publications' law, and the Workers Party program in order to be able to render an intelligent verdict, it stayed out but a bare five minutes.

Satan Of Salmon "Hell Fleet" In Shipping Scandal

(By The Federated Press)

SAN FRANCISCO, April 28.—Mortimer and Herbert Fleishaker are busy denying charges made in the congressional investigation of the shipping board vessels to Brazil, Cuba and other foreign countaries. It is claimed that the Western Marine & Salvage Co., with which the Fleishackers are associated, sold the hulls first to these countries, and then the machinery, which was installed by the nations making the purchase; and that the vessels, which had cost the shipping board $300,000,000, were sold for $750,000. Th Fleishacker brothers are among most powerful of San Francisco bankers; Mortimer Fleishacker is "grand duke" of the board of regents of the University of California, and also owns the Alaska salmon packing ships, known as "the hell fleet of the Pacific".

EXPLOSION BURIES 115 WORKERS IN WEST VIRGINIA

The scab steel corporation, which consumes the total product of the mine and attempts to take the miners, too, announced that 104 men had received their "checks" yesterday morning. The explosion occurred within half an hour and cut off all communication and exit. The telephone connection between Benwood and Moundsville, W. Va., was broken by the terrific mine explosion.

Crowds of women and children gathered anxiously at the Brown's run opening of the mine, awaiting the return of rescuers. Clouds of black smoke poured from the mouth of the mine, and the fire apparatus was called out. No fire has been found yet. Rescuers found air circulating in the mine passages and expressed hope that all the men might be taken out alive.

The Wheeling Steel Corporation began its career as an exclusive holding company for eight subsidiary coal, iron, coke, bridge construction and transportation companies in May, 1923. It was first incorporated in 1920. The companies it swallowed up and the Wheeling Steel itself have been viciously anti-union and have held their workers in the most complete bondage.

Improvements in the mine are never made until a disaster such as the present one forces some sort of action. Even then the minimum compliance with the law is offered by the company. Human life is cheap for it, so it continues to sacrifice workers year by year.

Await Pittsburgh Rescue Cars.

Rescue workers, volunteers from among the miners, and members of the Bureau of Mines penetrated into the mine to a depth of 2,000 feet before the first two men were found. They found much debris piled in mine corridors as a result of the explosion. Mine rescue cars had to be brought all the way from Pittsburgh before rescuers could enter the mine at all. This delayed the work considerably and may result disastrously for the imprisoned men.

The barony of this particular industrial concern includes 1,000 acres of "real estate," plus 30,000 acres of coal lands and proven iron ore properties. Over this territory the Wheeling Steel Corporation rules in feudal manner: owning all the towns, houses, buildings, everything on the land, and keeping the miners in perpetual debt to the company for every move they make, every scrap they eat. Serfs of the middle ages were no worse off than the non-union miners of today in these West Virginia fields.

Milwaukee Schools Stepping Towards Platoon System

MILWAUKEE, April 28.—What is believed to be stepping stone to adoption in the public schools of the platoon system, a plan generally opposed by labor organization, is the "departmentalization" of the schools here. Three more schools are to be departmentalized, which means that pupils will rotate about the building under several teachers.

At a committee of the board, Dr. J. W. Murdock voiced opposition to the use of textbook on American citizenship by Scott.

"I have read it carefully," Murdock declared, "and I could find nothing constructive in it. All it does is to continually pat the United States on the back and declare that everything we do is right. And it contains a picture of Andrew Carnegie, which is an insult to every foreigner who ever came over here and was robbed in his steel mills."

DETROIT CARPENTERS UNANIMOUS FOR ST. PAUL MEET, JUNE 17TH

(Special to the Daily Worker)

DETROIT, Mich., April 28.—Members of Carpenters' Local No. 2140, who have been fighting for independent political action on the part of labor for two years, has endorsed the call for the June 17th convention in St. Paul, and for a conference in Detroit to be held some time in May to effect a local Farmer-Labor Party organization. There was no adverse discussion, and the vote was unanimous.

The action of Local 2140 marks the beginning of an intensive campaign to line up the local unions for the June 17th convention. There has long rank and file in the Detroit labor movement. This sentiment has been thwarted up to the present by labor officialdom in Detroit, who have been thwarted up to the present by labor officialdom in Detroit, who have been more interested in playing politics and political trading than in the basic need of labor for independent political expression. It is hoped that this action will widen the breach between these two diverging tendencies, and make clear to the rank and file the class nature of political parties.

The local conference will urge all locals financially able to send delegates to St. Paul, and will arrange representation thru the conference for those locals able to bear only part of the expense of a delegate.

The Workers Party in Action

Expelled From School For Anti-Military Action

DOWELL, Ill., April 28.—Germinal Allard, one of the most active members of the Young Workers League here, was expelled from school on account of passing out the anti-military leaflets issued by the National office of the Y. W. L. This was made the issue, but the moron who is principal of the school, had determined previously to take drastic action with any student indentified with this Young Communist Movement.

The members of the local branch, are splendidly supporting the position of Comrade Allard, and a fight is going to be initiated to oppose the high handed tactics of this zealot principal.

The miners of Dowell are going to hear of this. A monster mass meeting will be arranged with Comrade Mass, district organizer for the Y. W. L. in this section, as the speaker.

The district organizer is determined to throw the whole strength of the district organization behind Comrade Allard, and also enlist the aid of the Workers Party, in preventing this lackey of the mine-owners from setting the precedent that a student is liable to expulsion for membership in the Y. W. L.

Pete Allard, secretary of the branch and a brother of Germinal, said, "We are going to fight them to the limit and if they think that they can get by with such stuff, they are badly mistaken. The fight is on, the Y. W. L. of this district has been challenged, so watch us!"

Germinal Allard was asked to sign papers pledging allegiance to the government, but he refused to do so. He was also promised immunity if he would quit the Y. W. L. This was met with emphatic NO.

May First Is Gay Holiday for All Phila. Workers

PHILADELPHIA, April 28.—The workers of Philadelphia, at the United Front May Day Conference, have decided to demonstrate their solidarity by a huge May Day celebration on Thursday, May 1.

The delegates from the labor unions, fraternal and political organizations assured the conference that their membership recognizes May 1 as an international labor holiday and will lay down their tools on that day to celebrate the victories and achievements of labor and raise the issue now confronting the workers of this and other countries.

A true spirit of solidarity was shown by the conference when a unanimous decision was made to celebrate the afternoon of May 1 at the International Workers' Aid bazaar, held for the benefit of the starving workers of Germany, that will be held on that day in the Kensington Labor Lyceum, at Second and Cambria streets.

The outstanding phase of the May Day celebration, however, will be a huge mass meeting and concert at Lulu Temple, Broad and Spring Spring Garden streets, on the evening of May 1, at 8 p. m.

H. M. Wicks of the Typographical Union of New York will be the main speaker in English. Prominent speakers in other languages will speak between the numbers of the splendid musical program to be given by the Freiheit Singing Society, the International Orchestra and the Lithuanian Chorus. M. L. Olkin of Philadelphia will be the chairman of the meeting.

The vigorous support given to this celebration by the labor unions, the Workers Party, the Y. W. L. and Workmen Circles assures it to be the greatest success in the history of the Philadelphia labor movement.

Youths Striking Against Norway Military Service

STOCKHOLM, April 28.—The military strike movement in Norway is gaining. In April 3rd the Kristiania Federation of Labor held a large meeting of members which, against one vote, a social-democrat, resolved to endorse the military strike movement and requested all organized workers to aid by all means the organizations in their fight to boycott the capitalist army. The meeting ended with the singing of the International. Several locals of the Workers Party are endorsing the military strike, also locals of organized labor. One adopted the slogan: Not one working class youth in the camps this summer to serve an "exploiter state."

Sweden to Redeem Gold Notes.

The Swedish "Riksdag" recently decided that the Bank of Sweden from April 1st shall redeem its notes in gold. It also proposed to the government, as soon as possible, to abolish the prohibition against export of gold and that it prohibit others than the State Bank from importing gold to the country.

The Swedish Federation of Labor gained over 20,000 members last year and had on December 31, 1923, 313,022 members.

May Day Bazaar To Get Fund For German Relief

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 28.—The local Conference for the Relief of the Starving German Workers and their families is making great plans for a huge three-day Bazaar on May 1st, 2nd and 3rd at the Kensington Labor Lyceum, 2nd and Cambria sts. The conference is affiliated with the International Workers' Aid.

This year the workers of Philadelphia will be called upon to manifest their International Solidarity with the workers of Germany. The numerous organizations affiliated in the conference are doing splendid work in the line of collection of material and merchandise for the Bazaar and the results are very encouraging. A wide range of merchandise has already been secured—from aluminum pots to velous parlor suites, from a pair of socks to a fur coat.

This collection does not include the department for the Russian toys. A large assortment of these splendid handcarved toys have been secured. In themselves these toys represent a spirit of solidarity. Made in Russia during the great Russian famine they are now being used to alleviate the suffering of the women and children of the German working class that gave such splendid support to the famine relief movement for Russia.

The Bazaar will open on Thursday, May 1st, at 12 noon. At 3 p. m. the meeting will be addressed by H. M. Wicks of New York. Friday the Bazaar will open at 7 p. m. and Saturday at 1 p. m. Appropriate musical programs have been arranged for all three days.

It is of interest to note that the hall as well as the orchestras and choruses are being given free of all cost.

The Bazaar will close on Saturday night with a real International dance.

North Side Young Workers To Hear Cannon and Browder

On Wednesday, April 30, the North Side Branch of the Young Workers League will dispense with their regular weekly meeting to attend in a body the monthly meeting of the T. U. E. L., at which James P. Cannon and Earl Browder are to speak on "May Day and the American Labor Movement."

The policy established to attend all monthly T. U. E. L. meetings is just another of the many original moves made by this branch in promoting the work of the Y. W. L.

Two educational and one business meeting complete the month's meetings of this branch. In stressing educational activities the branch does not overlook socials affairs, which will be held once every three months, insuring even greater possibilities of success.

The growth of the membership, of which this branch can be justly proud, is not the only consideration of the North Side Branch. A thoro grounding in party principles and participation in party activities are stressed to keep in accord with the Y. W. L. watchwords—Clarity and Action.

FINNISH FISHERS LOSE LIVELIHOOD BY OREGON LAW

Only Ku Kluxers Get Salmon Fishing Rights

By IDA SYVANEN.

ASTORIA, Oregon, April 28.—The Columbia River is one of the largest salmon-fisheries in the world, the annual catch amounting to thousands of tons. The fishing season lasts from May 1, to August 28, and when the season is "good" it enables the fisherman to pay off the debts that have accrued during the winter months and to lay by some for the next winter. Owing the introduction of distructive fishing methods, the good seasons became so scarce that for many years the fisherman was unable to pay his winter's bills and often, at the close of a season he had not enough to cover his expenses of the summer.

So great was the destruction of young salmon by these new methods that, altho millions of young fish were released from the state hatcheries each year, the whole fishing industry was menaced. This was prevented by legislation. The future looked brighter to the fisherman.

The life of the fisherman is very hazardous — each year "Neptune" claims many victims—but they have enjoyed more independence than workers in most other industries. They mostly own their "means of production" that is, the boat and net. But each year their independance has been more encroached upon.

Some years ago a law was passed forbidding all except American citizens to be boat owners or "captains" as they are called. Citizenship however was not necessary to the assistant or "boat puller."

Fishing License for Americans Only.

This year the law has restricted American citizens only. That means that no aliens are allowed to fish. The canneries have large numbers of fishermen and provide their fishing equipment, and the new law prohibits them from hireing aliens. The constitutionality of the law was tested in the lower courts, but the case was appealed to the State Supreme Court. The decision will not be returned until the latter part of this month.

What does the passing of this law mean to the fishermen? Fully 90 per cent of the fishermen are foreigners and half of these are not naturalized. They came here years ago, but have been too busy supporting large families to acquire the knowledge of the American language and instructions required by the naturalization laws. They have built their homes here and their children hold responsible positions, some being school teachers, lawyers, and city and county officials. They have been the main support of the community, for fishing is the chief industry of lower Columbia. This law deprives these men of their only livelihood.

Closed Camps Add Hardships.

Then there are the less prosperous ones, the boat pullers who only get one-third of the season's earnings (while the "captain" gets two-thirds and dividends), and those who rent their fishing outfit from the canneries. They own nothing and their wants are provided for on credit—to be paid at the close of the next season. They had recourse to the logging camps and saw-mills, but the closing of the camps and the cut in wages, leaves them little hope in that direction. It is these men that the new law mostly affects.

What do laws like the above, coming simultaneously with the closing of industries and wage reductions and the fight for the open shop system, mean to the working class? They increase the army of the unemployed, making it possible for the employers to reduce the wages still further, and aiding them in their fight against organized labor.

By excuding the aliens, most of whom are members of the fishermen's union, from fishing, the law aids the hiring of non-union men.

Besides the fishing in the Columbia River, large fishing fleets, owned by corporations are sent out from Astoria, Portland, Seattle and San Francisco to fish in the Alaskan waters. Taking advantage of the unsettled conditions prevailing, the corporations have attempted to hire non-union men. And altho the fishing season is at hand, no agreement on wages has been reached between the union.

Storm Helps Alaska Mine Owners.

BROAD PASS, Alaska, April 28.—The heavy snow here will prove a great boon to the mining industry. It will enable the hauling of supplies overland by sled train from points on the railroad to mining camps in various sections of the Territory. Because of the light snow fall during the past winter transportation overland has been almost impossible and it has been necessary to store mining supplies in warehouses along the Government Railroad.

RUHR WORKERS UNITED AGAINST BOSSES BY WAGE REDUCTIONS AND LOCKOUTS; BIG FIGHT AHEAD

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER
(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

ESSEN, Germany, April 28.—The Ruhr valley is seething with ill feeling on the part of the workers. After the sufferings encountered during the period of passive resistance, when the French singled out the workers' organizations as the special victims of their brutal policy, the workers are now being enslaved more than ever by their own countrymen, the Rhenish-Westphalian captains of industry. Herewith a brief recapitulation of the events to date:

In September, 1923, passive resistance came to an end. The workers counted upon an early resumption of industrial activity. Instead, the bosses, who had thus far out-shouted everybody as "100 per cent patriots," were the first to run to the "enemy" and to ask the French military authorities for the abrogation of the eight-hour day.

8-Hour Day Lockouts.

When the French commander declined to take the odium of this move off the backs of the German industrialists, the bosses went to the workers and of their own accord demanded the abrogation of the eight-hour day. This was declined. Mass lockouts ensued. Meanwhile the industrial barons concluded the so-called "Micum" agreement by which German industry was to make deliveries on the reparations.

The executive of the Miners' federation grew panicky and signed an agreement for lengthening the workday by one hour for underground workers and by two hours for those working above. The only thing that somewhat consoled the workers was the promise that, as soon as production had been increased by the lengthening of hours, wages would also increase.

Miners Cut Twice This Year.

Again the workers were fooled. In January the wages were reduced by nine per cent. In March a further reduction took place, varying between 48 and 97 pfennings (12 to 24 cents) an hour, depending upon the category of the worker. This double reduction was simply decreed without the workers having any recourse, and was effected despite the fact that even the capitalist press observed that the productivity of the workers was quite equal again to that of pre-war days. But while in pre-war days 55 per cent of the amount realized from the sale of coal went into wages, only 40 per cent is now spent in that manner.

Besides the miners, the metal workers are the largest aggregation of workers in the Rhenish-Westphalian district. The bosses rejoice in their own organs over the fact that orders are again coming in satisfactorily. Yet the metal workers are given starvation wages, the average being 90 marks ($21.50) a month, and the highest wage being 120 marks (about $28.05).

To cap the climax, the bosses have served notice upon the unions that the collective wage agreement under which work has been conducted in the Ruhr valley, is to be abrogated and that new contracts are to take the place of the old. The new agreements call for the permanent abrogation of the eight-hour day, overtime and Sunday work whenever the industrialists think this necessary.

All this has brought the irritation of the workers to the seething point. They are now beginning to take the offensive.

United Front Against Bosses.

There are many different organizations of the miners and of the metal workers in the Ruhr valley—Syndicalists, Communists, Socialists, Catholics, members of "yellow" unions. But the continued tyranny of the bosses has united them, so that they present an absolutely united front on the two questions of working hours and wages. The next few weeks may see a gigantic conflict waged in the Ruhr valley.

Girl Defenders Of Capitalism Convene Here

Mayor Dever will welcome the delegates upon their arrival tomorrow and Mrs. Herbert Hoover, president of the Girl Scouts, will speak on the year's growth of the organization.

There are now 160,000 girls enrolled. Four houndred delegates will represent them here. Captains will talk at tomorrow's meeting on health, education, and citizenship in relation to scouting and the evening will be appropriately celebrated with a Fashion Show.

Mrs. Juliette Low, founded the Girl Guides in Savannah, Ga., in 1912, and the name was later changed to Girl Scouts. Mrs. Low emphasizes the outdoor life of Girl Scouts, which is their best feature.

LONDON PLANS MONSTER MAY DAY CELEBRATION; BIG HYDE PARK MARCH

LONDON, April 28.—This year's May Day celebration promises to be the greatest in the history of such affairs in England. Philip Brice who is chairman of the Labor May Day Committee announces that sixteen contingents have already signified their intention of marching to Hyde Park from all parts of London.

The London Co-operative Society has entered wholeheartedly into the movement and decided to close down on that day, so that the workers can take part in the exercises.

There will be twelve platforms in the park, representing the international movement, children's organizations, Labor and Trades Councils and Trades Union bodies.

OLD DAUGHERTY INJUNCTION USED AGAINST RAILMAN

Seize Machinist Under 1922 Federal Writ

By MAUD McCREERY,
Federated Press Staff Correspondent.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., April 28.—Charles Murphy, member of the Machinists' Union No. 11 here, is learning that it is harder to sidetrack an idea than the individual responsible for it. Murphy has been arrested and is facing trial for an alleged violation of ex-Attorney General Daugherty's federal injunction against the striking railroad shopmen almost two years ago.

Murphy came out on strike with his fellow-shopmen in the Union Pacific shops in Las Vegas July 1, 1922, and shortly after came to Los Angeles, where he has been working at his trade ever since. On March 15 he was arrested by federal authorities and thrown into jail, charged with violation of the Daugherty injunction. The violation, it is alleged, took place nearly two years ago. The local machinists' union furnished the $2,000 bail required and Murphy was released. Murphy, who was married after he came to Los Angeles, has voluntarily left his bride and home to return to Las Vegas to surrender himself for trial.

The injunction which Murphy is alleged to have violated was issued during the railroad shopmen's strike by a federal court in Chicago on the petition of the then Attorney General Daugherty, who was recently dismissed by President Coolidge after a mass of sensational evidence of corruption had been presented to the congressional committee investigating Daugherty's administration of the Department of Justice.

World Co-operative Movement Meets In Belgium Next Month

Thirty million people are going to be represented at the huge world exhibition of the co-operative movement which will run from June to September in Ghent, the birthplace of Belgian cooperation.

Over 20 national groups will be represented at this international co-operative exposition. Each nation is sending samples and exhibits of co-operative wares which are distinctive and characteristics of its own country. French co-operators will show their superiority in fine linen and leather craftsmanship. Spain will have co-operative fruit exhibits. Switzerland has ordered her co-operative architects to build a model co-operative theater. British co-operatives are reproducing the shop of the Equitable Pioneers, who opened the first co-operative store in the world on Toad lane, Rochdale, in 1844. Beautiful handwork and embroideries will be sent to Ghent by the Bulgarian co-operatives.

Russia and the little Baltic countries rich in co-operative achievements, Hungary, India, Japan, and Portugal, each will have its co-operative exhibit. The American Co-operators will be represented by the All American Co-operative commission and the Co-operative League of America.

LIVING COST UP SINCE LAST YEAR WITH JOBS FEWER

Food Going Down A Bit But Rents Boom

By LELAND OLDS,
Federated Press Industrial Editor.

The cost of the average wage earner's family budget decreased 1.6 per cent between December, 1923, and March, 1924, according to the quarterly cost of living survey of the United States Department of Labor. The level is still about 1 per cent higher than a year ago, but 18 per cent below the high average of 1920.

The department figures show the present cost of living as 70.4 per cent above the prewar base. In December the figure was 73.2 per cent. Decreases as compared with December are shown in all items except rent, which continues its slow increase. Compared with prewar costs the food item shows the smallest increase, which means that the farmer is getting a smaller share of the consumer's dollar than he received in 1913, while manufacturers are getting a larger share.

Cost of Living Figures.

The following table shows for March, 1923, and 1924 the percentages of increase over 1913 in the case of the major items of a budget:

Item—	1923	1924
Food	42.0	43.7
Clothing	74.4	75.9
Housing	62.4	67.0
Fuel and light	86.2	82.3
House and furnishing goods	117.4	121.3
Miscellaneous	100.5	101.1
All items	68.8	70.4

Average rents have risen nearly 3 per cent in the course of the year. And as pointed out in previous articles, the department figure is not limited to the lower rents for working class flats, which have risen much more rapidly than the higher rents paid for better class apartments. Figures originating from the government show that workers' rents are up at least 100 per cent, as compared with the prewar period. Substituting this figure in the budget would establish 75 per cent as the actual increase in a wage earner's living costs as compared with 1913.

Detroit an Expensive Place.

Detroit reports the cost of living up 83 per cent, as compared with December, 1914, while San Francisco and Portland, Ore., show increases of only 58 per cent and 55.3 per cent, respectively. Rents in Detroit are up 107.3 per cent, as compared with 1914, while those in San Francisco are up 37 per cent and in Portland 43.4 per cent.

The beginning of a downward movement in the cost of living accompanied as it is by a drop in wholesale prices, means that pressure for wage reductions is likely to increase in the near future.

Injunction Judge Does His Stuff As Republicans Talk

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., April 28.—Not even 24 hours after the Illinois convention of the Republican party had condemned the use of injunctions in labor disputes, Circuit Judge E. S. Smith enjoined union men from picketing nonunion picture shows, in Springfield, the convention city.

W. W. Watts and Harry T. Loper, owners of a string of movie shows, applied for the injunction. They shrewdly picked a time when the court had adjourned. Judge Smith, known for his hostility toward labor, was called back to issue the restraining order. He set the date for a hearing two weeks later. Meanwhile pickets are ordered withdrawn. The injunction is a banket order covering not only the Motion Picture Operators' union, who are on strike, but the entire membership of the Springfield Federation of Labor. The order prevents anything whatsoever from being done to notify the public that the picture houses are being run with strike-breakers.

Ryan Heads New Chicago Building Trades Council

The "peace" election of officers for the reorganized Chicago building trades council resulted in the return by large majorities of officials, Pres. Edward Ryan and Secy. Conroy, representing the original Landis award group. They will serve until the first of next year, according to Conroy, who would not comment further. The special election was held under the auspices of the building trades department, American Federation of Labor, in an effort to combine the two rival councils that have been functioning since the Landis award split the building trades unions. The unions that objected to the open shop features of the award formed a separate council.

CIRCUS ANIMALS PROTEST BEING PRESENT AT MORGAN MAN'S WILD FEASTING ON N. Y. HOTEL ROOF

(Special to the Daily Worker.)

NEW YORK CITY, April 28.—A bacchanalian feast, rivalling anything of the kind ever attempted in the war-profiteering, pre-prohibition days, was staged here recently not far from Broadway on the roof of one of New York's largest hotels.

It cost Matthew K. Brush, of the American International Corporation, a Morgan organization established to finance foreign trade efforts, just $25,000 to produce this scene of revelry, arranged after the manner of a circus "mess."

But instead of hungry, hard-working circus performers there sat down to the dinner such internationally notorious parasites and their camp followers as James A. Stillman, known for his divorce court antics; Jesse Livremore, R. J. Reynolds, tobacco king; the Ringling brothers, Charles and John; Jeremiah Dahl, whose name recently was connected with that of Louise Lawson, murdered Texas girl, an auction of whose effects had closed a few hours before at a nearby shop; Pierre Rockefeller, Police Commissioner Enright, no end of celebrites.

A huge tent had been pitched on the hotel roof. Beneath its flapping canvass, stretched long tables in banquet array.

At one end, on a raised dias, played a Czecho-Slovakian orchestra of 38 pieces, never before heard in this country.

At the other end, caged lions and beasts brought from the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus at the "Garden" roared disapproval of their unaccustomed surroundings. Two pigmy elephants had been brought with some difficulty to the roof to lend their atmosphere to the occasion.

The choice of freaks from the real circus side show were housed in a separate tent and sign with the banquet tent reading:

"To the queer people."

Dancing girls performed. The world famous trapeze artist from the "Greatest Show on Earth" whirled 98 times on a specially constructed apparatus at about $40 a whirl.

Coolidge Prosperity Cream.

ST. LOUIS, April 28.—Use of cocoanut oil in milk to give it the appearance of cream is reported practiced at several points in southern Illinois to the federal food and drug department, according to E. R. Smith, chief, St. Louis office. A test made of one sample of "cream" showed that 85 per cent of the solids was cocoanut oil.

British Salvation Army Resorts To Novel Cash Collecting Stunt

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, April 28.— What the Daily Herald describes as a remarkable circular was sent out here from the International Headquarters of the Salvation Army. It was an appeal for funds and every device known to the chronic panhandler was used to induce those appealed to, to furnish money in generous sums. The heavy contributions are expected from the capitalists so the Communist bogey was dressed up in his May Day clothes and trotted out to scare the coupon clippers.

The Salvation Army was represented as the only organization that could beard this lion in his den, and the circular boastingly referred to several Communist scalps now hanging in the wigwam of the Salvation Army headquarters in London. "Quite a few of their most clever orators were converted to Christ," thru the exhortations of the religious freaks who sing their hymns and chant the praises of Jesus while rattling their tin pans to the accompaniment of coin collecting. It is not necessary to say that Jesus never gets a shilling of it.

In soliciting the pounds of the rich the Salvationists say, "If we give up the extremists would have a clear field, for most of their propaganda is carried on at street meetings."

A Daily Herald reporter tried to run down the "Communists who were converted to the Salvation Army" and the nearest he could get to even a clue was one "Fred" who the Salvationists said "was among the scores of hardened and seasoned sinners who have become smiling children of light and righteousness."

An American labor reporter now in London remarked that there is a close resemblance between the piffle put out by the English Salvationists and the propaganda of the Republican National Committee in America, with the difference that the latter displayed more indications of moral turpitude.

"Free Mooney And Billings," St. Louis Tells California

(Special to The Daily Worker)

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 28.—The Metal Trades Council of this city and vicinity has just passed an important resolution, protesting again that Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings are held without a shred of justice in the penitentiaries of California.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

Whereas, Tom Mooney, a member in good standing in the Molders' Union for years, and Warren K. Billings, past President of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Local Union, No. 216, has been confined in the Penitentiaries of the State of California for seven years, under a sentence of life imprisonment, sentenced for a crime of which they are universally acknowledged as innocent, and

Whereas. It is also an established fact, beyond dispute, that Brother Unionists, Mooney and Billings, have been a victim of a conspiracy on the part of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, and that the prosecution, to railroad these Men to the penitentiary because of their Union activities, and

Be It Resolved, By the Metal Trades Council, representing organized metal workers, of St. Louis, in regular meeting assembled April 21, 1924, That we demand the immediate release of Tom Mooney, and Warren K. Billings, and

Philippine Freedom Before Senate Soon, Robson Declares

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Philippine independence has not been abandoned as a Democratic issue, but will be brought up in congress soon, according to Senator Robinson, one of its advocates. He says the senate committee has an understanding that it will take action on the measure immediately after Manuel Quezon, head of the Philippine senate, arrives here next month and gives his testimony.

THE POWER COLUMN

Make May Day count for the Daily Worker

Put your name on the honor roll of those who secure new subscriptions.

May Day's issue of the DAILY WORKER marks a new era in the life of the greatest American labor Daily. More workers will read and profit from THE DAILY WORKER on this day than have ever had that privilege before. THE DAILY WORKER May Day parade which stretched its militant columns from coast to coast and all the way across the United States and Canada is only the advance guard of the DAILY WORKER legions which are destined to make revolutionary history in America.

May Day will mark still another historic period of import to THE DAILY WORKER and its readers. On May 1st, one half of the period set aside for the 10,000 New Subscribers Campaign, will be over. The Honor Roll, historic document of those who have fulifilled their share of their obligation to THE DAILY WORKER, already bears the names of some thousands of willing and able communists who realize that THE DAILY WORKER is the greatest instrument in the hands of American militants.

HONOR ROLL IS GROWING.

Those who have been following The Power Column and especially the results of the big subscription drive will have remarked how frequently certain names appear and reappear in the Honor Roll. What these live wires have done and are continuing to do, each DAILY WORKER can also do. And yet if the roll were called down the list of the thousands of DAILY WORKER readers, how many of them would be unable to answer with head erect in pride!

The campaign is but one half over. There is still time for every militant to share in the glory with which THE DAILY WORKER is to cover the activities of American Labor.

NEW ENGLAND PAY ENVELOPE GETS SLIMMER

Shoe And Cotton Labor Hit Hardest

By LELAND OLDS
Federated Press Industrial Editor.

Weekly earnings of Massachusetts factory employes during March averaged $23.70, according to the monthly statement of the state department of labor. This means a drop of 1.9 per cent from February when the average was $24.15 and of 8 per cent from the peak which came in May, 1923, when the average was $25.80. Last March the average envelope held $23.55.

Decreases in weekly earnings in the course of last month appeared in 23 of the 35 industries covered by the report and were due almost entirely to extensive part-time. The sharpest declines between February and March were reported in the following industries: Boot and shoe from $22.54 to $20.86, women's clothing from $18.41 to $17.05, cotton manufacture from $20.72 to $19.89, dyeing and finishing textiles from $22.87 to $20.86, hosiery and knit goods from $18.81 to $16.98. Other industries reported smaller decreases or minor increases.

The report also shows the earnings of male and female employes separately. Men's wages averaged $28.06 a week while women earned $16.12 a week. Men's earnings ran as low as $19.91 in cotton manufacture where men and women are employed in averaged $14.87. Lowest women's wages were paid about equal numbers. Women in this industry in bakeries where the average was $12.26 a week.

Average weekly earnings in excess of $30 were paid to males in the following industries: Newspaper printing and publishing, book and job printing, women's clothing men's clothing, and musical instruments. Women earned in excess of $20 only in the two branches of the printing industry.

MORE MILK FOR BABES LAST YEAR AS WAGES ROS

Necessities Purchased Not Luxuries

(By The Federated Press)

More milk for babies appears to b one of the outstanding results of th year of good wages, according to survey of the consumption of milk i the country just completed by th U. S. department of agriculture. I bears out the experience of tthe Me ropolitan Life that higher wages ar not spent for luxuries but for neces sities which workers' families hav been forced to do without in the past Result: higher standard of health and lower death rate.

Average consumption of milk i 1923 was 53 gallons compared with 5 gallons in 1922 and 49 gallons in 1921 says the department. The averag daily consumption in 1923 figures ou 1.6 pints per person.

The highest percaptia consumptio of milk is found on farms which hav producing cows. On such farms 1.7 pints per person were consumed i 1923. In city homes the percapti daily consumption falls to 0.87 pint while on the farms without producin cows the average person consume only 0.775 pints.

The survey shows that approxim ately one-eighth of the country's tota production of milk is necessary t produce cream for the 1,000,000,00 pounds of coffee consumed annuall in this country. About 2,000,000 cow are necessary to produce this coffe perquisite. But they don't help th babies.

French Military Airplane Starts Flight To Japan

PARIS, April 28.—France has entered the race for long distance flight supremacy.

A military airplane took off secretly from Villa Coublay and headed for Japan.

The air ministry did not anonunce the departure officially because it is planned, unless the plane succeeds in reaching Constantinople in one jump, to call it a false start.

The most careful preparations have been made to show France's predominance in the air.

Vegetarians Help U. S. Nationalism Claims Italian

ROME, Italy, April 28.—The curious nationalist theories of the United States are "due to a group of pure Anglo-Saxons and intransigeant Americans mixed with Puritanic, theosophic, vegetarian, and anti-alcoholic elements," remarks the editor of the "Courriere d'Italia" in a recent editorial. This combination results in hostility toward the Italians and a lack of appreciation for Italian labor's lack of appreciation for Italian labor's part in building the nation. The editor protests against the obvious discrimination of the immigration bill just passed by the United States Congress.

American Dollar Diplomacy in Action

By JAY LOVESTONE.

ARTICLE VI

Our Foreign Policy

The Latin American countries form the natural Linterland for America's surplus capital and new sources of raw material. Observers of recent developments in the field of world politics have pointed out that there is a spirited competition for favor and trade of South American republics by the leading imperialist powers. The following are new developments in this sphere of international competition. "Great Britain has dispatched a financial commission from Southhampton to South American countries to recommend loans. France has a military commission in Argentina, and seeks to extend her power and influence. Italy and Spain have entered into understanding whereby they will go after a share of South American business, and will combat efforts of France and possibly Great Britain. The United States has for some time maintained a naval commission in Brazil and Peru, and late this month will send to Peru Lieutenant H. B. Grow to build up an aviation unit.

Dollar diplomacy is no longer squirmed at or camouflaged by the spokesmen and diplomats of American imperialism. Secretary of State Hughes recently lauded the Monroe Doctrine before the American Bar Association as the greatest safeguard to peace and security for the Latin American countries. But perhaps the most wholehearted indorsement of dollar diplomacy as a panacea was made by the millionaire engineer and former chairman of the Federal Coal Commission John Hays Hammond before the American Management Association on October 3, 1922. Tersely expressed, Mr. Hammond's program might be summed up as follows: "A few men from the United States with high commercial ability and business acumen, scattered in the capitals thruout the world, would be able, to erect economic safeguard to capital to which would send a stream of American money into the far corners of the earth, developing unused resources, vastly increasing the total international productivity and raising the standard of living for civilized men." At this conference Mr. Hammond laid down the 14 points of dollar diplomacy.

But the United States is not satisfied with the field afforded it by complete hegemony over the South and Central American countries. America has been steadily turning to Far East. Addressing the Senate on February, 1923, late President Harding said: "We have seen the eyes of the world turn to the Pacific. With Europe prostrate and penitent none feared the likelihood of early conflict there. But the Pacific had its menaces and they deeply concerned us. Our territorial interests are larger there. Its waters are not strange to us; its farther shores not unknown to our citizens." There is no question that the French-Indo Chinese empire tho of tremendous size, is at present not a menace to American imperialists in this sphere of influence. Only England and Japan when allied are a menace to American interests here. American imperialist policy has been to separate Japan from Britain. The naval holiday offered by the United States to the debt cursed England was the price paid by America for separating Britain from Japan. The Four Power Pacific Treaty has at least formally replaced the Anglo-Japanese alliance. Of course United States does not intend to desist from its program of getting a Navy second to none as recommended by its General Naval Board in 1915 and 1920. The four year naval holiday only gives America a chance to study the new developments in sea warfare and enables our experts to devise more infernal machines of destruction for war on the high seas.

American imperialists are bent under the guise of adherence to the open door policy to establish undisputed domination over China, one of the richest labor and raw material mines in the world.

American imperialist policy is bitterly anti Soviet Russia and the Far East. The basis of this opposition is not at present directly military or financial. Russia is today no longer an imperialist capitalist nation. What the United States fears from Soviet Russia is the following: The very existence of Soviet Russia as an implacable foe to all the capitalist world powers is in itself a challenge to American imperialism. Soviet Russia is an inspiration to the weaker and exploited nationalities of Asia to revolt against their European and American capitalist oppressors.

American European policy has not yet assumed a definite character. In the main our financiers and industrialists have been pursuing a policy of watchful waiting to jump in at the most appropriate moment when the best bargain could be struck with a bankrupt Europe. American imperialism wants its pound of flesh here and is only waiting for the moment when it can get this with the least effort and at the smallest price. A broken down, bankrupt Europe would virtually be a coolie colony in the hands of American exploiters. The fate that has befallen Austria is a fate that Wall Street would have overwhelm the rest of Europe.

Our capitalists fear the influence of Soviet Russia in European powers. They feel that the de jure recognition of Russia in the fold of European political and commercial relations would interfere with this plan. Therefore the Coolidge administration is continuing the policy of attempting to isolate Russia.

Thru the acceptance of the banker, generals E. Dawes, Owen D. Young and Henry H. Robinson on the Reparations Commission, the United States has taken the first step towards the achievement of its European program.

That this has marked the first of a series of definite steps towards the dominating American financial groups becoming the receivers of bankrupt Europe is made plain by the swiftness with which subsequent developments in this direction are now taking place. Before the Dawes report was made public, J. P. Morgan & Co. whose spokesman on the Reparations Commission were Young and Robinson, made a loan of $100,000,000 to save the tottering Franc and the political head of their lackey, Poincare.

No sooner had the Dawes report mortgaging the German working class to the greedy and profit-hungry coterie of international capitalists been made public, than an open demand was made for an American receivership for Europe. It is significant to note that this has been the objective of the most conscious of America's capitalists. As far back as October, 1919, the special correspondent of the Wall Street Journal cabled from Germany to the effect that there was but one solution of the European crisis, and that was "a straightforward receivership for Germany!" The same journal of high finance had also suggested them that Brigadier General Charles E. Dawes be chosen to untangle the reparations knot.

In the light of this trend of events, the proud boast of the Wall Street Journal of April 11, is enlightening: "The essence of the Dawes report, the one possible means by which its suggestions can be carried out, is a receivership." Of course, a receivership for Europe today means an American receivership. The proposed $200,000,000 loan to Germany to help the stabilization of its currency will prove the immediate entering wedge for the receivership. About $100,000,000 of this loan to the International Acceptance Bank about to be organized in Berlin, will be taken up by American bankers. Obviously the policy of Wall Street here will be the same as the policy pursued in Hungary where a Boston bankers' attorney, Mr. Smith, now reigns supreme as financial dictator.

This continuous encroachment of American financial and industrial interests on the natural resources and industries of continental Europe will in the long run, bring about serious organized political and military opposition from the European countries and our capitalists are preparing for such eventualities.

WAR CAUSED BY CAPITALISM, IS WOMEN'S VERDICT

Galician Delegate For General Strike

By LUDWELL DENNY

(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

NEW YORK, April 28.—"We cannot have peace until there is a complete change in the political and economic basis of the world," is the opinion of Lida Heymann which grew out of her experience as a cabinet member in the Kurt Eisner Communist-Socialist regime in Bavaria following the war. Frau Heymann spoke on the economic causes of war at the New York reception to the foreign delegates, Women's Intl. League for Peace and Freedom congress, which meets in Washington, May 1-7.

One woman member of the executive committee of the Woman's league, Galician section, has been hanged in prison by the Polish authorities without trial, Dr. Madia Surowzowa, Galician delegate, declared. She added that several other members of the executive committee are still in Polish prisons because of their peace activities.

"I favor the general strike against war," Dr. Surowzowa told The Federated Press. Specifying social inequality as the chief cause of war, she said the war menace in Europe had increased during the last year. The capitalists of all countries are responsible for war she said in agreeing with Bertrand Russell's statement that growing world control by U. S. capitalism is the chief menace.

"Since the United States is noted as a country of prohibiton, why don't you prohibit war propaganda by making it a punishable offense?" Frau Yella Hertzka, Austrian delegate, asked.

Jane Addams, international president of the league, presided. Other speakers included delegates from Turkey, France, Belgium, Switzerland and Holland.

U. S. GOVERNMENT OFFICIALLY ADMITS THAT SOVIET RUSSIA NOW HAS FAVORABLE TRADE BALANCE

Editor's Note.—The United States government, officially thru its Department of Commerce, headed by none other than Mr. Herbert Hoover, himself, has sent out publicity, specially written by L. J. Lewery, assistant chief of its Eastern European division, showing that Soviet Russia is back on its feet, that for the three months of last year the balance of trade turned in favor of the First Workers' Republic. This material, however, is sent out thru an unnoticed press service, that is ignored by the daily press. Hence no attention is given to it. It is doubtful if Mr. Hoover knows anything about it. Surely the anti-Soviet Secretary of State Hughes has not read it, so he can go ahead innocently making his usual insane statements about Russian trade and industrial recuperation. The Lewery article is interesting and should be kept in mind when future attacks are made against Soviet Russia. It is as follows:

* * * *

By L. J. LEWERY,

Assistant Chief, Eastern European Division, Department of Commerce.

The last three months of the calendar year 1923, with their large exports of grain, definitely turned the balance of Soviet Russia's foreign trade in its own favor.

Altho the final results for the fiscal year ended September 30, 1923, appeared doubtful and controversial, owing to the present Russian system of valuing all commodities imported and exported at 1913 prices, the heavy increase in exports during the last quarter of the calendar year, together with a systematic restriction of imports, left a substantial favorable balance of trade beyond question, whether valued at pre-war or at current prices.

The valuation of all imports and exports in gold rubles at pre-war market prices had been rendered necessary because the rapidly depreciating Soviet currency furnished no stable medium for calculation and comparison.

Imports for the calendar year 1923, figured at the 1913 prices, were valued at 144,100,000 rubles, against exports of 205,800,000 rubles, giving a favorable balance of 59,700,000 rubles. On the basis of approximate current prices instead of 1913 prices, exports total 307,300,000 rubles and imports 200,100,000 rubles, making the favorable balance on a current-price basis equal roughly to 107,200,000 rubles.

In addition to commercial imports, famine relief supplies to the value of 34,400,000 rubles were imported during the calendar year, as against similar imports of 183,800,000 rubles during the calendar year 1922.

Favorable Trade Balance Follows Grain Export Resumption.

The main cause of the favorable trade balance in 1923 was the resumption of grain exports, which had practically stopped since the outbreak of the World War and which the satisfactory crops of 1922 and 1923 made possible. Total export sales of grain and fodder of the 1923 crop, concluded prior to January 1, 1924, amounted to 1,598,766 long tons, of which 1,160,570 tons were shipped by January 1, 1924, and 152,250 tons were loading at ports on that date.

Of the above grand total, 813,640 tons were rye, 382,110 tons wheat, 136,452 tons barley, and 48,643 tons oats, and the rest being represented by oil cake, corn, and other cereals. Exports of rye represented an increase of 20 per cent over their pre-war average, while those of wheat amounted to but nine per cent of pre-war average.

Sales were distributed among fifteen European countries, the chief purchaser being Germany, 471,266 tons; Netherlands, 285,544 tons; France, 180,743 tons; Finland, 100,178 tons; Denmark, 99,691 tons; and Italy, 93,566 tons. Export sales to the United Kingdom amounted to only 32,739 tons.

Shifts in Trade Values, Composition, and Markets.

Compared with the calendar year 1922, the value of exports (calculated at 1913 prices) increased more than two and one-half times, and more than tenfold in comparison with 1921, while imports fell off by one-half and by one-third, respectively. Imports also underwent a change in composition.

Whereas over one-third of the imports of 1922 consisted of foodstuffs (exclusive of contributed famine relief supplies), imports of foodstuffs in 1923 amounted to 7.4 per cent of total.

In 1922 imports of raw materials and semi-manufactured products represented only 14.6 per cent of the total, whereas in 1923 this group accounted for 44.2 per cent of the total.

At the same time exports showed a corresponding shift for the group of foodstuffs from 5.3 per cent in 1922 to 56.8 per cent in 1923; for raw materials and semi-finished goods, from 90.8 per cent to 42.4 per cent of the total. The general distribution of Russian exports in 1923 by groups of commodities is thus found to be closely approaching that of 1913, when foodstuffs accounted for 52.2 per cent of total exports and raw materials and semi-finished goods accounted for 36.9 per cent, these two groups comprising the bulk of Russian exports. This similarity is extended further to the two principal markets of Russian foreign trade, Germany and the United Kingdom. In 1913 these two countries accounted for 60.1 per cent of Russian total imports, and 47.4 per cent of total exports; in 1923, their share was 60 and 44.2 per cent respectively.

The total foreign trade of Russia in 1923, calculated at 1913 prices, amounted to but 12.1 per cent of total exports and imports for 1913.

Government Monopoly of Foreign Trade Firmly Maintained.

The government monopoly of foreign trade was firmly maintained during the year. According to data for the operating year 1922-23 Soviet state institutions, including government organizations and mixed companies controlled by the Soviet government, accounted for 96.7 per cent of all exports and for 97.3 per cent of all imports; the rest represented the part played by purely private initiative in the foreign trade of Soviet Russia.

Trade With United States In 1923.

The tracing of imports from the United States, except as to cotton, presents many difficulties, because most of the purchases, even when concluded directly in the United States by official and semi-official agencies of the Soviet government in New York, were financed in England or Germany.

In the total summaries imports from the United States are valued at 18,696,000 gold rubles at 1913 prices, of which 16,447,000 was accounted for by raw cotton, representing a quantity of 124,000 bales. Deducting the value of cotton from the total value of imports from the United States would leave a balance of 2,249,000 rubles, or a little over $1,000,000 for all the rest of the imports, according to Russian customs statistics, which is admitted to be considerably understated.

Russia's imports from the United States in 1923, according to customs figures computed at 1913 prices, represent 12.9 per cent of total imports, and the exports to the United States 0.4 per cent of total exports, while the entire trade with the United States amounted to 5.6 per cent of trade with all countries, as against 3.9 per cent in 1913.

War-Time Trade With United States.

In 1913 Russian imports from the United States amounted to 79,000,000 rubles, or 5.8 per cent of total Russian imports; exports to the United States reached only 14,000,000 rubles, or 0.9 per cent of Russian trade with all countries. During the war, commencing with the second year, Russian-American trade was considerably stimulated, but after the war it lapsed almost completely, until 1921, when imports from the United States were valued at 39,794,000 gold rubles. In 1922 imports from the United States amounted to 38,937,000 gold rubles and in 1923 to 18,696,000.

Since the war the character of Russian imports from the United States had changed radically, partly on account of changed economic conditions and partly because of crop failure and famine. In 1918 the bulk of imports was raw materials and finished goods, in 1921 it was manufactured articles and in 1922 it was foodstuffs.

In 1923 foodstuff imports amounted to only 176,000 gold rubles, and manufactured articles to 1,826,000; but raw materials and semi-finished goods rose from 122,000 gold rubles in 1922 to 16,694,000 gold rubles in 1923.

It has been reported to the Commerce Department, Eastern European Division, that shipments of machinery and technical equipment alone by one of the semi-official Soviet agencies in New York amounted to $1,694,000; of metals, $120,000; of chemicals and dyes, $103,000. Its sales of Russian merchandise imported into the United States in 1923 consisted chiefly of furs, amounting to $550,000.

Another agency imported $4,082,000 worth of Russian furs, besides $573,600 worth of bristles, horsehair, and other hair products, and $71,450 worth of caviar and fish products, out of its total imports from Russia during the year of $4,827,320. This firm's shipments to Russia included textiles to the value of $365,600, out of $393,650 for the year.

At least one purchase of 10,000 tons of Russian mineral oil by an American company was reported as shipped from London. Over 500 light American tractors, together with agricultural equipment in connection with same (plows, disc harrows, etc.), were shipped by another firm to the value of about $500,000, while about $250,000 worth of Russian furs were imported by it during the year.

From Auto Trades Council.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 28.—Plans are progressing for formation of an Automotive Trades Council, to include all unions in the San Francisco bay district engaged in automobile service, operation and repair. Six unions in and near San Francisco have voted to join the council, which is being organized under the auspices of the San Francisco local of the Auto Mechanics' union. It would operate on the same basis as the building trades councils and similar bodies.

COOLIDGE-WALL STREET GANG PLANS TO PULL OLD STUFF TO FOOL LABOR INTO SUPPORTING REPUBLICAN PARTY

By LAURENCE TODD.

(Federated Press Staff Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Threats of wholesale unemployment, coupled with promises of a well-paid job for every man if Coolidge is elected, are the campaign arguments chiefly counted upon by Butler, Stearns and the other backers of the president.

Judge Gary has sounded the warning that business is displeased with the situation in Congress. Industrial stocks sell lower in the market.

Republican organizers "admit" that there is hesitation in financial circles, and that a depression is beginning. They are setting the stage for a minor panic, and are getting ready to revive the Mark Hanna slogan of 1896—"If McKinley is not elected, this factory will be shut down!"

Mellon Is Trembling.

Secretary Mellon, trembling in fear of the decision to be taken by the Senate on May 6 as to employing Francis J. Heney to investigate the treasury department, is the adviser back of this administration scheme.

He represents the banking trust, and he knows how easily it can change the tone of industrial activity. A few orders, a few manipulations, and factories can be made to slow down, railroads to deliver fewer cars, banks to withdraw credit, merchants to cut down purchases from the wholesale market, and creditors everywhere to begin worrying their debtors.

The fact that European chaos has begun to hurt the export trade of the United States anyhow, and that the ruin of Germany is bound to have its harmful effect on American industry, is not mentioned. The implication is left in the voter's mind that the uncovering of robbery and corruption by the Senate has destroyed American prosperity—such as it is.

Resort to Fascism.

Fascism is to be brought to the aid of direct financial control and threats. George B. Lockwood, secretary of the Republican National Committee, who publishes the National Republican, hitherto known as the official organ of the national committee and the White House, announces that his paper will henceforth be independent of the committee and will wage war on all progressives.

"The Republican party," he says, "stands for the productive payroll of private enterprise as against the public payroll of an exaggerated and despotic state. It has nothing in common with the demagogic doctrines of destructive radicals whose appeal is to the spirit of envy, class and caste hatred and revolutionary attack upon the economic system upon which rests the structure of national prosperity and progress. . . . There is no obligation in party loyalty to support candidates for offices, nominally Republican but actually anti-Republican, who may be foisted upon the party ticket by organized minorities or thru enemy participation in unrestricted primaries."

Accordingly, the secretary of the national committee announces that his paper will represent a National Republican League, whose members—subscribing to the paper—will be pledged not to support any candidate, either before or after the primary, who will not "recognize majority rule within the party on fundamental policies," and who will not "give his support to a national Republican administration." This rule from the top is necessary, Lockwood holds, in order to end the "policy of compromise with destructive elements," who have borne the Republican name but are actually trying to launch a new party. This "challenge of radicalism" must be firmly met. Republicans must have party discipline.

Norris Hits at Lockwood.

Senator Norris, recently re-nominated by the republicans of Nebraska after having been attacked for months by Lockwood's paper, replied to this statement by saying that the National Republican had read itself out of the party by its own attitude.

The idea of imposing discipline upon the members of any political party as to their conscientious beliefs and attitudes, he said, was totally opposed to the spirit of republican institutions. It belonged only in an absolute monarchy. Lockwood was proclaiming the doctrine of the Russian czars. American parties would continue to accept the policies demanded by their members in the mass, and not the policies of dictators. If the president, when a republican, were the natural dictator of party policy, who would dictate to the party upon its going out of office—as would promptly follow the adoption of this rule? Would Lockwood's paper assume the job?

Senator Couzens of Michigan, who started the fight over Mellon, remains sick in a Baltimore hospital. The administration is making the most of his absence from the senate, by building up an impression that Mellon alone is staving off a serious industrial collapse.

Opposition to Coolidge or to the Mellon plan of tax-evasion on the part of the profiteers is coupled, in the catalog of political crime, with the Couzens demand that Mellon's handling of the treasury be investigated.

Senator LaFollette is studying the field, before making answer to the implied threat of organized finance. Democratic politicians are anxious to be counted "safe," and are uncertain as to their next move.

MINISTER DENIES BRITISH LABOR IS BOLSHEVIK

Arthur Henderson On Stand In Libel Case

LONDON, April 28.—Arthur Henderson, Home Secretary in the Ramsay MacDonald cabinet, on the witness stand in a libel suit brought by a member of the engineers' union against a Tory newspaper, painted the British labor movement a deep yellow and absolved it of any suspicion of Bolshevism.

Mr. Thomas William Gillinder, the plaintiff, was charged with having accepted the program of the Independent Labor Party, which according to the imaginative Tory sheet stood for the bloody work and deeds of Lenin and Trotzky and the murderous plans of the Bolsheviks, prominent among which were the nationalization of women. One would almost think it was Harry M. Daugherty speaking.

Arthur Henderson, sworn testified that he was for twelve years secretary of the British Labor Party and Honorary secretary. His party favored friendly relations with Soviet Russia but was against Bolshevism.

Might Use Violence.

Henderson was asked, "When do you think it is important enough to exercise your industrial powers to enforce your views by class warfare?"

Henderson replied that his party favored such methods when the country was in a crisis. Replying to a charge that Bromley of the Locomotive Engineers' Union "held up" the country in a strike, Henderson said, the workers struck to better their position and "succeeded in getting by a strike what they could not get in months of negotiations."

"Me Too," Says Arthur.

Sir Douglas Hogg, appearing for the defendants, expressed his pleasure that all the Communist candidates in the last election were defeated. "Well, I was beaten too," replied Henderson.

Congress Knifes Farm-Co-operative Marketing Scheme

WASHINGTON, April 28.—The McNary-Haugen bill which would create a $200,000,000 corporation to buy and sell basic farm products in an effort to maintain pre-war price levels was singled out by the house agriculture committee today as the outstanding farm relief measure to be pressed for passage at this session of congress. It was reported by the unexpectedly large vote of 14 to 6.

The Yoakum plan, which would have built up an independent co-operative marketing system owned and controlled by farmers, was thrown out by a vive voce vote.

The Norris-Sinclair bill which would have provided a government corporation to market wheat, was rejected 16 to 4.

The Voigt bill, similar to the McNary-Haugen bill in operation but limited to wheat, was voted down 16 to 2.

"THIRD PARTY PERIL" MAKES REACTIONARY DEMOCRAT RUN WILD

NEW YORK, April 28.—Third party advocates in the eastern states are pointing out that the best proof that their movement is growing is its recognition as a danger by the old line politicians. James W. Gerard, one of the astute Democratic politicians in New York is using "the third party peril" as the text for his organization speeches as he goes about trying to mend fences of his party. This peril is to be avoided, according to Gerard, only by ousting the crooked Republicans and electing Smith, the Tammany presidential candidate.

Both old parties are inefficient and corrupt and enemies of democracy, is the reply of John Haynes Holmes, pacifist parson, Community church, New York. Ridiciuling the Republican national committee's charge that the St. Paul Farmer-Labor convention and the Washington investigations are inspired by Moscow, Holmes says, "Why the Republicans and other reactionaries should seek to give the Bolsheviks credit for everything that is hopeful in American political life passes comprehension.

"The third party movement, so far from being red or Russian, is the one distinctively American movement on the horizon today. June 17 should mark an epoch in American history. The platform of that party is a new declaration of independence."

Difficult Time In Trying To Stir Up Trouble In Honduras

WASHINGTON, Apr. 28.—The state and navy departments today were seeking information concerning the reported shooting of American sailors in Tegucigalpa, Honduras. No official confirmation has yet been received from American consular officials there.

According to the report the sailors were killed when the forces besieging the Honduran capital dropped bombs from an airplane.

There is a force of American sailors in Tegucigalpa, sent there to guard the American legation and consulate, where contending forces in the revolution threaten the capital. The city is now besieged by the forces opposing the provisional government.

AMERICAN PICKS RICH PLUMS IN HAITIAN BUREAU

Imperialists' Plan Is Scientific Exploiting

(Special to The Daily Worker)

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti, April 28.—A technical bureau of the Haitian department of agriculture is the newest burden the American administration has saddled on this unfortunate island. The imperial capitalists are planning still further the exploitation of the island thru the new bureau headed by Dr. George F. Freeman.

Extraordinary credit of $170,000 has been forced thru the council of state to allow Freeman free rein in his enterprise. Freeman has just completed a survey of the country on horseback and has found ideal conditions for American business men: cheap labor as well as climatic and soil advantages for agricultural and dairying and stock-raising industries.

The new bureau is to be built with local experts, Freeman claims. He says that he will use Haitians in completing his personnel. "But," he adds, "the organization will be molded along the lines that have succeeded in the United States."

Coolidge Appoints Bureau's Head.

Freeman was appointed by President Coolidge and "President" Borno of Haiti confirmed the appointment as a matter of course.

National City Bank, one of the biggest financial institutions of the United States and the sugar trust, are known to be much concerned over efficient production in Haiti. Many other big interests in America are welcoming the creation of the new bureau, which will be supported by the Haitians. They look forward to the building of a highly complex technique of exploitation of the island's resources—in their favor. The old methods used by the natives are sufficient only unto them and will be done away with in the introduction of machines and scientific cultivation.

Police Torture Wins An Acquittal For St. Louis Negro

(By The Federated Press)

ST. LOUIS, April 27.—Herman Young, a Negro, was acquitted by a jury of the charge of murder, when Young testified that the signed confession offered in evidence was signed by him only after unbearable police torture. He said the police knocked the confession out of him with barrel staves and "billies." The charge was that Young was the driver of a car that struck and killed a young boy on the street. The trial lasted three days, but when the confession was repudiated the jury voted not guilty.

GERMAN COMMUNIST EDITOR GETS 10 MONTHS FOR WHAT HE DIDN'T WRITE

LEIPSIC, Germany, April 28.—Otto Steinicke, editor of the Rote Fahne of Berlin, the official organ of the Communist Party of Germany, has been given ten months in the house of correction for alleged treasonable utterances... The article was not written by Steinicke, and it concerned itself with the problem of alleged illegal organizations. The verdict has met with violent criticism.

Morgan, The Dictator

John Pierpont Morgan, head of the banking house of Morgan & Co., has assumed the dictatorship over Western Europe.

The DAILY WORKER has persistently pointed this out, especially since Chicago's Charles G. "Hell and Maria" Dawes handed down the Wall Street inspired report of the commission of experts, setting forth the ability of Germany to pay.

Morgan is in Paris. He is not taking orders from, but giving orders to, the nations of the Versailles Peace—France, England, Italy and Great Britain. Morgan's picture is published conspicuously with the news, and under the headline, "Morgan Offers $100,000,000 on Berlin Loan." The real ruler of America, and all Europe but Soviet Russia, takes his place openly, on the front pages of the newspapers, without any foolish coronation ceremonies.

Morgan stands back of the Dawes plan. In fact, as we have pointed out, it is his plan. It is the plan of Wall Street.

Morgan pledges the financiers of Wall Street to raise $100,000,000, or one-half of the 800,000,000 gold morks ($200,000,000) that Germany needs under the Dawes plan. An English group of capitalists pledges $75,000,000.00, the rest to come from France, Holland, Switzerland, Italy and elsewhere.

The determining power, therefore, is in the hands of Morgan. And no Mussolini, in the heyday of his power, laid down his Fascisti terms, more ruthlessly.

Morgan says the Dawes' scheme that means another war in Europe, more ghastly and destructive than the last, within the next few years, must be accepted without alterations, or political modifications. The plan must immediately become operative. The capitalist politicians of the various countries have been warned by "Morgan-The Dictator," that they must keep their hands off, and not shackle the experts' business-like arrangements with political or military considerations. Western Europe, in accepting the Morgan dictatorship, has surrendered the right to decide its own destiny. It has turned its fate over to the Fascist Dictator, Morgan, of the House of Morgan, Broad and Wall Streets, New York City.

We hear the complaining admission of the Berliner Morgenpost that, "There is no doubt that the really great lord, who will exercise the decisive influence in all these reparations questions is the American billionaire, Morgan."

That this thing has been done is a confession by the capitalists and politicians of Western Europe that they fear for the life of European capitalism. It is world capitalism's last effort to pull Europe's "revolutionary tooth," as Trotzky calls it; to crush the First Workers' Republic—Soviet Russia.

The House of Morgan now stands supreme. Its foundation was laid on the graft and the profits won by the father of the present Morgan, during the Civil War. The House of Morgan won its place, during the recent world war, as the greatest of international banking houses. It was Morgans' war and Morgan got the United States into it, to help save the world and make it safe for Morgan. The blood and agony of American workers and farmers, in two great wars, laid the foundation and reared the superstructure of the House of Morgan.

Wilson tried to get the United States government into Europe thru the League of Nations. The republicans are profiting by the failure of the Wilson democratic regime, and Coolidge does not urge the government, but the House of Morgan to extend a loan to Germany, under the Dawes plan. Thus Coolidge confesses the House of Morgan even greater than the United States government; confesses capitalist America, as well as capitalist Europe the vassal of Wall Street.

It rests with the workers of all the coutries concerned to say how long they will endure this dictatorship. It cannot be that the workers of Germany, or of any other country will indefinitely tolerate this international fascisti rule.

It is against this world Fascisti Rule that the Communist International issues its International May Day, 1924, proclamation.

"The United States does not know where to spend all its money," says the proclamation. "It is eagerly stretching out its hands for new riches; seeking new sources of oil and attemping to monopolize by every means, including deceit and violence. Thereby the United States again conjures up a terrible new war aspect."

This International May Day is a good time for the workers and farmers of the United States to consider if they will safeguard with their lives, in the next war, this $100,000,000 that the House of Morgan is planning to drop into the capitalist chaos of Western Europe.

We believe that the verdict will be that Morgan must fight his own battles, while the workers and farmers rally for the final conflict under the standards of the Communist International, against the whole Morgan social system.

If He Had Been Elected

Newton Jenkins, one of the election hopes of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, pranced along to defeat in the April republican primaries in Illinois.

At the mass meeting for Jenkins, held by the Conference for Progressive Political Action in Chicago, before the elections, no attack was made on the republican party. But Jenkins was defeated just the same.

Mr. Jenkins, still on the outside looking in, has now polished up a few radical phrases. He is out announcing that there will be "independent" or "third party" candidates in the field for the November elections. He declares:

> "There are three political machines left in the republican party in Illinois and one in the democratic party. These devices stand between the people and their government. They constitute corrupting influences in our government which are intolerable."

Yet, before April 8th last, this Jenkins was willing to have a machine inside the republican party elect him United States senator. How gloriously satisfactory everything would have been inside the republican party had he been nominated in April, and elected in November—a REPUBLICAN.

It is logical to conclude that all that Jenkins wants inside even a third party is to turn it into a replica of the Wall Street republican party, at the very first opportunity.

This is the brand of political turncoat that is trying to direct the eyes of the workers and farmers away from the class National Farmer-Labor Convention, at St. Paul, Minn., June 17th, by beating the tom toms for the Conference for Progressive Political Action Third Party gathering at Cleveland, Ohio, July 4th.

Let the workers and farmers become fully acquainted with these facts and then they will give their unanimous and whole-hearted support to "June 17th" at St. Paul.

We Say, "Let's Go"

Sam Gompers is ever busy making propaganda against the Russian Workers' and Farmer Republic. The kept press of the bosses always have an apetite for his stuff. And, if the truth must be known, there are even some so-called labor papers that print it.

While Mr. Gompers was silent for many long weeks, before we would acknowledge having had anything to do with the resolution calling for the exposure of the Teapot Dome Steal, not so with the Borah resolution calling for the recognition of Soviet Russia. Gompers is at all times ready to attack Russian Recognition.

The latest is from the typewriter of Mr. Gompers own kept press agent, Mr. Chester, Mr. Wright, renegade Socialist of the vintage of William English Walling, John Spargo, Dr. Frank Bohn, A. M. Simons, and other "for hire" scribblers.

The Gompers-Wright publicity wants to create the impression that not only Senator Borth, but American Communist as well, are anxious to hush up the hearings on the Borah resolution, in order to prevent Mr. Gompers and his anti-sovietists from producing a "barel full of evidence."

We confess that we have no entrance to the inner workings of the mental processes of Senator Borah. But we are sure that American Communists have nothing to fear from any barrel of evidence, or barrel of anything else, that Gompers might have on his hip. Every word of testimony that Mr. Gompers could produce against Soviet Russia the American Communist movement has already been worn so threadbare, that even the most devout czarist would have a hard job finding any value in it. Mr. Gompers should profit by the said experiences of his pals, Daugherty and Burns.

The house of representatives by vote of 297 to 69 adopted the proposed child labor amendment to the constitution. Judge "Bill the Fat" Taft ought to get out an injunction stopping any further contempt for the U. S. Supreme Court that members of the senate might display by voting for this amendment. For, it will be remembered, the U. S. S. C. held this amendment "unconstitutional." Bill Taft might call upon Chicago's anti-labor injunction judges, "Charley Foell and "Dennie" Sullivan to help him out. In the language of Daugherty, it must be that Moscow is trying to destroy respect for the decisions of our most honored judges.

Fascisti rule in Spain has announced that all May Day demonstrations have been forbidden in the land of Alfonso. That will not increase the liking of the workers for their Music Hall King, nor make the war against Morocco any more popular. Fear of the workers goes before the fall of the Spanish dictatorship. Watch it tumble.

Our "Poor Fish" ought to have something snappy to say about Herb Hoover's connection with the $60,000,000 salmon steal in Alaska.

Fall had his oil; Hoover his salmon; Wood his Filipinos; Weeks his Canal Zone; and they were all trying to make the most of it.

A Few Necessary Statements

(An Editorial in the Volkszeitung, by Ludwig Lore.)

IN ACCORDANCE with the decision of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party, to correct the misunderstandings created by our article on the Fifth Anniversary of the Third International, which was written as an honest and enthusiastic tribute to Communism and its international organization, the Communist International, the following statement is made. The article in question contained the following passage, which has regrettably led to misunderstandings:

"In the five years of its existence the Third has gone thru many an infantile disease. It swung from the strict denial of parliamentarism on the one hand to its use, always with the same reaffirmation of its importance. It condemned the creation of dual labor organizations, in spite of the fact that it had, at first, supported the splitting of the existing labor union movement. It shook off the utopian conception that a small, determined minority can bring about a revolution in every country, and taught that a majority of the proletariat must feel at least a sympathetic alliance with the idea of the necessity of such an upheaval. It led Communism thru the secret society tactic of underground conspiracy, and proclaimed the right of revolution and revolutionary propaganda. And after each sickness it grew stronger and more virile."

Our conception of the Third International, when this article was written, was a union of parties in all countries which had come together for revolutionary action. And the above quotation refers to some of these parties at certain stages of their development, not to the Executive Committee of the C. I. or to the congresses. The Communist International itself, as represented by the congresses and the Executive Committee, never made these mistakes, but corrected them when they were made by some of the affiliated parties.

In this period of storm and stress in the Communist movement there were at times differences between the theoretical position taken by the congresses and their Executive Committee on these questions, and the practice of some of the national organizations. The endeavors to tear down the old conceptions of the Second International to build up a new psychology in the masses had led some of the more important parties to adopt tactical measures which had not received the sanction of the International. So dangerous had this tendency to become that Nicolai Lenin felt the necessity of combatting it in his "Leftism—an infantile disease of Communism," which appeared two years after the formation of the Communist International. That it was possible for these parties, in the few short years of their existence, to put sound theory into practice, was—and this is what our article wished to convey—the greatest achievement of the first five years of our International.

In his first annual report to the Second Congress, Zinoviev, president of the Third International, declared that "the Executive Committee has had, from the very beginning, to wage a determined struggle against the tendency of small groups of 'left' Communists, who were propagating the boycott of the trade union movement. The Executive Committee insisted and insists that the Communists must not leave the trade unions, but that to the contrary they must double their efforts inside of the unions; that they must organize Communist groups therein in order to conquer the trade unions for the Communist International in a persistent and systematic struggle."

Altho the first Congress emphasized that the parliaments must be used for revolutionary propaganda, it became necessary for the Second Congress and the C. I. to force a number of parties to take part in election campaigns. Similarly the widespread conception that a small minority of the proletariat of a country could bring about a successful proletarian revolution was fought by the leaders of the International. Here again it was Lenin who battled against this misconception in his "Leftism."

It has not always been easy for the Executive Committee of the Third to adjust the practical application of its theoretical position to the needs of the various countries. Particularly because it is difficult to judge true conditions thousands of miles away. In our "Wochen-Rundschau," of March 2, we quoted from a cabled excerpt of a "Pravda" article by Zinoviev and remarked that Comrade Zinoviev, who does not know American conditions at first hand, was evidently not always receiving reliable reports. The American Labor Monthly, in referring to this remark, intimates that these reports emanate from responsible American party circles, or from the representatives of the W. P. to the C. I.

We repudiate this "interpretation" of our remark, for we know that the comrades in charge of this task report with great care. What we wanted to express was that the exaggerations that appear in the capitalist press of this country—which is attentively read in the C. I.—concerning the growth and influence of the revolutionary American movement, for the purpose of terrorizing its bourgeois readers, to pave the way for reactionary measures of suppression, are at times given too serious consideration.

Democrats Are Hopeful.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—Senate democrats clamed enough progressive votes to assure adoption of their tax reduction schedule.

"Save Your Money And Buy A Judge!"

By I. D. McFadden.

The Wage Slave humbly begged the boss, a job, to give him, in the Mine.
A Worker had been killed. The loss a place created for this fine,
Proud Soldier of The U. S. A.—A Patriot who sought to earn
Three dollars for his daily pay, but would not learn.
The Boss had learned (Not so, this Drudge) "Save your Money and buy a Judge."

They put the new man on a tram. The Drift was crooked, rough and steep.
The owners did not care a D—n for worker's lives, but, sought to keep An income high and outgo low. No Trammer might ride in that mine.
But, one who walked would take so much time, he would get sent down the line!
Against this System, bear no Grudge. "Save your money and buy a Judge."

The Car they gave him, had no brakes. (Brakes cost too Much.) The Speed increased.
Such is the risk, the workers take. The Track gave way. His Journey ceased.

The Judge decided points of Law, against the Worker. It became His Honor's Duty to withdraw the Case. The Worker was to Blame.
"From your old Parties, Do Not Budge!" "Save your money and buy a Judge!"

Theodore Thomas

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN.

Exercises in memory of Theodore Thomas, founder of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, on the occasion of the unveiling of a monument to him, were held in Orchestra Hall last Thursday afternoon.

Charles S. Hammill, president of the Orchestral association, the financial backers of the Symphony orchestra, in a long address painted a picture of the life of the first conductor of the orchestra. Strength and fight, artistic taste and ability coupled with determined confidence in the face of failure characterizes the life of Theodore Thomas. He came to America at the age of ten, and at first was a concert violinist in the East. He directed an opera company, which failed. He directed a number of symphonic orchestras, travelling about the country. When Thomas came to Chicago he played to empty seats. Year after year he went on, his backers paying his deficits, until, in 1914, a big subscription fund was raised to build a concert hall, according to Thomas' requirements. Orchestra Hall resulted, but Theodore Thomas lived only to conduct one short season of concerts in the new hall.

Musical Pioneering.

The musical pioneering of this man is of inestimable worth. When he first came here, a Chicago newspaper said it was bad enough to sit thru one movement of a symphony, but to be compelled to listen to three drove the writer speechless. He concluded by remarking that the orchestra should be driven out of town. Musical taste has gone a long way since then, with full symphonies performed at popular concerts, and with popular concerts, children's concerts, university concerts, and concerts in Aurora and Milwaukee regularly, beside those of the regular season.

Not only in Chicago has musical taste been developed thru the work of Thomas. Los Angeles, Detroit, Cleveland, Minneapolis, to mention a few cities, could never have symphony orchestras as they have had not this man succeeded in Chicago. In fact, one might not be exaggerating when one says that musical taste and culture thruout the middle west had its origin in the musical missionary work of Theodore Thomas.

Bach, Beethoven, Wagner.

At the exercises the orchestra played three of their first director's favorite compositions, quite interesting in that they show his musical outlook. The chorale and fugue by J. S. Bach arranged for modern orchestra, by Abert, opens slowly, religiously, and then changes to a tremendously big, many-voiced fugue, which might grow tiresome if it were not for the skillful modern orchestration of Abert. The Beethoven Eroica symphony is as its title proclaims it, heroic, noble. And the music ended with that glorious and colorful medieval procession, the prelude to Richard Wagner's "Mastersingers of Nuremburg".

The memorial to Thomas is a bronze statue of a grand lady in ancient Greek costume strumming on a harp. In back of her are engraved figures of men playing orchestral instruments. She was made by Albin Polasek, and to us, who know nothing of sculpture, she is not adequate. The figures in back of her look like Egyptian glyphs, and the central figure itself, looks stiff and unnatural. A simple, dignified statue of Thomas himself would have been—but then we know nothing of sculpture.

By LELAND OLDS.
(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

If you are a moving picture fan you are being forced to pay your share of a huge annual tribute to the Eastman Kodak company and associated interests whose monopoly control of the manufacture and sale of raw films has just been exposed by the federal trade commission. The commission orders the Eastman company and concerns under its domination to stop the conspiracy in restraint of trade by which they are seeking to extend their film monopoly.

Profits of Eastman Kodak for the year 1923 totaled $18,877,229 after a depreciation and federal taxes. This meant a return of $9.13 on every $10 share of common stock or a profit of more than 91 per cent. The concern paid cash dividends totaling 75 per cent and raised its undivided surplus profits to $65,958,640, a figure which is more than three times the entire investment of the common stockholders.

These 1923 profits are by no means exceptional. Total profits of the last five years amounted to $86,348,275. In other words common stock holders have in five years received no profits more than four times their entire investment. Dividends during this period totaled $51,891,839 or more than 2½ times the investment. In the last decade, dividends totaling 362 per cent have been paid.

During 1922, in order to conceal the enormity of these profits, the stockholders voted to change the stock from 250,000 shares of $100 par to ten times as many shares of no par value. This meant that for every share of the original stock the owners received ten shares of the new stock.

Destroyed Competition.

By means of coercion, the trade commission charges, the Eastman company has destroyed the competition of other producers in this country and also of foreign made raw films. It holds over members of the Allied Film Laboratories Association the threat that it will itself enter their branch of the business unless they purchase and use only the raw film manufactured by itself. To make good this threat Eastman holds three fully equipped laboratories ready for operation on short notice should the allied laboratories attempt to break away from its monopoly grip.

"The acts of the respondents," says the commission's order, "constitute a conspiracy or combination in restraint of trade in interstate and foreign commerce and have the effect of maintaining and extending the monopoly of the Eastman Kodak Co. and of hindering and preventing competitors from establishing enterprises for the manufacture of raw cinematograph film."

Watch Your Goose-Step.

LOS ANGELES, Calif., April 28.—Cleon Knoles, president, College of the Pacific, had better look out for his job—he must have been reading The Goose-Step. He told the Mutual Business club here that "America is ruled by sixth-grade intellects," and the six-grade intellects who listened to him were not very much pleased by his speech.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

The American soldiers who won the war for the American capitalists, may bless their stars—and their stripes, of course. At last a grateful capitalist nation has decided to compensate them for their services in killing obstinate German workers on a wage scale of $30.00 per month. The senate has voted for a bonus. After twenty more years—they have already waited five—the heroes may be the happy possessors of a full-paid endowment insurance policy. That is, unless our masters declare war on Japan or England in the meantime, and send the insured on another pilgrimage to save civilization, in which case a man might be lost, but a policy would be saved. Anything may happen in twenty years.

It is not quite so sure, however, that the heroes will get even an endowment policy. Our scrupulously righteous president, does not like the idea of a bonus at all. It is putting a price on patriotism in his opinion, which is extremely demoralizing. The working class must not get the idea that war is a big business enterprise—capitalist competition carried to the point of the bayonet—and that they are employed by their governments acting for the rival business concerns to dispose of a competitor, in a way that is a little out of the ordinary. The workers must feel that they are crusaders, going forth to battle for a righteous nation that has reached the limit of its patience. An insurance policy is a nicely engraved piece of paper. Its cash value just now is nil. Calvin may sign the bill for the sake of political expediency, unless Wall Street feels too keenly about it.

There is a big fight raging in the Protestant churches between those who claim that war and Christianity are synonymous terms and their opponents who believe that Jesus was a man of peace and that his followers should oppose all wars. The battle rages. The war-like faction have the big capitalist papers on their side and the power and prestige of the War Department. Generals appear at church meetings and denounce the Christly peace propaganda as "Communism". Parades are led by accommodating prelates who would represent Christ as a bootlegger if there was any money in it. Speeches are made in which the meek and lowly Nazarene appears as a blood-thirsty war maniac. All this is quite entertaining.

In the fall of 1922, several Communists sojourned for several weeks in Berrien County jail, Michigan. On Sunday evening a local preacher accompanied by half a dozen women of indifferent pulchritude, and in various degrees of conversion, visited the jail to offer us spiritual consolation, and tell us that perhaps there were many people walking the streets who were just as wicked as we were or perhaps, more so. After inflicting an ungrammatical and idiotic sermon on us, we were given the opportunity of selecting our favorite hymn from a hymn book, a copy of which was given to each prisoner. Being Communists, we were militant and being militant, we were war-like, so we picked on "When Jesus Christ Goes Forth to War".

This seemed to please the preacher very much. The hymn was repeated several times and the spiritual salesman seemed on the point of taking up a collection, when a local pugilist, who was held in the jail for attempting liberties with his landlady, shouted, "Well, by Jesus, this old Christ was a fighting son — — —". And it is not surprising that the laity should misunderstand Christ's ideas on violence when even the clergy are at sea about them.

No less a man than Harry M. Daugherty, ousted cabinet crook, is engaged in an insidious attempt to turn the heads of American Communists by flattery and perhaps, inveigle them into initiating their pre-conceived, Moscow-hatched, plan to capture the Capitol and fly the red flag over the White House. If we are to give credence to Mr. Daugherty's version of their accomplishments, it is not impossible that such clever fellows could perform this big task. At a moment's notice they may unmask their man Gompers, (who is really an agent of Trotzky) call out the secret military battalions of the Conference for Progressive Political Action, exhume the Socialist Party, which is destined to be the Cheka under the dictatorship, and install Benjamin Stohlberg, sandy-mustached, red mouse hunter, for Hearst's International as Dictator of the United Soviet States of America.

This may seem far-fetched, and proof of the DAILY WORKER'S theory that Daugherty is engaged in a lunacy contest with the rabbit-biting Harry K. Thaw, but after reading the evidence produced by the ex-attorney general, the possibility of such a development does not look so hazy. What have the Communists done so far? They have induced Doheny to bribe Fall with $100,000, in return for which Fall handed Doheny part of the Navy's oil lands. Then they got next to Harry Sinclair, who gave Fall $25,000, hundreds of cattle, some race horses and a car load of liquor. Sinclair got most of the State of Wyoming. Next the Communists turned on Daugherty himself

PULLMAN REAMERS REFUSE TO DESERT THE STRIKE

No Hope For 115 Victims of Steel Trust Mine

Exposing $60,000,000 Fish Steal Scares Hoover Into Weak Denial of Charges

WASHINGTON, April 29.—Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover has made a general and unconvincing denial of the charges that he has assisted the Salmon Trust in stealing the $60,000,000 yearly fishing rights on the Alaskan coast.

Hoover pleads that the big salmon companies are operating under privileges obtained during former administrations and that he has no authority to practice conservation and to safeguard labor conditions. He pleads that he is trying to get a law passed which will give his department such authority.

Hoover's Denial Unconvincing.

Hoover's reply is unconvincing because it avoids specific charges. He remains silent as to his relationship to the Alaska Packers' Association and other big operating concerns. He ignores the charges that native fishermen and independents have been displaced by the Trust.

The Secretary of Commerce's assertion that "there is not operating today a single company which was not operating when the department for the first time, obtained partial control over these waters two seasons ago, begs the question, even if it were true. The charges are that Hoover has not only granted new permits, but has ratified old claims, strengthening the power of the Salmon Trust and preventing natives and independents from operating. The Salmon Trust is now carrying on its monopolistic stealing under official authorization.

Expect Hoover Trust Probe.

When the expected senate investigation takes place interesting revelations are expected on the means used by the Salmon Trust to get Hoover's official sanction. The fact will be brought out that Hoover ignored the protests of Alaskan citizens and favored the companies affiliated with the Trust which includes as its most important unit the Alaska Packers' Association, whose vice-president is R. I. Bentley, Hoover's close personal friend, and one of whose directors is C. H. Bentley, another close personal friend.

INJUNCTION LAWYER OUT OF HIS JOB

Association Economizes By Canning LeBosky

When 43 garment strikers face Judge Charles H. Foell in Superior Court on injunction proceedings this morning they will miss the familiar figure of the Chicago Association of Dres Lee LeBosky, prosecutor for the Chicago Association of Dress Manufacturers.

LeBosky, former attorney for former union manufacturers, is largely responsible for the present strike by the pressure he brought to bear on his clients to abandon their agreement. Since the strike began he led his clients into the anti-labor association and was rewarded by Dudley Taylor with the lucrative job of injunction attorney.

Association Short of Funds.

Now Taylor has been compelled to drop LeBosky. Association expenses, some of theemployers admit, have become too heavy. The strike is harder than they were led to expect by LeBosky. It is costing them too much and there is no sign of the workers being deefated.

Injunction hearings will continue with a crippled legal staff. Dudley Taylor will have to handle the work himself. This in spit of the fact that the work is becoming harder than ever; 43 cases coming up tomorrow and dragging out through the week. In addition ther is the work o framing up arrests of pickets.

Assailed Daily Worker.

LeBosky has been a vicious foe of every force behind the strike. In a recent injunction hearing he took up much of the session in attacks on the DAILY WORKER. Every striker who appeared before him was asked regarding his reading of the DAILY WORKER and his connection with the labor paper.

Before the strike, vice-president Perlstein said, LeBosky as attorney for nine union manufacturers received a fee of $200 each from them, totally $1,800 a year. Not satisfied with those modest returns LeBosky led his clients into the sthike. When the union made its demands on the non-union manufacturers LeBosky persuaded his clients to refuse an agreement; then obtaining an injunction from Judge Sullivan he became such a shining open shop figure that the new Chicago Association of Dress Manufacturers, founded in March thru the offices of Dudley Taylor and the Chicago Employers' Association, re-

Georgia State Is Made Big Prison For Working Class

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, April 29. — The Georgia state federation of labor, in convention, has protested against a recent Georgia law forbidding the workers in that state from leaving it except when the state labor commissioner is officially informed that this labor "can well be spared."

No direct move to repeal the law or to defy it was made by the convention; it simply denounced the law as a vicious attack on the liberties of the people. The organized labor movement in the state is extremely weak.

PRESIDENT PARDONS BIG BOOTLEGGER

Criminal Never Served Day In Jail

WASHINGTON, April 29.—President Coolidge pardoned a Chicago saloonkeeper charged with violating the Volstead act after the late President Harding had twice denied clemency in the case, James A. Finch, pardon attorney in the department of justice, today told the Senate Daugherty investigating committee.

Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, now czar of organized baseball, who sentenced Philip Grossman, the saloonkeeper, to a year in jail, was immediately subpoenaed by the committee.

Harding Denied Plea.

Altho Grossman lost his appeal to the higher court, Finch said, the saloonkeeper never served a day in jail.

Two attempts were made to get a pardon for Grossman, Finch said. The late President Harding, in July, 1923, wrote on the papers in the case that no consideration could be given the case until after part of the sentence was served, he declared.

Later, Finch said, Attorney General Edward J. Brundage of Illinois wrote to Attorney General Daugherty on Grossman's behalf, stating that the complaining witness in the case had been discredited and Grossman should not serve his sentence.

A letter was also written for Grossman by C. W. Middlekauff, special assistant to the attorney general, Finch said.

"Is Middlekauff the man who was protecting the brewers and bootleggers in Chicago?" asked Wheeler.

"I do not know about that," replied Finch.

Finch produced a petition for Grossman's pardon signed by Fred Upham, treasurer of the Republican national committee, and Homer Galpin, chairman of the Cook county Republican organization.

CAL TRADED DAM SITE TO FORD FOR AID

Telegrams Are Said To Be Startling

WASHINGTON, April 29.—Chairman Norris of the Senate agriculture committee promised today to produce more startling telegrams bearing on Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals nitrate plant.

Norris has a half dozen more messages that passed between James M. Miller, former employe of the "Dearborn Independent," Ford's publication, and E. G. Liebold, the auto magnate's secretary, and W. G. Cameron, an employe of the Independent. Norris refused to say what the messages contain.

Liebold Has Telegrams.

Liebold, who was subpoenaed Saturday, has been ordered to bring with him all correspondence relating to Muscle Shoals, Norris announced.

He explained that Miller was no longer on the Ford payroll. Miller, Norris said, had several differences with Ford and was let out. He now has a suit in the courts for recovery of salary due.

Pinchot Hits Ford Scheme.

Agriculture and industry in the south would be "hamstrings" if Henry Ford's offer for Muscle Shoals was accepted, Gov. Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania, told the Senate Agriculture Committee today.

Pinchot said Muscle Shoals "is the key to the farm and industry situation in the south" and should not be turned over to Ford because "his offer guarantees nothing."

N. Y. Bakers to Strike.

AUBURN, N. Y. April 28.—Auburn bakers will walk out on May 1, if their demands for a salary increase are not met. Bakers demand an increase of $1 to $6 a week. They are now getting $35 a week. Some foremen are receiving $40 and $45.

275 CHILDREN LOSE FATHERS, 87 WOMEN WIDOWED IN DISASTER

BENWOOD, W. Va., April 29—Fifty bodies had been removed from the Benwood Mill mine here, where 114 men were entombed by a gas explosion Monday morning, it was learned from officers of the Wheeling Steel Corporation, the firm operating the mine, this afternoon.

Thirty other bodies found in the workings by rescue squads, have been brought to the level at the Benwood entrance of the mine and will be raised to the surface tonight.

Rescue workers continued to fight their way onward thru underground passageways in an attempt to locate other victims of the disaster, which was one of the worst in the annals of West Virginia.

At least 87 women were widowed and 275 children were made fatherless by the disaster, according to Mayor John Cox of Benwood, who is directing relief measures for families left destitute.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BENWOOD, W. VA., April 29.—No hope was held out today for rescue alive of the 114 miners entombed in the Benwood Mill mine of Wheeling Steel Corporation 24 hours ago by a terrific gas explosion that tore down mine supports, letting loose tons of earth on the trapped men.

Officials of the mine admitted that it would be a miracle should any miner be rescued alive.

Fifty-four crushed and burned bodies were brought to the surface today from the workings. One of them was identified as the body of George Holliday, Jr., son of the mine superintendent.

Brothers Die Near Exit.

Clasped arm in arm, the bodies of Rocco and Michael Capabianco were found near the Brown's Run air shaft today. The two brothers had escaped the roof falls and fire that followed the blast, only to be overcome by fire damp within a few hundred yards of fresh air.

Isaac M. Scott, president of the open shop Wheeling Steel Corporation, today issued a statement saying

"Sunny California" Gloomy—Business Hurt By Quarantine

LOS ANGELES, Calif., April 29.—According to the latest Dun report, California "Banks are showing a slight tendency toward contraction." Real estate has fallen off tremendously, building is on the downgrade and retail trade is "punk." The long expected "hard times" have set in. Thousands are out of work and the Chamber of Commerce is so worried that they are trying to smuggle workers to other states on the plea that there is work elsewhere. The "hoof and mouth" disease is helping to throw the "hibbie jibbies" into the business men of this golden state.

Workers Lured to Chicago From Many States Charge Scab Herders Lied to Them

Good union men from many parts of the country were besieging the employment office of the Pullman Plant today, demanding their transportation money back and threatening legal action against the Pullman Company for hiring them under false pretenses.

Labor agents and officials of the Pullman Plant hired men in Detroit, Mich.; Columbus, Ohio; St. Louis, Mo.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Lockport, Ill.; Davenport, Iowa, and many other places, telling them on their word of honor that there was no labor trouble of any kind.

The Pullman plant showed its first signs of weakening under the splendid picketing of the strikers, when officials tried to entice the reamers to desert the strike by offering them almost their complete demands.

The reamers decided at yesterday's strike meeting, that any reamer who goes back to work is a scab, and the reamers will not go back to work until the strike is completely won.

Late yesterday more than one hundred policemen, packinghouse guards, private Pullman Company thugs, and plain clothes men came out in autos and threatened strikers who were selling the DAILY WORKER with arrest.

The case of Nick Spynow, who Monday was fired on by a drunken policeman, officer Minton, who threatened to hit children who were playing in the streets, was set for jury trial May 8th, in Municipal Court Branch 38. Minton, whose number is 4864, turned up drunk. His clothes were bedraggled and torn, and policemen around the court room said he had been out boozing and joy riding and had upset in his flivver.

Alderman Sees Policeman Fired

Alderman Sheldon W. Govier read the circular entitled "The Kept Government of the United States," and said there was no cause to arrest a man for distributing this hand-bill.

Alderman Govier declared that, in his belief, Nick Spynow was within the law, and that if Spynow is found not guilty in the trial, Officer Minton's is very likely to find himself on an involuntary strike.

"No Strike," Says Agent

Five men from Detroit, told the DAILY WORKER that a man named Baxter, who has offices in the Frontenac Hotel, Detroit, assured them on his word of honor that there was no strike or no labor trouble of any kind. Thomas Doig and Archibald Caldwell, two of these men, signed affidavits declaring that the Pullman Company had under false pretences made them pay their own transportation to the plant from Detroit. They have given these affidavits to the strikers, and legal action will be taken. The matter will probably be brought before the corporation council by alderman Govier.

Wait All Day For Fare

The men were kept waiting the entire day for their transportation money, and late yesterday, after failing to get it, put the matter in the hands of a lawyer. These two men addressed the strikers. They said that in the steel shop, which ordinarily mans over 700 men, less than 40 are at work, and these aren't doing anything.

Ryan, the steel foreman, assured these men that they would be protected by city policemen, that they would get two dollars a day more than the strikers demand, and that they would be supplied with boarding houses. One of these boarding houses is on Cottage Grove Avenue, near 93rd Street. The strikers have served notice on the boarding house keeper that he must kick out all scabs

DEMAND FOR DAILY WORKER GROWS SPITE OF POLICE THREATS

The demand for the DAILY WORKER increased yesterday, in Pullman, in spite of threats of the policemen made to DAILY WORKER salesmen. Several plain clothes officers tried to scare Nick Spynow, Miss Anna Todday and John Harvey, who were assisting the strikers in selling the DAILY WORKER in front of the many Pullman Company gates. Nick Spynow, who was arrested Monday for selling the DAILY WORKER, was again threatened by the police yesterday.

Spynow was selling the DAILY WORKER in front of the gate to the employment office at 110th street, when several uniformed policemen shoved him down to 103rd street. The DAILY WORKER representative called on Desk Sergeant 432 and on acting captain Wheeler and told them that the DAILY WORKER would continue to send Nick Spynow and others out to sell the DAILY WORKER. Both men admitted that there is no law preventing the sale of newspapers on the streets. Alderman Govier told the DAILY WORKER representative to go ahead and sell the paper, as there is no law against it.

Representatives of the DAILY WORKER were roughly handled by the police last night. Jack MacCarthy was threatened by several plain clothes thugs, and told to leave. Anna Todday was shoved from one gate to another by the drunken policemen. But the DAILY WORKER representatives continued to sell the paper.

WAR MEET THANKS GOD FOR GOMPERS

Woll Urges Plutes To Block Labor Party

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK, April 29.—Thanking God for the co-operation of Samuel Gompers and the high officials of the American Federation of Labor, speakers at the 24th annual convention of the National Civic Federation which was held in the Laurel room of the Astor Hotel, denounced pacifists and pacifism, urged better relations between capital and labor, and demanded a larger army and navy.

Samuel Gompers was reelected vice-president of the federation. The aged labor faker endorsed the Fascisti scheme of unionism and Matthew Woll, one of the vice-presidents of the A. F. of L., implored the capitalists to offer a few sops to the workers and farmers in order to block the growth of the farmer-labor party movement.

Alton B. Parker, chairmen of the convention declared, that churchmen and educators were willing to do their share in the next war.

These Christian churchmen generously denounced pacifism and pacifists, particularly those accepting the pledge "never again to give financial or moral support to any war," as traitors, serpents and agents of Bolshevism. These epithets were wildly applauded by the audience whose average military age was around 60.

A general angry murmer arose when the somewhat unpleasant views

No Issue of The Daily Worker, May 2

There will be no issue of the DAILY WORKER, May 2nd. This means that Thursday, May 1st, will bea holiday for the DAILY WORKER. But it will be a holiday for greater work for the DAILY WORKER staff and the whole Communist movement in the United States.

Practically all the members of the editorial and business office, as well as the mechanical departments, will be active in May Day meetings, either as speakers or in the arrangements.

All workers should make a real working class holiday of this International May Day, Thursday, May 1st.

Get an inspiration from the workers in the union machine shop of the Winkler-Reichmann Co., at 4801 S. Morgan St., Chicago.

The men employed in this shop, of a half dozen different nationalities, will not be at their work benches on May Day. They have announced that they will spend the day distributing copies of the DAILY WORKER and union organization literature. The shop will be closed and all those who do not join in the celebration of May Day, thru the distribution of literature, and other activities will be fined $3.

Workers! Remember that if it is absolutely impossible for you to get off the job for this one day, the appeal issued by the Workers Party is that you contribute the day's wages to the DAILY WORKER. Workers! Forward for International May Day, 1924.

that 114 men had entered the mine on Monday morning. This was the first time the exact number of men caught in the disaster was made known.

"The explosion unquestionably came from gas," Scott said. "We have no idea how the gas developed which caused the explosion."

The Benwood mine is an old working and gas has been discovered in it before. There have been three severe explosions during the last two years. Scott admits that a small explosion occurred only two months ago.

A small army of expert rescue workers, recruited from Bureau of Mines cars and mines in the vicinity of Benwood, were still groping their way thru the caverns of the earth today searching for the 88 men unaccounted for.

While the rescue squads worked untiringly, the entire population of Benwood—4,773 men, women and children—huddled on a muddy hillside outside the Benwood mine gate, hoping against hope as the hours passed by that their fathers, husbands and brothers might have escaped death.

The cause of the explosion is still undetermined. Officials of the scab steel company have refused any information. The force of the explosion blew away the earth embankment of the B. & O. railway tracks at the mouth of the mine. Tons of earth and rock caved in on the miners, completing the trap in which they were caught, and making doubtful their survival.

Rescue crews from Moundsville, eight miles away, were delayed by taking a roundabout course to Benwood. Clouds of gas and smoke were pouring from the mine when the rescuers arrived, and the entrance to the mine was blocked.

SHADY SHYSTER CANNED BY BOSSES STRIKE WINNING

warded him with the job from which he has just ben released to cut expenses of the weakening association.

Commenting on the situation vice-president Perlstein said the union and the strike weer strong and the workers would carry the fight on until the employers were forced to recognize the union's just demands and grant the union shop.

Association Members Negotiations

Several of the association's members are now negotiating with the union. They are ready to break away from the association to prevent their business from going to smash but they are still holding out for more favorable terms. Union officials declare that the bosses must yield to full union terms.

The fact that the Chicago dressmakers' local instructed its delegates to the coming Boston convention to demand support for a prolonged fight here was a factor in weakening the determination of association members.

Solidarity With Expelled.

Another blow to the bosses is the interesting solidarity in the union ranks. This solidarity was shown when the Chicago local stood by the expelled members and instructed the delegates to demand their reinstatement in the union.

Chicago Labor Contributing.

The strike fund drive among Chicago local unions is meeting with success from the start. The laters' union gave $100; eight-seven dollars was collected from Carpenters' Local No. 181 when strikers made their appeal and much more isexpected from the union meetng next Monday to which every member is specially invited; twenty-five dollars a week for four weeks is pledged by Carpenters' Local No. 1467. These reports come from the first day of the drive which is expected to bring in thousands of dollars.

A May Day dance will be held at the strikers' headquarters, 180 W. Washington St. in honor of International Labor Day.

Y. W. L. Juniors Help Luxemburg Branch In Entertainment

Over a hundred dollars was raised at a concert and dance of the Luxemburg Branch, Young Workers League, Sunday night, at the Workers' Lyceum.

Members of the Junior Section, who were scarcely more than four years old took an active part in making the evening's program a success. A very little girl danced—she couldn't have been more than two. And the young lady who played the piano for the accompaniment to the mass singing of the International was a tiny youngster of four.

The Luxemburg Branch is a young one, only eight months old, but it considers itself quite grown-up when it can raise a hundred dollars in one evening and have a good time about it.

STANDARD OIL WINNER WHEN WILSON REGIME FAILED TO PROTECT U. S. NAVAL RESERVES IN CALIFORNIA

WASHINGTON, April 29.—The Wilson administration failed to protect fully the California Naval Oil reserves, Willard W. Cutler, geologist, charged before the Senate oil committee today.

Before the republican administration came into office March 4, 1921, the Government lost $3,200,000 worth of oil by failing to drill proper offset wells in the California reserves, Cutler said.

DEMAND PULLMAN COMPANY RETURN FARE TO VICTIMS

or else his name and hotel will be exposed.

When the men from Detroit demanded their money late yesterday, they were told by J. O'Leary, employment manager for the Pullman Company, "Like hell you'll get your transportation money."

Herrin Miner Boost Unionism

Henry Jacobs, a miner from Herrin, Ill., answered the ad run there for men. He addressed the strikers yesterday, telling them about the growth of unionism in Herrin. He declared that the men should stick to the strike until it is won.

A collection over 30 dollars was donated by the strikers to out of town men who arrived destitute from far off points, not knowing of the strike, and who refused to scab.

When the DAILY WORKER reporter announced to the strikers that the proceeds of the May Day meeting next Thursday night would be donated to the Pullman strikers, the strikers cheered. The meeting will be held in Stans Stancik's Hall, 205 East 115th Street, and many of the strikers declared their intention of attending.

Bosses Spread Wild Rumors

The Pullman Company is trying to shake the solidarity of the strikers by spreading many wild rumors. But they cannot longer deny that production is at a standstill. Their illegal acts in sending out lying labor agents to scour the country for riveters, reamers, buckers, fitters and buckers has reacted against them. The men are arriving by every train from distant points, and many autos filled with out-of-town workers are turning up in Pullman. But as soon as they learn of the strike, these workers leave the plant, and demand their transportation money.

The picketing yesterday was better than at any time since the start, and the strike meeting was bigger. More men have joined the union on the appeal of John Holmgren, strike leader, and there are plenty of volunteer picketers. Laborers in the plant who are not on strike have been idle for over a week. Yesterday these men were idling about the lawns of the Pullman Company watering the grass and transplanting sod, instead of their usual job of hauling around steel plates.

The DAILY WORKER is in big demand, in spite of the threats made against those distributing it.

Hegewisch Meeting Tonight

A strikers' mass meeting will be held in Hegewisch, Wednesday, April 30, tonight, at Ginalsky's Hall, 13257 Houston Avenue. There are almost as many men on strike in Hegewisch as there are at Pullman. Encouraged by the success of the strikers at Pullman, the Hegewisch strikers are increasing their picketing and strike organization.

D. Earley, of the Amalgamated Food Workers will speak to the strikers and will tell the progress of the strike. J. Kowalski, the internationally known lecturer, will speak in Polish. The meeting will be held under the auspices of the Hegewisch Strike Committee. Pullman strikers and all men who work in the Pullman shops are also invited.

The Pullman strikers are planning to hold a monster mass meeting toward the end of this week. The meeting will be definitely announced in the DAILY WORKER as soon as details are arranged. Two thousand copies of the DAILY WORKER, a special edition giving all the latest Pullman news, will be sold by the strikers.

Mexican Governor Helps Strikers Win —Cursed by Bosses

MEXICO CITY, April 29.—The electricians' strike in San Louis Potosi, was settled satisfactorily for the workers. They received a 15 per cent increase and obtained the dismissal of the 36 unorganized workers. All reaction is up in arms. They are cursing at this victory and blaming it on the "red" governor of that state—Aurelio Manrique.

The press now calls him the "unconstitutional governor." They accuse him of being quite out of his head—of having swallowed a dictionary in his high school days, of using the polite archaic form "vos" even to his servants—and a host of other "serious" charges—and all because once in a life time a governor has used the state to aid the workers instead of the bosses.

MONSTER MASS MEETINGS WILL MARK MAY DAY

Hundreds of Thousands To Celebrate

The exploited working class thruout the world will meet on this May Day to celebrate the growing power of labor, to take lessons from their defeats and prepare for future battles.

In every capitalist city in Europe where the labor organizations are not crushed under the heel of Fascist dictatorship, monster gatherings of workers will take place. In London, Hyde Park, will be the rendezvous for the greatest throng of revolutionary workers in the history of the radical movement in that country.

In Russia, now the "land of the free", gigantic demonstrations will be held all over the country at which government officials will speak, and Red Army chiefs will tell the workers that the Soviet power has built itself a weapon that will protect the workers' revolution until world Communism relieves the Soviet of all dangers from more capitalist attacks.

In the United States, the stronghold of imperialist reaction, the workers will meet at hundreds of meetings and listen to speeches urging them to greater efforts in the future to build an organization that will be the leader and the backbone of the movement to throw off the yoke of capitalism and establish the rule of the workers in America. The slogan at these meetings will be "A class Labor Party on June 17."

The eyes of thousands of workers will be turned in the direction of St. Paul, where the great convention to establish a national class Farmer-Labor Party will be held. Thus the American workers are laying the ground-work for the gigantic task ahead of them.

G. O. P. GOVERNOR GOES TO PRISON FOR SWINDLING

Indiana Republican Pick McCray's Successor

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 29.—Warren T. McCray, Governor of Indiana, was a prisoner in the bull pen of "federal row" at the Marion County jail today.

Stunned by the verdict of the jury in federal court finding him guilty of fraudulent use of the mails, the Governor was ordered to jail by Judge Anderson to await sentence Wednesday.

The governor spent the night in a room with eighty-four other prisoners.

From the moment he heard the reading of the verdict until the prison doors closed behind him, McCray refused to make any comment on the case, or to indicate whether he would resign from the governorship.

Emmett F. Branch, of Martinsville, Lieut. Governor of Indiana, will become governor of the state within 48 hours, and McCray will resign, it was made known today.

Goes to Atlanta.

McCray will not appeal his case, but will serve the sentence to be imposed upon him by Judge Anderson Wednesday morning, it was stated. Plans are to take him to the federal prison at Atlanta, Georgia, on Thursday by United States Marshal Linus P. Meredith.

With these events the curtain will fall upon the final act in the turbulent administration of Governor McCray.

Chances of appeal in the federal court case were regarded as slight.

FRANCE TO KEEP MILITARY GRIP ON THE RUHR

Poincare May Wreck the Dawes Plan

PARIS, April 29.—The reparations commission met today and considered the replies of the allied governments on the experts report and discussed whom they should nominate on the reorganization committees.

It is believed the commission will be forced to mark time as far as acting on the government's replies is concerned, until the results of negotiations by Premier Theunis of Belgium with Premiers Poincare of France and MacDonald of Great Britain become known.

Will Hold Ruhr.

Despite secrecy as to details of yesterday's Franco-Belgian conversations, it has leaked out that Poincare and Theunis agreed in principle upon a compromise which will permit a continued united front by these countries as far as the Ruhr is conocerned. Military occupation will be continued in some form even tho the experts plan is put in operation.

It is understood Theunis urged that occupation eventually be modified toward "invisibility." He proposed occupation of vital centers only in case the Germans executed the plan with good will.

The Belgian premier is believed to have secured promises of concessions from Poincare which will enable him to bring the French and British viewpoints appreciably closer when he has a talk with Premier MacDonald over the wek-end.

NEW YORK, April 29.—Charles G. Dawes announced today on his arrival from Germany that his plan has ended a five-year guessing contest. He expressed fear that unless the plan was immediately accepted, the German rentenmark would break and chaos, the precursor of revolution would engulf Europe in disaster.

COST OF LIVING AND WAGES TRAVELING FAST IN OPPOSITE DIRECTIONS; WORST YET TO COME

CHICAGO, April 29.—The cost of living continues upward and will be much higher during the next 10 or 15 years than it is today. The agricultural depression, excessive production of foodstuffs and the flow of the agricultural population to the cities are combining to push prices upward, the foundation said.

"City populations are coming to look upon cheap food as a normal thing," the foundation declared. "Complaints will be loud in a few years when prices reach the higher levels. Agricultural output is gradually diminishing and cities which have had the advance of low prices for food and higher incomes compared with 10 or 15 years ago will suffer.

"Once prices for agricultural products have increased it will take a long time to restore the agricultural population to normal. Not until a new generation of farm youth matures will the deficit be made good.

WAR MONGERS IN MEET THANK GOD FOR SAM GOMPERS

of the Rev. Selden P. Delaney, an Episcopalian rector of New York, was read. In his letter he declared: "In the case of a war for national defense, we should fight to repel the invader. During the last war the U. S. flag was never exhibited in our church of St. Mary, the Virgin. We believe that the fundamental cause of war is the capitalistic system which dominates the world today, and which the N. C. F. is doing so much to defend. We would suggest that much more could be done to avoid war in the future if capitalism could be restricted in its greedy competition for the markets of the world so that it could no longer plunge innocent people into bloody warfare to enrich a few millionaires.

Brig. Gen. Leigh R. Gignilliat of Indiana, declared that the country needed 150,000 officers to take charge of an army of three million men, the number which would be necessary in "a major emergency". Pacifist propaganda in the schools and colleges was making it difficult to get sufficient volunteers for the Reserve Officers Training Camps. The R. O. T. C. were not militaristic; they inculcated discipline and respect for authority which are the chief aims of education.

Pacifist propaganda was having a very bad effect on the numbers attending the Citizens' Military Training Camps, warned Wheeler P. Bloodgood of Wisconsin. It was taking the energetic efforts of a press gang of 70,000 members of the C. M. T. C. Association to induce young men to attend these camps. In 1921, the armed forces of the country almost dissolved thru lack of volunteers. Very few employers are willing to give their employees time off for this purpose. Employers must co-operate for "what would banks, insurance and business amount to without a military force to protect them?" Wisconsin Socialists were not so bad, declared Bloodgood. A prominent Socialist there, speaking to him privately, in regard to the National Defense Act of 1920, said: "When the time comes, I'll do no different than you. I cannot approve of this act publicly, but I won't oppose it so strenuously".

The speaker ended with a laudation of Samuel Gompers, who was in the audience. "If Gompers and his friends didn't approve of the Defense Act, our voices would amount to nothing. Thank God, we're getting co-operation from Organized Labor! Thank God, for Gompers!"

Gompers For Fascist Unions.

Samuel Gompers endorsed the principle of the company union as the new industrial policy of the A. F. of L. Explaining the term "industrial democracy" as used by the A. F. of L., he said: "Disregarding the question of selfish motives, we see employers organizing company unions in order to convey the idea that industrial democracy prevails in their plant. In principle, we want this industrial democracy, but instead of having it by each distinct company, we would have it by association or trust. We wish to have employers and employees all members of one association".

Supports Trusts.

Mr. Gompers spoke in a low, weak voice and seemed to experience mental difficulty in passing from one subject to the other. The A. F. of L., under his leadership, he declared, had always been in favor of giving commerce, business and industry, complete freedom to combine and trustify. He attacked the Sherman anti-trust law as preventing the fullest development of capital thru consolidation. This law also hindered the combination of capital and labor along lines of Johnson's Baltimore and Ohio scheme, and thus curbed the development of peace between capital and labor. This new policy of Gompers is nothing less than an organic alliance between Big Business and the bureaucracy of organized labor to crush the middle class and to reduce the working masses to a state of industrial serfdom.

Wright Treated Like Dog.

Chester Wright followed his chief with a talk on the subject "From Moscow to Broadway". The audience expected a treat in the way of an expose revealing Moscow's control of The Great White Way and the use of the movies and cabarets to overthrow the government. But Wright handed out the stale stuff about Moscow's inciting the Communists here to violence and the labor party. In passing, the speaker asserted: "The delightful thing about the Communists is, they tell the world what they propose to do." He then described the various innocent looking organizations created by the Communists as a camouflage and cover for their activities. "We shall watch events at St. Paul," he added, "realizing, as the Communists do, that before that defense is eliminated they can't get any further". Mr. Wright was treated very shabbily by the chairman. Several millionaires at the back of the room had to strain to hear the speaker. The chairman interferred several times and peremptorily let the speaker know, as one would a hired man, that he had better speak louder.

Government agents are covering meetings of pacifist organizations. This piece of information came from Captain Dart of the Army Intelligence Department, who made a sorry mess trying to explain the details of organization of the women's peace associations and their relation to Communism. The N. C. F. adopted a proposal of the captain to organize inner groups in alumni associations who would impress upon their college presidents that "this stuff of radical propaganda and speakers in the colleges has got to stop or we will withdraw all moral and financial support. The alumni have got to tell the undergraduates what they can do".

Matt Advises Plutes.

The two major parties were called upon by Mathew Woll to hinder the success of the Farmer-Labor Party movement by throwing a few sops at the eleventh hour to the farmers and wage earners. He called for "direct concessions" for the workers. He did not specifically mention Lewis' and Berry's candidatures for the vice-presidency on the capitalist tickets. It was his belief that the abolition of the Rail Labor Board with a return to voluntary agreements would keep railway labor away from a labor party. The Gompers officialdom, he declared, oppose the founding of a labor party because such a class party to justify its existence, must sooner or later fight for the abolition of private property, that is for Communism.

Priest Admits Workers' Rule.

Dr. Edmund M. A. Walsh, Vatican representative for Famine Relief, in Soviet Russia, did his best to give his audience what they wanted on the "somber tragedy of Russia". However, he tacitly admitted that the possibilities for trade were good, and described the predominance of the worker over the business man in government, in the shop, in business, in economy and in education and religion. In answer to questions, he stated that the churches were all open to the people "at this time," and that Russia should be met halfway in the matter of recognition.

The only speech broadcasted was that of John Hays Hammond. This millionaire capitalist apologist explained the wonders of capitalism in America. Some of these wonders were the result of the fight carried on by the labor leaders against the nationalization of industry. The N. C. F. has rendered a great service by winning the co-operation of these leaders. The number of tenant and mortgaged farmers had indeed increased, declared Mr. Hammond. He interpreted this fact as a promise of greater prosperity in the country. He did not specify for whom. His speech, in fact, sparkled with gems. Business ethics are higher now than ever. Two per cent of the people do not own 65 per cent of the wealth, they own only 30 per cent. The poor are getting richer, etc.

Several resolutions were adopted embodying the thoughts of the various speakers. Mathew Woll presided at this session.

Baby's Funeral Stopped By W. Va. Barons' Police

By TOM TIPPETT.

(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

A labor injunction now in force on Cabin Creek in Kanawha county, where the coal miners are on strike, provides among other things six months in jail and a fine of $50 for a striker caught "speaking with" a strikebreaker. West Virginia mounted police infest the creek to enforce the court order.

The same injunction prevents the strikers from trespassing on company property. Last winter a baby died in a tent colony, occupied by strikers. Arrangements to bury the body were made in the regular cemetery—owned by the coal company. As the funeral approached the graveyard it was haulted by the police. No amount of pleading could melt the order from the courts. The mourners were turned back. The body was finally interred on a bleak hillside owned by a farmer.

After the union was established on Cabin Creek in 1912 peace reigned and a church was built by the miners. The Christian coal operator "donated" the ground. All the officials of the church were union men. Services were continued uniterruptedly until 1922 when the present strike occurred. When the strikers appeared the first Sunday in the strike for church services, the door was locked with a new padlock. Armed guards were on duty to prevent services. The church remained closed until it was recently opened for the strikebreakers who attend church regularly to hear the company minister preach. The church was built and is owned by the union men. But the operators' thugs keep them away with a gun. Wm. Blizzard, who was tried for treason and murder in connection with the armed march, attended this church. His father was a deacon of the church in the union days.

A Negro woman, wife of a strikebreaker, revealed an economic angle of the race question to me when I asked her why her husband had left a plantation job to work in the mines.

"Hundred's of miners are killed every week in the mines,"

TENANTS WILL STRIKE AGAINST RENT INCREASES

Monster Protest Mass Meeting Tonight

Driven to desperation by the greedy exactions of the landlords, a mass meeting will be held tonight under the auspices of the Tenants' League to make plans for the organization of the May Day Rent strike.

The meeting will be held in Venetion Hall, Douglas Park Blvd. at the corner of Ogden and Kedzie. The members of the Tenants' League will pledge themselves not to move or accept unreasonable rent increases.

"Innumerable children are under-nourished and poorly fed, even in the better residential districts, directly because of the profiteering of heartless landlords," states Mrs. Mary E. Holland who has just finished a 6-months' investigation of renting conditions and reported to the Woman's City Club.

The landlord takes most of a man's income nowadays, according to Mrs. Holland. As a result many children are given "only a dry crust of bread and perhaps only a sip of milk" each morning. This requires the schools in many cities to supplement the home diet with special cracker-and-milk feeding of markedly under-nourished children.

Chicago has some militant tenants, of the 300,000 that ordinarily have to move each May, who are planning a vigorous stand against the greed of the landlords this year.

As one investigator remarks, "to what purpose is all this moving? There is only a reshuffling of tenants . . . the unhealthy tenements remain fully occupied."

In the shortage of housing facilities of reasonable rent, many workers are forced to live in single room "apartments." Often a family of three or four, including small children, are forced into one room and consider themselves lucky to get a landlord who will take children.

One reporter remarks that only once has a sign been seen "Children Welcome" and that was on a wretched old house in which the neat but shabby interior was trying to belie the exterior becmudged by Chicago soot.

Many little children are scarcely permitted out of their limited quarters, especially in winter. In summer they are allowed the freedom of a filthy street for a few hours. Their mothers have to lock them up when they go marketing.

Building reports for Chicago indicate a boom season, but most of the buildings have been apartments along the lake front or big bank buildings downtown. Builders aren't interested in the profits of the landlords of smaller flats. As a consequence, workers are forced to accept dwellings that have long since been cast off by the "better classes" in their retreat to the outskirts of the city. Where the workers are able to rent a modest flat, the landlord is sure to neglect to repair it and then soak them an increase in rent when the lease runs out.

It is to attempt to prevent some of these evils that the tenants of the Northwest side are rebelling. They realize that if enough of the tenants refuse to move, the rent-hogs will not be able to cheat the workers this year. It is only when everyone submits to the landlords' decree that he can raise rents all around. If tenants do not offer to pay increased rents and refuse to move, the landlord is stuck. He cannot attempt wholesale evictions in a city the size of Chicago.

A correspondent informs us that taxes have increased three times during the last year, correcting the statement of J. Ritchie Patterson who claimed they had not increased.

University of Chicago students are joining the fight against increased rents in the dormitories. It was proposed that 20 per cent rent increases in rentals be made in the students rooms. The students protested at once that Hyde Park rents generally were being raised only 12 per cent.

The President of the University has promised to make a statement before the end of the week.

Exploiter Of Child Mill Slaves Wants Germans To Starve

WASHINGTON, April 29.—When Senator Dial of South Carolina, cotton-mill magnate and foe of the child-labor law, protested against the proposed appropriation of $10,000,000 to feed the starving women and children of Germany, he was taken to task by Sen. Copeland of New York.

Copeland suggested that Dial's own children were well enough nourished, and that even if it were permissable to hate the soldiers of Germany it was not decent to hate the women and children who make up 80 per cent of the population.

"I haye seen tens of thousands of these starved children, their every bone showing in their thin little bodies," said Copeland, "and I have seen thousands who had not cut their teeth up to the age of ten years. The well-nourished children of my South Carolina friend cut their teeth in the first months of their existence.

"Tubrculosis develops in the under-fed of these victims of hunger. Nine cases of new arrivals who had developed the disease after reaching this country, were brought to a clinic from one district in New York City. Let us feed the children in Germany and put down disease for our own protection, if we have no better motive."

Forget that you were once a slave.
Sing, shout, cheer—join in,
Now all together—we're sure to win!

Colleges Debate Socialism.

MONTREAL, April 29.—A debate between the Montreal Labor college and McGill university attracted attention here. The subject was: "Resolved that Socialism has a program which, if put into operation, would solve the present world unrest, and restore peace and confidence to the people.

Lucy Page Gaston, Chicago leader of the anti-cigarette movement, has started suit for $20,000 against the Chicago Street Railway Company for injuries sustained last January when she was struck by a street car. Charges of negligence are made in the bill.

BOSTON CHEERS FOR RENEWED T. U. E. L. MEETS

Browder and Johnstone Speak to Workers

By WM. SIMONS.

BOSTON, Mass., April 29.— No Trade Union Educational League meeting here for a whole year engendered tremendous enthusiasm for the one addressed by Earl Browder and J. W. Johnstone last night in Credit Union Hall. About one hundred and fifty workers came to hear the message from these men who are in intimate contact with the militants in the industries, in the fight for amalgamation, for the June 17th Farmer-Labor Party Convention, and for Recognition of Soviet Russia.

Johnstone, assistant secretary of the National T. U. E. L., in his sturdy forceful manner, covered the many International Conventions he was privileged to attend, including the recent Miners' Convention. The small band of progressives, their ceaseless fight against the reactionary machine, the autocratic tactics of the labor misleaders were recounted to show what a handful of determined workers could accomplish against seemingly impossible odds.

Browder Analyzes Labor Parties.

Browder, editor of the Labor Herald, dug deeply into the economic and political structure of the country. He analyzed the divisions in the labor movement, the class divisions between the exploited rank and file and the exploiting labor leaders allied with the employing class. He pointed out the differences in the British Labor Party, a revolutionary force historically, and the capitalistically minded leaders of that party. Some such condition would probably result in America in the early stages of the Labor party movement.

The movement for a labor party in America took the form not of a Labor Party, but for a Farmer-Labor Party. The farmers are a definite revolutionary force, because of the large proportion of them whose property has been taken from them. This permits an alignment by the farmer with the worker, who sells his labor power to the capitalists. In closing, Browder urged the importance of launching local State and City Farmer-Labor Parties, referring to the planned June 1st Convention in Boston, where a State Farmer-Labor Party will be launched.

The Boston T. U. E. L., under whose auspices the meeting was held, plans to hold similar meetings every month, to which will be invited militants from all points in the state. It was announced that a meeting of the building trades group would take place on Wednesday, April 30th, at 8 p. m., at 60 Pemberton Square, Boston.

FARMER-LABOR PARTY CAMPAIGN FUND GETS NEW BIG IMPETUS

PARTY AT WORK

The call to action issued by the party in relation to the raising of the $15,000 Farmer-Labor Party campaign fund has stirred some of the party branches to a realization of the importance of the work which the party now has under way.

This is shown in the increase in the responses to the appeal that each branch raise $10 if it has less than 25 members and to raise $25 if it has more than 25 members.

Altho the appeal has not had time to come before many branches, the number of contributions is already increasing and reports received during the last few days includes the following:

WILKES-BARRE LABOR FORCES RIGHT TO MEET

American Legion Plays A Losing Game

WILKES-BARRE, April 29.—"The Teapot Dome Scandal and Civil Liberties" will be discussed here Tuesday evening, April 29th at a mass meeting aranged by the Workers' Party and American Civil Liberties Union. George Powers of New York, a member of the Sheet Metal Workers Union, and a prominent speaker from the Civil Liberties organization will address the meeting which will be held at 139 South Main St. The last meeting arranged here by the workers were broken up by the American Legion, which subsequently was given authority by Mayor Hart to decide what meetings shall and shall not be held in Wilkes-Barre.

Labor Fascisti Active

This action has been denounced by the Central Labor Union, members of the local clergy have delivered sermons against it, and Attorney General Woodruff has reecntly sent a letter to Mayor Hart pointing out that this outrageous denial of free speech was a source of great embarrassment to both himself and Governor Pinchot.

Tuesday night the workers will find out whether the combined forces of local reaction can continue to suppress working class meetings in this city. A loyal response to the call being sent out to attend this meeting will do more than anything else to break up local fascisti rule.

Old Party Graft Issue

Every possible means is being used to notify workers of all nationalities and it will be up to them to demonstrate their loyalty to their class by being present. They will thus show their determination to establish their rights and also acquaint themselves fully with the meaning of the corruption of the Democratic and Republican parties and the complete control of both by Big Business as exposed by the present Senate investigation into the Teapot Dome Oil Scandal.

ORGANIZE ALL OF STOCKYARDS' WORKERS IS AIM

May 4th Mass Meeting Called By Union

All unorganized stockyards packing house workers, white and colored, men and women, are called to assemble on Sunday, May 4, at 2 p. m. in Columbia Hall, 48th and Paulina streets.

The United Stockyards Packing House Workers of America are issuing the call. The president of the union, William Devanney, has signed the bulletin which has been sent out to packing house workers.

Headquarters of the union are at 1758 West 48th street. A legal department of health are features of the organization, which was incorporated June 22, 1922. William Cassin is general secretary-treasurer and Philip S. Denman is general vice-president.

The call is to all workers in the industry and reads:

"Here is your opportunity to join the union. We must be organized 100 per cent to get better wages and conditions. Your rents have gone up out of proportion, living is going up all the time.

"How about your wages? What are you going to do about it? What can you do?

"Your only remedy is to organize and protect yourself. The big organization campaign is on, of the United Stockyards Packing House Workers of America.

"Big mass meeting of all Stockyard workers on Sunday, May 4th, 1924, at 2 p. m., in Columbia Hall, 48th and Paulina streets.

"Come and bring all your friends."

Closed Lumber Mills Flood Labor Market

TACOMA, Wash., April 29.—The depression in business is already hitting labor here. The lumber mills over-estimated the orders Japan would give them after her disaster and have a big surplus of mechanics.

The American lumber barons boosted their prices sky-high and scared away Japanese trade, which then went to British Columbia mills.

Shingle mills in Everett have been put on a 4-day week basis.

Because of dullness in lumber camps and mills, Tacoma is oversupplied with cooks, helpers and waiters. The union cannot accommodate them all.

CAPMAKERS WILL HOLD FIRST BIG MEET THURSDAY

Union And Non-union Workers To Fight

Union and non-union capmakers are to join in a gigantic mass meeting in Crawford Hall, Roosevelt Road and Crawford street, Thursday afternoon, in which they will discuss their grievances and make plans for the conduct of the strike.

Several bosses called for a committee of three workers to negotiate with them before declaring the strike effective, but the bosses backed out at the last minute. Thursday, May Day, will be the first day of the strike against the stubborn bosses.

The union has already negotiated with the Capmakers' Association to the extent that no strike, no stoppage of work, and no lockout will occur. A committee of five workers will approach the Association and attempt to arbitrate their differences which remain after May 15th.

A large crowd is expected at the May Day mass meeting. Most of the capmakers are organized and will welcome this chance of getting their unorganized fellow workers into the union. Both men and girls work at the trade and belong to the union. The girls are mostly lining makers.

The union anticipates early settlement with the Uniform Cap Makers. There are only four of these shops and they have somewhat better conditions than many of the other shops. Their work is steadier and lasts longer. Some of the shops work at least 50 weeks of the year and pay fairly well. The union is planning negotiations now with the Uniform Cap Makers.

Many of the manufacturers can supply work only 35 or 40 weeks of the year. A few have less than this. When the workers demand 48 weeks guaranteed work, they are not pressing the boss, because numerous shops work at least that much of the year. The union asks that an unemployment fund be made by the bosses if they cannot assure their workers of 48 weeks' work.

Workers make from $30 to $45 a week now, when they work, but the varying periods of unemployment cut down the annual average. The union is asking for a $40 minimum wage. The work is "standard production," not piece-work or sweat-shop.

New York Capmakers have already won their strike and their Chicago workers expect to win theirs as readily.

Mass Meeting On Teapot Tonight At Wilkesbarre, Pa.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., April 29.—"Mass meeting to discuss the Teapot Dome Dome SCANDAL and Civil Liberties" is the call of a handball being distributed here. The meeting takes place Tuesday evening, April 29, at 7:30 o'clock at 139 South Main street.

George Powers of New York, a member of the Sheet Metal Workers' Union, and a prominent speaker from the American Civil Liberties Union, are scheduled to address the assemblage. The meeting is under the joint auspices of the Workers Party of America and the American Civil Liberties Union. Admission is free.

"The Teapot Dome oil investigation has showed clearly that both the Republican and Democratic parties are corrupt and are the parties of big business," the handbill advertises. "Come in masses to hear how high government officials loot the wealth of the nation."

Eight-Hour Day Is Law In Mexico, Not So In United States

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, April 29.—Ambassador Warren, after a preliminary examination of the grieviances which have led to a second strike of workers on the American-owned Los Mochis sugar plantation in Sinaloa, has acknowledged that the demand for an eight-hour day is justified. The Mexican constitution guarantees the eight-hour day to laborers. The Mexican News Bureau here is informed that the strikers had been compelled to work in 12-hour shifts, at 50 cents per day.

The United Sugar Co., which is the American name of the Los Mochis, is reputed one of the biggest and most prosperous foreign concerns in Mexico, and is easily able to pay a decent wage. The oil companies pay as a rule $125 for eight hours' work.

Movie Operators Protest Firetrap School Conditions

BY MIRIAM ALLEN deFORD
(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

SAN FRANCISCO, April 29.—Two echoes of Upton Sinclair's Goslings came from recent events affecting California schools. One is the complaint from the Motion Picture Operators' union that films are being shown in schools under conditions that are illegal and constitute a fire menace. Machines are erected in wooden school buildings in San Francisco and their operators disobey a city ordinance which requires a non-inflammable booth to enclose the machine. Incidentally, many of these socalled educational pictures shown in schools are purely anti-labor propaganda.

The other item comes from Santa Cruz, where the high school principals' convention is in session. The principals voted to protest the removal of Muzzey's American History from the schools, commended the book highly, and requested that it be retained as a textbok in California. It is this history, together with Albert Bushnell Hart's, that has been the subject of much controversy, largely actuated by the commercialized press, because it was not sufficiently subservient to some of the myths and legends of colonial days in America and the American revolution.

Section Men Get Short Work Day, Decreased Pay

(Special to The Daily Worker)

DRESDEN, Ohio, April 29.—Owing to lack of business, the Wheeling and Lake Erie Railway has cut the day of the section hands to 8 hours, in order to maintain high dividends, according to a special correspondent of the DAILY WORKER.

The railroad company has previously worked the section hands 8 hours in winter and 9 to 10 hours in summer. Present indications are that the company will lay off numbers of the sections hands soon. Reduction of hours alone is insufficient decrease on the pay-roll in this time of depression; so that the workers are hit twice. The men gain a shorter week-day with short time pay and stand the chance of a lay-off at any time.

Boom City Fakirs Request T. U. E. L. Be Ousted In Council

LOS ANGELES, Calif., April 28.—The Central Labor Council here has followed the lead of the Metal Trades Council in "respectfully requesting" unions to withdraw their delegates who are members of the Trade Union Educational League.

The motion was debated at length, but finally adopted to exclude and discerminate against the most active members of the Central Labor Council, just as the metal trades had done in their own council. This action is the result of several bitter battles on the council floor. The motion as finally adopted is much milder than the original stiff-necked stand which demanded expulsion for T. U. E. L. members.

RICH AMERICANS PAY ASSASSINS TO KILL REDS

Chicago Tribune Agents Head Plotters

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LONDON, April 29.—Deluded Russians who were led to believe by capitalist anti-Soviet plotters in New York, London and Paris, that the Soviet government was about to crash and that the good old days of Czarism were to return soon, are now pining behind the walls of Soviet prisons awaiting trial charged with planning the assassination of Leon Trotsky, G. Zinoviev, I. Stalin, Karl Radek and other prominent leaders of the Soviet government. The hirelings are now cursing their paymasters who bask in the security of the Bohemian cafes in the capitol cities of Europe and occasionally deluge the American press with weird tales of the adventures of Trotsky, Zinoviev, et al.

Rich Americans are known to be the most generous contributors to the assassination plots. It is freely stated here that the reporters of the Chicago Tribune, are agents of the anarchists and social revolutionaries of Russia who are now the principal tools of those capitalists who have not given up hope of bringing Czarism back to the Russian workers and peasants.

It is also rumored that some of the money appropriated by congress for the relief of the famine-stricken people of Russia is yet doing the same kind of work that Hoover's man Gregory did in Hungary. Whether the Chicago Tribune correspondents are disbursing this fund is not known, but the kind of twaddle that is published by that paper would be considered fit only for the waste basket of even the most venal journal in Paris, the world center of journalistic venality.

It is significant to note that among those under arrest in Moscow are thirty-seven former members of the Russian staff of the American Relief Association. This was Hoover's organization.

The exposure by the Federated Press of Hoover's million-dollar contribution of the American Relief Administration's funds to the bandit Yudenich created a sensation here. For over two years Russian Communists have claimed that Hoover was aiding the enemies of the Soviet Union but it was put down as propaganda. The documentary evidence produced by the Federated Press expose leaves no room for doubt.

John Steele, London correspondent for the Chicago Tribune is using every effort to create a break in the conference between representatives of Soviet Russia and England. In spite of this the negotiations are proceeding normally. The Bolshevik envoys are more than holding their own, and British labor is becoming increasingly sympathetic to them. They are not strangers by any means to the English working class and hundreds of thousands of British workers openly side with the Soviet representatives against their own capitalist masters.

The organizations in America that are financing the plots against Soviet Russia are reported to be The National Security League, The American Defense Society, The American Legion and the National Civic Federation. These organizations do not officially raise funds, but inside each organization is a nucleus of bourgeois plotters who hire assassins to go across to Europe as the American Legion thug Griffic was sent after the war objector Bergdoll. Theq have the unwritten sanction of the American government, which places it consuls and representatives in foreign countries at the conspirators disposal.

Child Labor Has Chance As House Passes Resolution

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29.—The first step towards breaking the thirty years' fight in Congress against any national child labor legislation was made yesterday when a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution was passed last night.

Representative Foster introduced the resolution, which fixes a maximum amount of work for children. Most states, Foster said, have accepted this maximum; so that the opposition's cry of "invasion of state's rights" is meaningless.

The amendment will empower Congress to limit, regulate, or prohibit the labor of children under 18 years of age. All efforts to modify the measure were squashed. The vote was 297 to 69, 53 more more than the necessary two thirds. The vote by parties was: Republicans, 167; Democrats, 128; Socialist, 1; Independent, 1.

Twice the Supreme Court has declared federal child labor laws unconstitutional, making a constitutain legislation.

RUSSIA FREEING NORTH CHINA FROM TYRANNY OF "WHITES"; "BUTCHER BARON" IN RETREAT

By JACK ARMITAGE.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

HONGKONG, April 2. (By mail).—Murder, rapine, outrage and persecution are written in letters of blood on the pages of Russia's history in the Far East. Time was when the Czarist forces were counted among the world's most atrocious homicides, but with the advent of Communism in Russia and the establishment of the Soviets, the campaign of blood and lust by the reactionaries became intensified, and for a time what little restraint the "whites" may have been under prior to the Russian revolution was removed.

Then began an era of terror which it seems impossible to depict clearly, for even those who took part, and who have attempted to recount the scenes witnessed appear to be dazed by the very horror of their recollections.

For years the Soviets were a byword, and right up to the last few months those who looked to them for deliverance went daily in terror of their lives. A distinct and most remarkable change has taken place, however, and today the Soviets are a power to be reckoned with in the East. With the partial removal of certain menaces in the West, their attitude toward the persecutors of the oppressed has found unqualified expression and the Eastern outlook has undergone one of the most phenomenal changes in history. A month ago none of the Powers paid any attention to Soviet representatives, but today they have realized that Russia is in the East to stay, not only because of her splendid fighting forces, but because the nations of the East see in Russia their long looked for deliverer from the depredations of Western capitalism.

Chapter of "White" Horrors.

In order to gain a clear conception of the present state of affairs in the East it is necessary that we take a dip into past history. Wih tales of the horrors perpetrated by the "Whites" most DAILY WORKER readers are familiar, but to emphasize our contention we will turn to a page of history which has just been unsealed by one who fought with the "White" forces in Mongolia.

Blind, with both eyes gouged out, Konstantin Noskoff is one of the tragic figures of Tientsin, where, like many other "White" refugees, he is starving to death. To raise the wherewithall to keep body and soul together he has related his experiences with the "White" forces who retreated into Mongolia in 1921. Those experiences, issued in the form of a pamphlet, not only constitute a scathing condemnation of the campaign pursued against the Soviets, but show the reason that Mongolia has to all intents and purposes thrown in its lot with Russia.

A Butcher Baron.

After numerous defeats at he hands of the Reds, large numbers of "White" forces drifted into Mongolia. Then appeared on the scene Baron Ungern, one of the most fiendish butchers on record.

This fiend became the guiding destiny of the "Whites." Treaties and political agreements were trampled under foot, and after a desperate battle with the Chinese army at Maymachin the city of Urga fell into the hands of Ungern and his "Whites." The independence of Mongolia was declared, and many straggling bands of "Whites" rallied to the baron's banner.

But dissension broke out among the leaders, and it was then that Baron Ungern showed evidence of his innate fiendishness. Several officers withdrew from Urga, but they were met and captured by the baron's forces just outside the town, taken back and brutally butchered in front of his tent as a warning to others.

The dream of the leaders for another counter-attack on the Reds was again discussed. Preparations were made: stores were seized and "Bacchanals of requisitioning began." But the natives were at heart in sympathy with the Reds, and when the latter attacked on May 23, 1921, thus forestalling the "Whites," a crushing defeat was inflicted. Ungern and the remnants of his forces were driven back into Mongolia.

"White" Terror Broke Loose.

Then terror broke out. The infamous order No. 15, declaring war on "enemies of Russia, Jews and Communists to the death," gave the necessary license. Noskoff says: "The former Russian governor, Ribikoff, was murdered; Captain Suboff was sabred, along with his wife and his child of five years. The executioners spared neither sex nor age. All the former employes of the 'Centrosoius' were murdered as Bolsheviks, together with all who had Jewish names, or who were supposed to be of Jewish origin. Murder was a daily occurrence. By the irony of fate many who had fought against the Reds were executed."

Russia Provides Silver Coinage

MOSCOW, April 29—(Rosta News Agency)—The money market's demand for silver coinage is to be met fully during the current year by the Leningrad Mint, whose production till the close of the year will be seventy more million roubles worth of silver coins. As for 1925, it is proposed, in order to meet the full requirements of silver coinage, to issue silver half-roubles to a total value of forty million roubles abroad, whereon an agreement has been reached with one of the largest mints in Europe.

FRANCE BUTTS INTO BESSARABIA AGAINST RUSSIA

Chicherin Hits Poincare For Interference

MOSCOW, Russia, April 29.—Protest against the French Chamber's ratification of the Bessarabian Protocol has been sent Poincare by Chitcherin, People's Commissary of Foreign Affairs. The Soviet government emphatically opposses the official French support of Roumanian troops occupying Bessarabian territory, especially when negotiations for recognition are going on between Russia and Roumania.

France has already seriously hampered recognition proceedings between China and Soviet Russia and is now playing the interfering "third party" in the Roumanian negotiations. Russia warns France that she is contributing to the unsettled conditions in eastern Europe and that whatever losses are incurred in Bessarabia will be laid to France's door.

A crowded meeting of Bessarabian emigrants now in Leningrad passed a resolution endorsing all the resolutions adopted by the Bessarbian nationals in Moscow.

Reports from the Odessa, Podolsk and Dniestr river areas show that numerous meetings of Bessarbians and Ukrainians are continued to be held there, protesting against the occupation of Roumania and demanding her re-unification with Ukraine.

In a resolution passed at a big meeting of Bessarabian refugees at Firaspol (Russo-Roumanian frontier), appeal is made to the workers of the world to support the just demand of the liberation of Bessarabian from the Roumanian yoke, under which the Bessarabian toilers have been suffering and bleeding to death for more than six years. The various organizations of the Moldovian Soviet Republic demand that the true representatives of the Bessarabian population be admitted to the Vienna Conference.

MELLON DODGES INVESTIGATION; TAX PLAN SLIPS

Democrats Winning In Senate Fight

WASHINGTON, April 29.— After weeks of maneuvering, senate leaders today unleashed their forces to fight out the income and surtax rates which will be levied on the nation next year.

The Democratic plan is for a 40 per cent surtax. Progressives want 50 per cent which is the present law. The house adopted a 37½ per cent compromise. Secretary Mellon asks 25 per cent. Indications as the fight got under way were that the democratic rates would triumph.

Meanwhile, Secretary Mellon is vociferously denying charges that government bonds have been duplicated. Mellon, in a report to Coolidge, said that the charges made by Charles B. Bremer, Department of Justice Agent, had been completely disproved by an exhaustive investigation by the Treasury department itself.

Mellon is having a hot time between his wealthy clients clamoring for the reduction of their taxes and the senate investigators who are after his scalp to hang in their belts with Fall's and Denby's and Daugherty's.

The Secretary of the Treasurer is attempting to hide his crookedness by having Congress send his denial in the Congressional record all over the country.

"George Washington" Klan Chapter Closed Over Booze Wrangle

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill., April 29.—George Washington chapter of the Ku Klux Klan with a membership of 5,500 here is reported today to have passed out of existence. High officials of the klan are said to have seized all records connecting the local chapter with the national organization, and its office in the old Labor Temple has been closed.

High klan officials are said to have ordered a cleanup of alleged liquor traffic in the city over the protests of local members of the klan, and the dissension resulting therefrom caused the reported action of klan officials.

DAUGHERTY NEVER PROSECUTED ANY CHILD ROBBERS

Was Too Busy Dividing Booze Spoils

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, April 29.—School children thruout the country are among the classes directly robbed by the stationery dealers' price-fixing association, and on the item of lead pencils the combine exacts a profit of about 650 percent, according to testimony before the Senate committee investigating the failure of Harry Daugherty as attorney general to prosecute anti-trust cases.

Chairman Huston Thompson of the Federal Trade Commission described the long delay of action by Daugherty's office on this stationery case, which was sent to the department of justice by the commission early in 1920 and was finally turned back to the commission in December, 1923. To the last request of the commission that prosecution be begun or the commission's evidence be handed back, Daugherty did not reply for nine months. Then the files came back, wiht the statement that the department of justice did not think a criminal prosecution would be warranted.

Venus Pencils Come High

Atty. Bachrach, counsel for the complaining firm, Sidney Morris & Co., Chicago, described the struggle of his clients to obtain goods from the supply firms, because they would not hold up the profiteering prices set by the Chicago Stationers' Association and the national association of the trade. The sales manager of the Globe-Wernicke filing cabinet concern, for example, would not sell them $10,000 worth of goods for cash, unless they received permission from four rival retailers in Chicago to make the purchase. The American Pencil Co. refused to furnish them with Venus brand pencils, which cost the retailers 2 cents each, unless they would maintain the retailers' price of 15 cents each. When he finally brought suit in the federal court in Chicago, under the anti-trust law, the combine settled the case for $11,500 and the agreement of the firm to maintain the standard profiteer prices.

Bachrach said that Mr. Galloway, assistant to Daugherty, said at their first interview that he could easily convict the conspirators on the evidence of their association year books, but that afterward Galloway wrote him that he could not discuss prosecutions since the department was making a full investigation of the case.

No phase of the case was ever presented by the department to a grand jury. The gouging goes on.

WAR SECRETARY GETS RAKING BY WOMEN'S LEAGUE

Resent Weeks' Fight On 'Socialist-Pacifists'

BUFFALO, April 29.—Women peace workers have made the U. S. war department eat its words and withdraw its attack on them, it was revealed at the National League of Women Voters' convention in session in Buffalo. Secretary of War Weeks, following protest of league members, has called in an anti-pacifist poster distributed for propagandist purposes by General Fries, chemical warfare service. The poster was headed "The Socialist-Pacifist Movement in America is an Absolute Part of Internation Socialism." Secretary Weeks expressed regret for the poster and announced its withdrawal in a letter read to the delegates.

The convention of women were furious when President Maude Wood Park recounted the government's attack on their organization. The peace activities of the league will continue. A committee was appointed to call a conference of 75 national and local peace societies and all other organizations having peace programs.

A sugary letter from President Coolidge did not altogether quiet the wrath of the women voters. After regretting his inability to address the convention he praised the advent of women as voters as a "tremendously important step in the evolution of democracy."

Steady increase in the number of women employed in industry was reported by Mary Anderson, director women's bureau, U. S. department of labor, speaking before the conference on women in industry, held in connection with the league convention.

Child labor has increased 50 per cent in two years in eight cities and 20 per cent in 19 cities, Grace Abbott, chief U. S. children's bureau, informed the convention.

Five million children of school age in the United States are not in school, Dr. F. H. Swift, University of Minnesota, told the delegates.

DENVER, Colo., April 29.—Fourteen prisoners in the county jail here held up guards and escaped during the night in a heavy snowstorm. Guns had been smuggled into the prison for use of the convicts in holding up their guards.

THE POWER COLUMN

Meet Some of Those Who Are Making The DAILY WORKER Grow.

Here's a List of the Leading Sub-Getters.

With half of the first big DAILY WORKER subscription campaign over, it is of interest to ascertain who among the hundreds who are putting the power into THE DAILY WORKER are making the best attempts to bring the paper before the widest masses of wage workers. A list of the most successful subscription chasers reads like the Who's Who of the American militant movement. As a matter of fact many of the most loyal DAILY WORKER supporters have already made names for themselves as leaders of the American working class. But many others who had not previously brought especial notice to themselves are now putting themselves down as real live wires thru their active and capable endeavor for THE DAILY WORKER.

Look 'Em Over. They're Real Rebels.

Read with respect and admiration the list of those who have accomplished the most since the campaign started. Make a resolution that before the campaign ends on June 15 that you will be among the leaders too!

Irish Unionists Refuse To Move Goods For Scab Asylum Help

DUBLIN, April 29.—Railway workers at Letterkenny, County Donegal, have refused to handle goods which the strike breakers at Donegal Asylums sought to remove from the station to the asylum. As usual the labor aristocrats, engineers and conductors, in Ireland, as elsewhere, did not consider it inconsistent with their unionism to haul scabs and scab goods on the trains. The engineers and conductors are not members of the Irish Transport and General Workers' Union but most of the unskilled workers are.

The attendants are on strike for over a month and are fighting against a ten per cent reduction in wages. They have picketed the asylum, and first used blackthorn sticks to impress strike breakers, but they were disarmed by the Civic Guards, the so-called law and order force of the Irish Free State. A cook who persisted in ignoring the strike was kidnapped and after her release refused to approach the asylum any more.

The scab attendants mobilized the better behaved lunatics to assist them in hauling the goods from the station, but they met a hostile crowd which chased them back to the asylum. The Civic Guards then attacked the crowd with batons, wounding several women. Three women and one man were arrested.

Cautious Republican Solon Drops "Mal" As "Cal" Did Harry

WASHINGTON, April 29.—When Senator Brookhart, chairman of the committee investigating the Department of Justice, offered in the Senate the committee's resolution calling for the arrest of Mal Daugherty, president of the Midland National Bank at Washington Court House, Ohio, for contempt, Senator Jones of Washington, one of the cautious reactionaries, was in the chair. Only a handful of senators were present. Jones knew that a roll call on this resolution would do his party no good in the campaign. He started to put it quickly thru. Smoot, less cautious, demanded a quorum call.

When a quorum had been secured Jones rapidly announced that the resolution was before the Senate, and without restating its terms he began again the process of rushing it thru. Some of the newly arrived old guard asked that the resolution be read, and then asked for a roll call. But Jones took no chances. He rattled off the formula for consideration, amendment and final passage of the resolution by viva voce vote, and in spite of a few loud "noes" from his own side he firmly declared the resolution carried.

What Is An Injunction?

WHAT IS AN INJUNCTION?

An injunction is a law that is found on no statute book.

A law which has never been voted on by any set of legislators.

A law which has never been signed by any governor or president.

A law which exists without the consent of the people.

A law which came into being as the will of one man.

An injunction is a law made by a judge; and its penalties are fixed by the same judge; and the offenders are tried before the same judge; and the verdict is rendered by a jury of one man—the same judge; and the sentence is pronounced by the same judge.

American Dollar Diplomacy in Action

By JAY LOVESTONE.

Article VII.

Role of Aristocracy.

The labor aristocracy, the upper crust of the skilled section of the working class, has in America, as in other imperialist capitalist countries, become an integral part of the entire machinery of our ruling class. This small group of our working class is developing more and more a tangible economic interest in the maintenance and the perpetuation of American financial, commercial and military supremacy in colonial countries, new markets and new spheres of influence. The handful of highly skilled workers are being wedded to the highhanded imperialist plans of looting the weaker countries. This layer of the working class is sharing in the advantages reaped by the monopolists at the expense of the rest of the workers at home and the colonial and weaker peoples abroad.

Thus we find that the officialdom of the American Federation of Labor speaking primarily for the upper crust of our working class, has turned a deaf ear to the cries of the nations oppressed by the Wall Street government. Upon his return from his latest visit to Panama in January, 1924, Mr. Samuel Gompers was emphatic in his description of the conditions in Haiti as satisfactory. Mr. Gompers handed out this endorsement of American domination of Haiti despite the fact that the behavior of the military and naval agents of Wall Street in Haiti is notorious for its brutality even in the history of American imperialism which is replete with practices of cruelty and utter disregard for the wishes and aspirations of the weaker peoples under its yoke.

After months of agitation by the Communists the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor was compelled to take notice of the serious crisis prevailing in the Philippines because of the resistance of the native masses to the domination of American capital. In taking notice of this giant struggle against Yankee imperialism in the Far East, the executive council was primarily concerned with the fact that "many of the products of the Philippine Islands come into the states, duty free, in direct competition with the higher paid workingmen and women of the mainland, thus making it practically impossible for employes and independent manufacturers to meet competition." In its half-hearted endorsement of the Philippine independence movement, an endorsement which was adopted at an executive session of the council on February 15, 1924, the American Federation of Labor bureaucracy took no steps to solidify the ranks of the Filipino and American workers and to unite in a common struggle against their common enemy in the fight for complete freedom from economic exploitation and political oppression.

When the reactionary German industrialist group, hiding behind the cloak of the traitorous social democracy, was menaced by the hungry German masses the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor issued an appeal ostensibly for the relief of the German working masses, but actually for the salvaging of the capitalist dictatorship then threatened with ruin. The Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor has persistently fought all attempts at drawing the American trade union movement into the fold of even the faintest form of international working class action. The yellow Amsterdam International has proved too red for Gompers and his agents. However, the labor international of the League of Nations and the International Chamber of Commerce at Rome have not been black enough for Mr. Gompers who has formally co-operated with these capitalist institutions in sundry ways.

Evidence that the highly skilled labor aristocracy is more and more developing a vested interest in the imperialist capitalist system is multiplying. An examination of recent tendencies in the trade union movement amongst skilled workers towards labor banking affords painfully striking proof of this truth. Without getting into a discussion at this point about the merits and demerits of labor banking for the working class in its struggle with the capitalists, one need but cite the following pertinent authoritative remark which characterizes fundamentally the growing vested interest that the upper crust of our working class is developing in the imperialist order. We quote the following:

> "When a wage earner invests some of his earnings in the business enterprise in which he, himself, is employed, he becomes a better workman, he takes a new interest in the business; he feels that he has a stake in it which is more important than the weekly pay envelope. And when a man gets this feeling, he settles down and becomes dependable. For he comes to feel that he also has a part in the prosperity and progress of the country which places upon him the obligation of industry, of thrift, and of good citizenship!' (Bold face ours.)

This eulogy of labor banking, unmasking the true character of labor banking and its dangers to the working class movement in the imperialist stage of capitalism, is not taken from some such big business organs as the Wall Street Journal, the Financial and Commercial Chronicle, the Nation's Business, or American Industries. The quotation is taken directly from a pamphlet published by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers entitled "Making Millions Out of Pennies."

Richard Boeckel, author of "Labor Banking," and one of the most noted students of this phase of our trade union movement, in an article captioned "Our Revolution at Home," in the April, 1924, issue of the Forum makes the following significant statements:

> "One of the first transactions of the Brotherhood Investment Co. was the purchase for the Brotherhood of a third interest in the Empire Trust Company of New York, a $60,000,000 financial institution. At the same time the purchase was made, the Brotherhood secured an option on the remaining shares necessary to control the bank. Two officials of the Brotherhood will complete purchases under its option and assume full control of the bank in June of this year. It is interesting to note that the Empire Trust Company is given in a pamphlet, 'The Capitalist Press—Who Owns It and Why' recently issued by the British Labor Party as the holder of '587 shares of more than half of the total capital' of the Central News Limited, of London, one of the largest European news agencies." (Bold face ours.)

It may seem strange to the observer at first sight to learn that the Central News Agency was one of the most energetic propagandists for the last World War and is today a bitter enemy of all working class movements in Europe.

The following two statements taken from authoritative spokesmen of the biggest capitalist groups in the country, commenting on another financial venture of our trade union bankers, are most instructive. We quote:

> Financial & Commercial Chronicle, March 29, 1924: "Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers Co-operative National Bank participates in offering of International Great Northern Railroad Bonds. An offering yesterday (March 28) of $3,500,000 6 per cent gold bonds of the International Great Northern Railroad Company jointly by the National City Company of New York and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers Co-operative National Bank of Cleveland represents the first financing on a large scale to be participated in by so-called capital and labor banking institutions. The offering does not involve any new financing by the railroad, or any increase in the amount of bonds outstanding, the bonds having been purchased from Speyer & Company, and J. & W. Seligman & Company, and thus consist of a block of bonds owned by the bankers. With respect to this week's joint offering it is pointed out as significant that the largest bank in the country, representing the biggest aggregation of commercial, industrial and financial interests in the United States, is willing to hold out its hand and join forces with labor in a constructive attempt to create more harmonious relationships between the two elements." (Bold face ours.)

> New York Tribune, March 27, 1924. "This is the first public appearance of the Brotherhood Bank in connection with the floatation of securities by a Wall Street investment house, altho it has handled local issues in Cleveland and has had a 'silent' participation in many of the large issues recently. The fact that, in its bow to the investing public, The Brotherhood Bank was associated with the National City Company, the investment branch of the largest financial institution in the United States, was regarded as of particular significance. The offering will be conducted by the Brotherhood Bank in precisely the same way as that employed by the non-labor banking firms and institutions, subscriptions being filled in the order received, regardless of their source. The Bank will, however, circularize the members of the Brotherhood in an effort to dispose of the bonds, this being the first occasion when it has ever offered railroad securities to its members. The officials of the bank are opposed to part payment plans on the theory that a man who cannot pay in full for a $100 bond should keep his money in the savings bank, and no arrangement of this kind will be adopted to facilitate subscriptions by members.
> "In connection with the offering, it became known yesterday that the Brotherhood Bank, the oldest and strongest of the labor banks in this country, only recently has turned its attention to railroad bonds. It has previously purchased these for investment purposes, but today will mark initial recommendation of such securities of plans for expansion made some weeks ago by the investment company thru which the various Brotherhood Banks are linked up. Wall Street bankers, while frankly inclined to view the new alliance in the investment banking field with the Brotherhood institution as in the nature of an experiment, were ready to admit that if successful, it would open up tremendous possibilities for future development. The enterprise is regarded as demonstrating that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers is in the banking business on substantially the same basis as other financial interests, and that it is seeking to branch out into all fields where sound practice offers a profit.
> "Aside from that aspect of the operation the new activity of the Brotherhood is looked on as pointing to a closer community of interest between its members and the railroads, possibly capable of development at a later date into a movement toward joint capital and labor ownership." (Bold face ours.)

One of the ablest leaders of the employing class of the United States, Mr. Eugene Meyer, Jr., managing director of the War Finance Corporation, has estimated the significance of this tendency in the labor movement in the following clear manner:

> "The advent into the ranks of capitalists of labor groups of great importance strengthens existing institutions and makes for evolutionary as against revolutionary change."

SECRETARY OF WAR WEEKS TO HAVE BURNS FINK SPY ON SESSIONS OF WOMENS' COMING PEACE MEET

By LAURENCE TODD.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, April 29.—Captain Grenfell, press agent for Secretary of War Weeks, denies on behalf of his chief, the report that the war and state departments, assisted by William J. Burns' staff of detectives, are to "place under surveillance" the congress of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, which will be in session here during the first week of May. Miss Jane Addams is to preside over the sessions, and women from 30 countries are to take part. Sen. Borah, Sen. Owen and Sen. Shipstead, as well as Bertrand Russell, will be among the speakers. The report made to the arrangements committee was that the Coolidge administration was behind the demonstration now being arranged by the Daughters of 1912 and other super-patriotic groups, to prevent the holding of the sessions here and the moving of the special train which is to carry the delegates to Chicago afterward.

Secretary Hughes joins in the disclaimer that the women's congress, which will discuss A New World Order, and will propose plans for bringing about peace in both hemispheres, is under the ban of his department. Capt. Grenfell declines to express any sympathy with the exercise of the right of free speech and assemblage, but says the war department is keeping its hands off.

To Stop Speakers.

"Our information," says the formal statement issued by Miss Amy Woods, national representative of the W. I. L., "is that the government intends to prevent certain of the speakers on our agenda from addressing the convention. The espionage contemplated by the government, while perhaps annoying to those of us who may be favored with the attendance of detectives, is of minor interest. We merely suggest that the resources of the government, and the money of taxpayers, might conceivably be disbursed more usefully.

"When it is proposed, however, to prevent speakers from addressing the convention, we approach a different matter, namely the question of our freedom of speech that is theoretically guaranteed by the constitution. We believe there is no law permitting such action, and we demand to know under what authority in law the proposed action is to be taken against us."

"Give 'Em Hell."

Miss Woods misses the whole point, which is that European delegates, seeking to create a peace sentiment and a peach program, are suspected. If they come from the continent, they probably are radicals, and in any case they know a lot about Russia. The Daughters of 1812, the American Legion officialdom, the Hearst papers, the McLean papers and the mob-making press in general have united to save America from thinking about civilization in terms of peace and human good will. One respectable Jane Addams in America is bad enough, from their standpoint, but to let women of like character and power come here from 30 nations, and encourage each other to work for world peace and A New World Order—well, that is too much to ask.

"Give this crowd hell," was the order which a reporter on the local Hearst paper says he received, when assigned to write about the women's congress. He resigned.

Hearts Licks Plutes Boots.

Hearst's abject attitude toward the Mellon-Coolidge administration in recent weeks is one of the cynically discussed mysteries of the season. The antiphonal chorus of Hearst and Brisbane sounds the praises of the Secretary of the Treasury, the President, and all their acts and tendencies, in strange contrast to the tone which they have maintained over a period of many years.

There are bystanders mean enough to say that Hearst has been compelled to take orders—that his recent ambitious spreading-out of investments in many cities has caused him to borrow heavily at the banks, and that his proposed bond issue is an acknowledgment of the burden he has been carrying. When the bankers thought they had caught Henry Ford, they discovered that he could squeeze $40,000,000 out of his dealers within a few weeks. Hearst canont raise money in that way. Besides, it is easier for him to discover that Coolidge is a nobler statesman than Abraham Lincoln, and that Mellon is the world's leading philanthropist.

Watch the Hearst press for boosts, from now on during the campaign, for Mellon, Coolidge, Pershing, Dawes, Weeks, New, Daugherty, Smoot, Detective Burns and other leading characters in the special privilege comedy at Washington.

Charge Federal Judge With Many Common Crimes

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29.—Thirty-three charges were recently brought against William E. Baker, Federal Judge of the Northern District of West Virginia, in a petition filed with the Speaker of the House by T. A. Brown, Federal attorney for the district. Brown asks the impeachment of Baker.

Drunkness while discharging officials duties; confiscating liquors seized by prohibition agents and consuming them personally; imprisoning a citizen in flagrant violation of his oath of office; are a few of the charges against the Federal judge. Padding expense acconts by fraudulent certificates is another accusation hurled at Baker.

Murphy Was Progressive.

"Boss" Murphy is dead and buried. But the chieftain of New York's Tammany Hall leaves many political lessons behind him. The most important of these is that it pays to be progressive.

Charles F. Murphy as head of Tammany Hall promised everything that it was necessary to promise to win an election. Municipal ownership was always written big into the Tammany Hall-democratic platforms. And Tammany Hall fought —how it did fight its sham battles against the daily newspapers.

Murphy made Hylan mayor of New York, and Hylan liked to hobnob with William Hale Thompson, republican mayor of Chicago. Lundin tried to pull the same progressive stunts for "Bill" Thompson, the republican, that Murphy did for John Hylan, the democrat. And he was well-nigh as successful. The Thompson-Len Small machine that Lundin built still dominates the republican party in Illinois.

It was in the 1922 gubernatorial elections in New York State, that Morris Hillquit, intellectual leader of the Socialists, announced before sailing for Europe to exterminate the Communists, that Al Smith, Murphy's man, was the best qualified candidate in the field. Hillquit's only reservation was that he would vote for the Socialist candidate. This would indicate that Murphy dressed his political mannikins in very alluring apparel.

Yet the Tammany Hall outfit, like the Thompson Lundin-Small crowd, in Illinois, Curley, in Boston; Taggart, in Indiana, or "Fingy" Connors, in Buffalo, constitutes as corrupt a force as any in old party politics. Success is built upon an ability to keep out of jail. Murphy started as a saloonkeeper, but there was more money in a dock commissioner's job, where he could hand out fat city contracts. An investigation showed that one company, organized by Murphy, receiving such a contract, made 5,000 per cent profit in a year. Murphy survived and grew. He weathered every probe of Tammany graft and patronage, successfully faced federal indictment for tax evasion and was an admitted glucose war profiteer. This is the Murphy who threw the presidential nomination to Wilson, at Baltimore, in 1912, and picked Cox at Frisco in 1920.

And when he died the funeral procession went up plutocratic Fifth Avenue and the last words were said in exclusive St. Patrick's Cathedral.

But, altho Murphy is dead, his political system survives. It is the system that won plaudits from the Socialist, Hillquit, and gets the support of labor officialdom, even up to Sam Gompers, for Governor Al. Smith, in New York, or for Len Small, in Illinois. It is the progressive shell game in which the duped voters always lose. It is the system that has built up lesser Tammany Halls in practically every community in the United States. It is the system of job-giving and graft taking that corrupts everyone touching it.

It is only the susceptible, self-styled progressive fringe of the organized labor movement that expects to journey to Cleveland, Ohio, July 4th, in an effort to cash in on the possibilities of the third party. The labor officials will be there peddling their progressivism, not one whit more sincere about it than Murphy of Tammany Hall. If they could ride into place and power in either of the old parties, they would be the first to do so. They envy George Berry, the strike-breaker president of the Pressmen's Union, who wants to be vice-presidential candidate on the democratic ticket: or John L. Lewis, the baiter of militants at the head of the miners' union, who wants to play a similar role, with Coolidge, on the republican ticket.

It is time that the workers and farmers cut themselves loose from all these forms of so-called political progressivism. We feel that this division is taking place and that it is the great and only worthwhile development in the arena of politics this year. The thinking workers and farmers will have nothing to do with the misnamed progressive, middle class "labor" gathering at Cleveland, Ohio, on Independence Day. Instead the rank and file of producers, in town and country, will send their delegates and turn to the gathering of all class conscious elements in the National Farmer-Labor Convention, at St. Paul, Minn., starting June 17th.

It pays the office seekers and place hunters to be mere progressives. Murphy and Tammany Hall taught that lesson well. But it does not pay the exploited workers and farmers. They must have a militant, class conscious party and program of their own. Only then will they make triumphant progress along the road leading to their emancipation.

And Coolidge Has His Ford.

When Henry Ford deserted his political hangers-on, quit the presidential race and came out with an endorsement of Cal Coolidge for re-election, we said that Muscle Shoals was the price involved in the transaction. This was one count in our indictment in which we called upon the United States senate to "Impeach Coolidge!"

The facts have now been presented at the Muscle Shoals hearing before a senate committee. "Silent Cal" is quoted, in a telegram, as having said that he was trying "TO DELIVER" Muscle Shoals to Henry Ford."

The strike-breaker president was not too cautious, nor too silent for James Martin Miller, who sent the telegram to Ford on October 12, 1923. White House records show that Miller had an interview with the president on that day. Miller's whole telegram to Ford at Detroit should be memorized by every worker and farmer in the land. It is as follows:

> "In private interview had with President Coolidge this morning, he said, incidentally: 'I am friendly to Mr. Ford, but wish some one would convey to him that it is my hope that Mr. Ford will not do, nor say anything that will make it difficult for me to deliver Muscle Shoals to him, which I am trying to do.' While the president didn't say so, am sure Weeks has been in consultation with president this morning, in view of Mr. Ford's reported interview today's papers."

The Detroit "open shop" billionaire sends his private agent to Washington to dicker with the president for the delivering of the nation's natural resources into his possession—in this instance the valuable water power rights at Muscle Shoals, Alabama.

While Coolidge makes feeble denial, Washington leaks the news that it was not a mere politico-business trade, but that new testimony will show that there was to be $2,000,000 profit on Muscle Shoals land to accrue to some public official, if the deal went thru. Of which Coolidge must have been fully aware.

Thus the pretensions of the Coolidge campaign managers, that "Cautious Cal" lives on a moral plane higher and conveniently apart from that occupied by the other grafters in his cabinet—Daugherty, Denby, Weeks, Wallace, Hoover, and the rest—burst like so many bubbles.

Coolidge barters Muscle Shoals, desired by Ford, for the automobile magnate's support for the presidency, which Coolidge desires for another term. But Muscle Shoals belongs to the nation, and in "delivering" it to Ford, Coolidge is guilty of the grossest theft of public property.

It is a coincidence that on the day the Coolidge "delivering" telegram is made public, the Ford Motor Company issues its financial statement for the year ending Feb. 29, 1924, showing an accumulated surplus increase of $82,263,483.00, bringing the grand total up to $442,041,081.00, or close to half a billion. This increase is equivalent to a 478 per cent profit on the company's capital stock of $17,264,500.00.

No doubt Coolidge believed that the light of day couldn't reach this deal born in darkness in time to do him any harm. But less than seven months after the deal was consummated in the White House, the facts are known. The revelations came even before Ford was able to pocket Muscle Shoals, or Coolidge to get his renomination, not to mention re-election.

Ford has his billions. The workers and farmers of the nation will take care of them at the proper moment.

But the "strike-breaker" president, "Cautious Cal" Coolidge still sits crouching in the White House, the biggest criminal of his criminal cabinet.

We say: "IMPEACH HIM!"

Bad News For Injunction Judges.

When Judge "Charley" Foell faces the strike pickets of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, on Wednesday, he ought to remember that Ohio courts have put the ban on injunctions against picketing. This is, no doubt, bad news for "Charley." If the strikers know that Ohio courts have put the ban on injunctions in labor disputes, they will wonder by what right the Illinois courts are trying to send workers to jail for picketing.

We refer "Charley" and his injunction pal, Judge Dennis Sullivan to the lost case, in Ohio, of the La France Electrical Construction and supply Co. vs. the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local No. 8.

The Ohio company was in the position of many of the struck garment bosses in Chicago. It had terminated its union agreement and sought to impose a "yellow dog" contract upon its workers. A strike ensued. An injunction followed. Picketing was to be prevented. The strikers were to be refused the right to solicit the strike-breakers from taking their jobs.

But the injunction granted by the lower courts was vacated by the Court of Appeals which declared that, "legal means employed by strikers must not be curtailed. Among these are the right of peaceful picketing, the peaceful persuasion of employes to terminate contracts at will, and the peaceful persuasion of expectant employes not to accept work with the employer in question."

It has not been our good or bad fortune to attend a law school, but we offer the above legal information to "Charley" and "Dennie" with our compliments. If they don't make good use of it, and if the strikers come to the conclusion, as a result, that the courts are in the grip of the garment and other bosses, then we can't help it.

Mr. Gompers' Revolution

By C. E. Ruthenberg

SAMUEL Gompers has discovered a new way of achieving an economic revolution in the United States.

In the April issue of the American Federationist he presents an editorial on "A Worth-While Revolution" in which he quotes approvingly Professor T. N. Carver of Harvard University who declares that the only revolution anywhere in the world "that amounts to a hill of beans, is taking place in this country."

What is this revolution which Professor Carver describes and which evidently Mr. Gompers approves? Mr. Gompers, in his editorial, states it as follows:

"Professor Carver calls attention to the rapid expansion of labor banks as one indication of the 'revolution' that is taking place. He cites the rapid increase in the number of wage earners who own stock in the enterprises in which they are employed."

Farther along in his editorial, Mr. Gompers says, in regard to the purchase of stock by employes of corporations:

"Stock ownership by wage earners is a device the intent of which was fully recognized by labor and the purpose of which was obvious. It was inevitable, however, that employes particularly unorganized employes, should yield and become stock owners. The evils which were foreseen have generally resulted, but as is often the case, there are indications that the scheme is running away with itself and may yet produce results that were not contemplated by the original promoters.

"Stock sales to employes have become stock sales to consumers and there is no reason in the world why a sufficient number of employe and consumer stock holders should not, thru organization, leave upon the industry the impress of their desires, or for that matter, even go so far as to assume complete direction of policies."

In his concluding paragraph, Mr. Gompers makes his approval of Professor Carver's "revolution" even more definite. He says:

"Professor Carver is eminently correct. The United States is the one country in the world in which industrial revolution is rushing forward at almost break-neck speed, but without any of the usual manifestations of revolution and without the usual destruction that accompanies revolution".

Some of the labor papers which quote Mr. Gompers' editorial conclude from it that the American Federation of Labor is to adopt a new policy; that it is going to seek to achieve a revolution by buying itself into American industry, and thus, as Mr. Gompers says, "to assume complete direction of policies."

A Visionary Revolution.

Evidently neither Professor Carver nor Mr. Gompers stop to look up the facts in regard to American industry in making the proposal for this "revolution." Examination of only a few figures connected with American industry and the income of the workers in the United States completely explodes this method of "revolution."

According to Moody's manual, there is invested in stocks and bonds in the United States, $94,740,628,156. That is quite a sum. In order to achieve a position which would enable them to "assume complete direction of policies" in American industry, the workers of the United States would have to acquire the ownership of at least a majority of these stocks and bonds. In considering what that means, one has also to have in mind the fact that in the last six years the increase in the money invested in stocks and bonds in the United States amounted to $42,000,000,000. In other words, the workers, in order to secure a position of domination thru investment in American industry, would not only have to invest enough to secure control of the majority of the stock now outstanding, but each year would have to invest more in industry than the capitalists of the United States.

Merely to state the problem is enough to show how ridiculous is a suggestion that a revolution can come about thru the method suggested by Professor Carver and endorsed by Mr. Gompers. But there are other facts which demonstrate the impossibility of this "revolution" even more clearly.

The National Bureau of Economic Research, in its study of "Income in the United States" comes to the conclusion that in 1918 there were a total of 40,069,600 persons who shared in the income produced in the United States during that year. Of this total 34,778,471 receive less than $2,000 per year. There is Mr. Gompers' problem. How much can these 34 or 35 million workers whose income is less than $2,000 per year, invest in stocks and bonds each year? According to all the estimates of the cost of living, $2,000 per year is just about enough to live upon at the present cost of living in the United States. There is not much likelihood nor any great possibility that these 34 or 35 million workers will acquire any considerable share of the stocks and bonds of this country and thus bring about Mr. Gompers' revolution.

We can carry the analysis a little farther and show still more clearly how futile is the belief that a revolution could come about in the manner suggested by Mr. Gompers. According to the same authority quoted above, out of the total of 40,069,600 who shared in the income of the United States in 1918, 29,038,390 received less than $1600 per year. In other words, the income of three-fourths of the workers in the United States, including farmers, is less than $1600 per year. Can this three-fourths of the productive workers ever acquire a stake in Mr. Gompers' revolution? It is quite certain that every one of these 29 million workers are fighting hard to keep body and soul together and need every dollar that they receive under the capitalist system in order to buy food and clothing and shelter for themselves and their families and that there is no possibility of their helping Mr. Gompers' revolution along.

The Aristocracy of Labor.

In one respect, there is something in what Mr. Gompers writes. The development which Professor Carver points out as going on in American industry is that the aristocracy of labor in the United States is becoming the partner of the capitalist class.

The workers who are able to invest money in labor banks and to buy stock from corporations are the more highly paid, skilled workers. It is therefore, not at all surprising that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers was first in the field of labor banking and has extended its operation farther than any other group. Unquestionably, highly paid workers can do what the engineers have done. Unquestionably, Mr. Gompers and the labor leaders who received $10,000 a year income or more, can invest in labor banks and invest in the stock of corporations. Unquestionably, they are doing it. It is not a new phenomenon in a capitalist country that at a highly developed stage of imperialism the labor aristocracy becomes the partner of the capitalist class and is granted some crumbs which the capitalist class gains thru the exploitation of the masses of poorly paid workers.

Mr. Gompers' revolution is putting on "Easy Street" the two million American workers who are highly paid and who belong to the aristocracy of labor. But his revolution is not helping the 29 million referred to above who receive in wages less than $1600 per year.

The Real Revolution.

Mr. Gompers, in some respects, is like H. G. Wells. The latter has found about a score of different ways, in his imagination, in which the revolution can come about. He has a book about every mode of social revolution except that which the realities of life show to be the way the social revolution will come about.

That way is not any of the ways which Mr. Wells has described so brilliantly in his many books. It is not the way which Mr. Gompers presents in his editorial.

The one way of social revolution which life has shown to be the real way, is thru the workers' organizing their political power and taking control of the government out of the hands of the capitalist class and using that governmental power to transfer industry from the grip of the capitalist into the hands of the workers and farmers. The workers and farmers haven't the means of buying industry even if they wanted to. The only way they can bring about the social ownership of industry, is to take into their own hands the power thru which the present system of private ownership is maintained, that is, the governmental power, and then to use that power to wipe out the capitalist ownership and establish social ownership.

That is the one way of revolution. The workers and farmers of this country are gaining an inkling of this in spite of Mr. Gompers, as shown by the developing mass movement for a Farmer-Labor Party and a fight by workers and farmers for control of the governmental power in this country.

CHICAGO SYMPHONY

By ALFRED V. FRANKENSTEIN.

Frederick Stock closed the season of concerts of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at Orchestra Hall last Friday and Saturday with a conventional program of familiar compositions. The concert opened with Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, a wondrously brilliant work, full of classic melody, closing with a rhythmic fast section that seems to contain in it the pulse of the classic spirit. Stock introduced an effective innovation in its performance. In the course of the overture occurs a trumpet call, formerly played backstage. At this concert the trumpet was played from the back of the balcony and came ringing down thru the house.

The Brahms fourth symphony followed. This is the dullest symphony the German master wrote, and it is lucky that it was his last, for if Brahms had gone on composing in the vein of the fourth symphony he would have become unbearable. The themes themselves, as stated at the opening of each of the movements, are some of the most beautiful in symphonic literature, brilliant and energetic, as are those of the first movement, pathetic, tender in the second, joyous and colorful in the third, and pompous in the last. But in each and every movement the thematic material is subjected to so much overdevelopment, changed by so many tricks of counterpoint and variation that one gets sick of them. And at least half of these tricks are not even effective.

Next came the Spanish suite of Claude Debussy. Disregarding the advantages of orchestration which Debussy, the modern, had over the classicists, it is interesting to compare the three masters, Beethoven, Brahms and Debussy. Beethoven seemd to write music expressing some deep seated inward urge, some compelling necessity of the spirit disconnected from the life about him. Brahms derived fragments of melody from some unreal dream world, and applied to them the force of a big intellect and much erudition of musical science. Debussy composed from delicate sense impressions. His music springs directly from his nervous system. The difference in the environment of the three is the difference between the Vienna of 1805 and 1885, and the Paris of 1910.

The Spanish suite is in three movements, entitled "In the streets and by the wayside," "The odors of the night" and "The morning of a festival day." It is a delicate, sensuous fabric of Spanish dancers, with their brilliant costumes, brilliant tunes, and the rattle and click of castanets, mingled with the profound depth of a southern night. It is unfortunate that its performance aired some of the vilest clarinet tone ever heard in Orchestra Hall.

Three well-known compositions of Richard Wagner closed the program and the season, the wild and abandoned "Ride of the Valkyries," the concert piece, "Dreams," as orchestrated by Theodore Thomas, and the overture to "Tannhaeuser," with its sharp contrast of the weird and bizarre Venus music, with the austere and religious chorus of pilgrims.

As one thinks back over a symphony season, the music divides itself into three categories—new works heard for the first time in Chicago or in America, perhaps for the first time anywhere; old compositions heard after a quiescence of years, and the standard often repeated backbone of symphonic repertory.

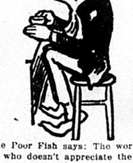
Of the new works of the season none has been of the size and importance of former seasons. Three stand out quite distinctly, the Hebraic rhapsody, "Solomon," for violoncello and orchestra, by Ernest Bloch, played by Alfred Wallenstein, the second orchestra suite of Darius Milhaud, and the viola concerto of York Bowen, played by Lionel Tertis. It is not of Solomon alone that the rhapsody speaks. It is a severe picture of the suffering and unyielding faith of the Jewish race. Milhaud uses a daring and unconventional idiom, and his music produces a thrill and excitement hard to find in any other composer. Hearing Bowen's concerto is like taking a trip thru some new and dark land, a land of vast mountainous wonders.

The old works heard after a lapse of time included two calling for special mention, the ninth symphony of Anton Bruckner and the "Scheherezade" suite by Rimsky-Korsakoff. The latter was so recently reviewed in these columns that further comment is unnecessary. The Bruckner symphony is a huge cathedral of beautiful sounds.

The regular repertory was most remarkable for its lack of Chaykovski. It is becoming traditonal to regard the Russian composer as a back number and a bromide, and quite unjustly so. Until such a day as doubt and despair and human suffering shall disappear the music of Peter Ilyitch Chaykovski will express the strivings and defeats of the race of men.

Too Many Mothers.

MINNEAPOLIS, April 29. — The authorities of the General hospital are confronted with the problem of more maternity cases than can be accommodated. A motion by Dr. Mable Ulrich, woman member of the public welfare board, that women be allowed to act as internes was defeated by a tie vote.



The Poor Fish says: The workingman who doesn't appreciate the fact that the boss gives him a job is the cause of most of the industrial unrest.

"A CITY AND A DATE"

"A CITY AND A DATE."

"St. Paul and June 17th"—these represent "the central point around which all forces of the awakening industrial workers and poor farmers are organizing," says James P. Cannon, who explains the significance of these ever-increasing forces in an able article published in the LABOR HERALD for May.

Comrade Cannon points out the clear line of class difference marking off the political revolt of industrial workers and poor working farmers from the petty bourgeois vacillations of the group calling itself the Conference for Progressive Political Action and its only supporters in the labor movement—the section of trade union officialdom whose itch for personal advance causes them to flirt with the Labor Party idea when the capitalist parties fail to give them political remuneration for "delivering the labor vote" sometimes to the republicans—as in the endorsement given Len Small for governor in Illinois—and sometimes to the democrats—as the railroad brotherhoods' endorsement of McAdoo.

Only the blind could fail to see the distinction pointed out by Cannon between the St. Paul convention and the C. P. P. A., whose rules for admission to its Cleveland convention make it impossible for rank and file workers or farmers to get representation, while the Farmer-Labor convention at St. Paul on June 17th, is especially designed to admit rank and file workers of local unions and farmers' groups. The reasons why the conservatives oppose the St. Paul convention is set off by Comrade Cannon against the reasons the union militants should support it, and every union progressive who is not yet clear on the great Farmer-Labor movement should read this article in the May number of the LABOR HERALD.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

The Easter Week rebellion in Ireland in the year 1916, led by James Connolly, was celebrated thruout the United States by the nationalist Irish workers but with the exception of a meeting held here in Chicago, under the auspices of the James Connolly Club, Connolly's name was barely mentioned. Connolly was the intellectual leader of the Irish labor and revolutionary movement and its brainiest man of action. His writings can be read to advantage not alone by Irish workers, but by Communists of all countries. The nationalist Irish politicians do not wish to give his name publicity fearing that the workers would begin to read his book. Only a small group here in America, who are not carried away by Barnum and Bailey antics, are keeping Connolly's memory and Connolly's message before the Irish workers and thru their monthly magazine the "Irish People" they are bringing Irish workers into the ranks of the Workers Party as Connolly would have done were he alive today. That is the kind of work that counts; not merely blowing wind into a deflated political bladder.

Having seduced President Harding's cabinet, and got the goods on ex-president Wilson's cabinet, one of them being caught red-handed in a major piece of robbery, the Communists sprung their trap, and started a public investigation. Now, the masses see, instead of a government in Washington, a gang of crooks getting kicked around like mongrels, and each crook squealing on the other, trying to save his own neck. It is a beastly Communist plot as is proven quite conclusively by strike-breaker Daugherty. Harry says he did not taste a drop of liquor since the Volstead law was passed. This leaves him without a pardonable excuse for a speech that would make Harry K. Thaw mad for being kept in an insane asylum for seven years, while Harry M. Daugherty was running the United States.

Because she could not procure food for her three small children, a poor women in Denver, Colorado, turned on the gas and took the lives of herself and her children. Her husband was employed by a local transfer company. Of him she wrote: "He has always done the best he could, but he was up against it like me. Put in the world to work—no education, no training. Nothing to do but work like dogs. I don't think I will have any worse hell in the place I am going." This is the beneficient system that we are urged to protect with our lives against communism. A system that spends millions to protect insane and murderous millionaires and allows women and children to starve and die.

VICTORY FOR I. L. G. W. SEEN IN HYMEN SURRENDER

HYMEN BROS., DIE-HARD BOSSES, SURRENDER TO THE GARMENT STRIKERS

One of the strongest shops of the Dress Manufacturers' Association has signed the agreement with the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. Over 100 strikers will return to their places at Hymen Brothers, 324 South Market street, on Friday morning.

Some of the most active picketing was done in front of the Hymen Bros.' plant and these employers were continually on the alert, earlier in the strike, to have their girls arrested.

With the utter failure of these tactics, these big bosses were compelled to recognize the power of the organized workers and to sign the agreement with the union.

Hyman Bros. Active Against Pickets.

As many as seven "harness bulls" and at least an equal number of plain-clothes dicks used to be stationed around the entrance to the Hymen shop building, for this firm and others. During the last few weeks of the strike the terrific extra expense burdening the bosses made them lay off some of their private sluggers and try to use the States Attorney's men only. Again they failed to scare the girls and men pacing the streets in defense of their organization and finally they had to admit their defeat and sign the agreement with the workers.

This action of one of the biggest bosses of the association, following the discharge of Lawyer Leo LeBosky

OIL THIEVES WILL BE PROSECUTED BY THEIR ASSOCIATES

WASHINGTON, April 30.— The Federal government today, thru its special counsel, Atlee Pomerene and Owen J. Roberts today began action looking to indictment of those criminally responsible for the leasing of the oil reserves.

With Josephus Daniels, former secretary of the navy, and E. C. Finney, assistant secretary of the Interior, as first witnesses, Pomerene and Roberts commenced presentation of evidence to the special grand jury here.

About 20 witnesses in all will be summoned before the grand jury, it was learned from the counsel today. The government's case may be completed in a week, it was said.

"8 MEN BURIED ALIVE" BARES LUMBER LORDS FRAME-UP OF HEROIC CENTRALIA WORKERS

By ROBERT L. MORRISON.

(By Defense News Service.)

SEATTLE, Wash., April 30.—Each day it becomes more difficult for the reactionaries of this state to keep the veil over the main fact in the Centralia case—that the eight I. W. W. members now in Walla Walla prison on a murder charge were convicted not because they murdered anybody, but because they defended their lives against a mob which attacked their hall on Armistice Day, 1919.

All the forces which for four years have combined to hold these men behind the bars have a new challenge with which to reckon. This challenge is contained in a 32-page pamphlet lately issued by the General Defense Committee of Chicago, and now being circulated in all the 40 counties of Washington.

"Eight Men Buried Alive" is the title of the new pamphlet, and it is the most comprehensive account of the Centralia case yet written. Every statement in its pages can be backed up by incontrovertible documentary evidence, the Chicago committee declares. The background of the case, stretching across long years of struggle for decent conditions in the Puget Sound lumber camps and sawmills, is first portrayed and the circumstances which led inevitably to the Armistice Day rioting are related. Then comes the story of the trial at Montesano of the accused; and lastly the affidavits of six jurors, including the foreman, who admit that they were terrorized into returning a verdict of guilty.

Farmer-Labor Members Aid.

Committees are being organized at strategic points to distribute the new pamphlet, so that it will be read by every man and woman in the state. Labor unions in many cities and towns have indicated their willingness to co-operate in the liberation campaign. Numerous Farmer-Labor Party members have agreed to act, following the decision of that party to make the Centralia issue ia vital issue in this year's gubernatorial election campaign. And thruout the lumber woods I. W. W. members fortified with the clear recital of facts in this pamphlet, will continue to spread the story of the conviction at Montesano and as well the indignation which was a factor in two big lumber strikes last year.

"Eight industrial workingmen are buried behind stone walls in the state of Washington for a crime they never committed," the General Defense Committee relates. "They are in prison at Walla Walla. Seven of them were sentenced to serve from 25 to 40 years, and one was found insane, but for some inexplicable reason he also was placed in the penitentiary. They were tried in 1920 for the alleged murder of Lieutenant Warren Grimm (one of

STREET CAR MEN OF PITTSBURGH EAGER TO STRIKE

Vote 2,746 To 14 For Blow At Bosses

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Pittsburgh street carmen voted to walk out immediately after midnight. The vote was by the overwhelming majority of 2,746 to 14. Strike will be averted only by the Pittsburgh Railways Company consenting to arbitration.

In a long statement the Chamber of Commerce backs up the company and opposes the wage increases demanded by the men. The average income of the leaders of the Chamber which is protesting against alleged "high wages pu'ts them in the super-income class which the tax plan of their fellow citizen, Andrew Mellon, is designed to safeguard.

Mayor W. A. Magee, has been talking "mediation." As usual the bosses demand that all the concessions be made by the workers. The workers are protesting against the outrageous "split trick" which compels them to be away from home 12 and 14 hours a day and are demanding a few cents an hour more in wages.

HOOVER FISH STEAL UNDER SENATE FIRE

Alaska Delegate Brands Secretary As Liar

WASHINGTON, April 30.— The most critical hour in the career of Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover opened when Senator King, of Utah, urged the senate to pass a resolution of condemnation against him for turning the great Alaskan fishing rights over to the salmon monopoly and called for a cancellation of the Trust's fishing permits.

Hoover's part in this $60,000,000 a year steal promises to retire him to private life to join Denby and Fall if his corporation connections succeed in keeping him out of jail.

At the same time Dan Sutherland, Alaskan delegate to Congress, makes a public statement branding as "untrue" the Commerce secretary's denial of the accusations against him, and declaring that Hoover is responsible for the Salmon Trust's growth and power.

Hoover Fish Trust Wrote Resolutions

Sutherland then makes the sensational charge that the Alaska Packers Association had drawn up the terms of the Hoover fishing regulations by means of which the Trust has monopolized the salmon streams.

The Alaska Packers Association, which Hoover favors, is intimately connected with him thru his warm personal friendship for R. I. Bentley, its vice-president and C. H. Bentley, a director.

Shows Hoover Lied

"Mr. Hoover's statement that he has "conserved" the Alaska salmon supply and that his department has not granted special privileges to the big four packing gang is entirely untrue," declared the representative of the robbed Alaskans.

OIL COMMITTEEMEN LET HAMON'S WIDOW ESCAPE QUESTIONING

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Mrs. Jake Hamon, widow of the late Oklahoma oil magnate, who was reported to have attempted to swing a deal at the last Republican National convention where he was to have become Secretary of the Interior, was excused without questioning by the Senate oil committee today.

A bitter row developed between republican and democratic members of the committee as to who was responsible for subpoenaing her, which ended with both sides disclaiming responsibility and consequently she was excused.

Mrs. Hamon was dressed in a light brown suit. She wore a black hat with black lace streamers down each side. When Mrs. Hamon took the stand, Sen. Spencer, Missouri, republican, entered a protest against questioning her unless the question related to the leasing of the naval oil reserves.

300 STRIKING CAP MAKERS TO ASSEMBLE TODAY

May Day Meeting In Crawford Hall

Three hundred Cap Makers of Local 5 go on strike to-day to secure their demands for a guaranteed work period of 48 weeks or an unemployment fund from their bosses.

A mass strike meeting will be held this afternoon in Crawford Hall, 4003 Roosevelt road. Max Salsman, organizer for the Young Workers League, and Jack Johnstone, delegate from the Painters Union to the Chicago Federation of Labor, will address the meeting.

The Cap Makers do not anticipate a long strike, but they are prepared to fight until they win the agreement with the independent bosses as well as with the association. At present they have negotiations with the association which may avert a strike against that organization. In case argument fails, the workers will extend their strike to include association shops.

Meetings of strikers will be held regularly in Crawford Hall as long as the strike continues.

PULLMAN BOSSES DODGE PARLEY WITH STRIKERS; WALKOUT GROWS DAILY

The anti-union Pullman Company, following its usual labor crushing tactics, yesterday refused to confer with the striking steel workers. President E. F. Carry, of the Pullman Plant, yesterday instructed his secretary to tell the strike committee over the telephone that their letter asking for a conference "Did not deserve a reply."

The Pullman Company is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars for scab herding and police intimidation, and yesterday admitted thaht they had received the letter sent by the strike committe on April 25th from the strike headquarters at 205 East 115th street.

When William Sunders, temporary secretary of the strike committee asked to talk to Carry over the 'phone yesterday, Carry refused to talk, but instructed his secretary to say that, "I have nothing to answer to the letter I received from the strikers. Their letter does not deserve a reply."

The rumor was widespread today, however, that Carry had told Francis Gunn, one of the officials of the Pullman Company that he must either replace the 700 strikers with competent men within twenty-four hours, or else give in to the demands of the strikers.

CAL'S PROMISE TO "DELIVER" SURELY IS "SOME REASON"

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Henry Ford must have had "some reason" for changing from "a feeling of animosity toward the administration to one of friendliness, Chairman Norris charged today before the Senate Agriculture Committee.

Norris said, Ford issued "a cutting statement" against the administration on Oct. 12, but after a call on President Coolidge and Secretary Weeks on Dec. 3, "his attitude reversed."

"It is almost inconceivable," Norris declared, "that Ford should change his attitude unless he had some reason."

PULLMAN CO. FEARS THE DAILY WORKER AND USES THE POLICE TO STOP WORKERS FROM GETTING IT

The DAILY WORKER will present evidence at the jury trial of Nick Spynow, May 8, at 8855 Exchange Ave., which will lay the foundations for charges now being prepared against Officer Minton, No. 4864.

Officer Minton, on Monday, crazed with drink, fired two shots at Nick Spynow and arrested him for selling the DAILY WORKER.

The DAILY WORKER has been assured by Alderman Sheldon W. Govier, of the 9th ward, by the lawyers for the paper, by Acting Captain Wheeler of the Kensington Police station and by the desk sergeant of the same station that it is lawful to sell newspapers on the streets of Chicago.

The police guarding the Pullman property have instituted a campaign of intimidation against the accredited sales agents of the DAILY WORKER. Anna Todday was shoved from one gate to another Tuesday night by policemen. They threatened her with arrest and even went so far as to forcibly take her to their waiting machine. Miss Todday refused to stop selling the DAILY WORKER, as the paper had instructed her to do, and the policemen were afraid to take her into custody.

Jack McCarthy and Karl Reeve, of the DAILY WORKER, have been threatened with arrest by plain clothes men, uniformed police, and

STRIKE LEADER HITS THE BRUTAL USE OF POLICE IN PULLMAN

John Holmgren, Vice President of the Carmen's Union, and leader of the strike of the car workers in Pullman, made the following statement on the arrest of Nick Spinow, while selling the DAILY WORKER in the strike zone.

"Nick Spynow, car builder, was employed at Western Steel Car & Foundry Company at Hegewisch, Ill. until Monday morning, April 21, 1924 when he was laid off owing to lack of material. He took up the sale of a daily newspaper, the DAILY WORKER, and was selling this paper to the men waiting for street cars at the southeast corner of 114th street and Watt Ave. at 4:15 p. m. Monday, April 26.

"Officer Minton, number 4864, who appeared to be drunk, approached him and ordered Spynow to move on, which he did, but evidently not fast enough for the officer, who handed him a wallop with his fist on the side of the head.

"This speeded up Nick Spynow, the officer drawing his club and following. The chase led south on the east side of the street to the middle of the block, when policeman Minton drew his revolver and fired twice in the general direction of the street. This so scared Nick Spynow that he tripped and fell, his papers flying in all directions.

"The injustice of the proceeding caused some of the workingmen to make a remark or two, with the result that a few of them were prodded with the club of the officer and others hit across the back, the while threatened with a ride in the wagon.

"Many children were at play and were endangered by the flying bullets, while mothers ran screaming to save their children from possible harm. Many people witnessed the outrage but appeared afraid to come forward as witnesses, fearing reprisals. The workingmen are afraid that it means their job, as the paper contains an article on the Pullman Steel Shop strike situation from the day previous.

"At the station much grouping of heads and thumbing of books was necessary when I arrived and requested what the charge was and demanded that he be booked. It was finally decided to book Nick Spynow under Section 366, after which John Stancik signed his bond for $25,000, and his release secured.

RUSS PRODUCTION UP 25 PER CENT SINCE LAST YEAR

Average Wage Increase Is 40 Per Cent

MOSCOW, April 30.—Industrial production has increased 25 per cent during the first half of the budget year 1923-24 (October-March) as compared with the same period in 1922-23. The exchange and trade turnover during the first six months of the current year have increased 150 per cent. During the same period the number of workers engaged in industry have increased 15 per cent, and the real wages of all workers show an increase of 40 per cent on the average.

No Issue of The Daily Worker, May 2

There will be no issue of the DAILY WORKER, May 2nd. This means that Thursday, May 1st, will bea holiday for the DAILY WORKER. But it will be a holiday for greater work for the DAILY WORKER staff and the whole Communist movement in the United States.

Practically all the members of the editorial and business office, as well as the mechanical departments, will be active in May Day meetings, either as speakers or in the arrangements.

All workers should make a real working class holiday of this International May Day, Thursday, May1st.

Get an inspiration from the workers in the union machine shop of the Winkler-Reichmann Co., at 4801S. Morgan St., Chicago.

The men employed in this shop, of a half dozen different nationalities, will not be at their work benches on May Day. They have announced that they will spend the day distributing copies of the DAILY WORKER and union organization literature. The shop will be closed and all those who do not join in the celebration of May Day, thru the distribution of literature, and other activities will be fined $3.

Workers! Remember that if it is absolutely impossible for you to get off the job for this one day, the appeal issued by the Workers Party is that you contribute the day's wages to the DAILY WORKER. Workers! Forward for International May Day, 1924.

STEEL TRUST MINE GIVES UP ITS DEAD

Furnace Glare Lights Tragic Scene

BENWOOD, W. Va., April 30. The 114 coal diggers who entered the Benwood Mill mine of the Wheeling Steel Corporation at Benwood on Monday were killed in the gas explosion which wrecked the workings. Seventy-six charred bodies, had been removed from the mine at dawn today. Rescue squads continue to push their way thru the barriers of stone and dirt that block the passageways.

Scab Mine.

The Wheeling Steel Corporation operates blast furnaces, bar, sheet and tin mills in Wheeling and various other towns in the vicinity. All the operations of this corporation are strictly non-union altho formerly some of the steel mills were organized.

The Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers is still officially maintaining a strike at the steel mills but this has been going on for so long that the mills have apparently secured all the help needed.

The coal diggers entered the scab mine the morning after it was declared safe. The mine is an old one and was considered dangerous. The scene around the mouth of the pit is heartrending. Men and women remain there in the drizzling rain in a sort of stupor waiting for the rescue squads to bring the charred and crushed bodies of their husbands, fathers or sons to the surface.

Explosion a Mystery?

The president of the scab corporation issued a statement. He does not know what caused the explosion. It was a gas explosion, but why there was such an explosion he did not know. Did not an inspector declare the mine safe? But mine inspectors are too often tools of the coal barons and the coal barons run West Va. Only the lives of workers were at stake and labor is plentiful and scab labor is cheap. Why should the president of the corporation worry his head over the cause of the gas explosion.

Only the bodies of two victims have been identified. They are Mine Foreman, George Holliday and his son, George Holliday, Jr. Singeing flame and shattering concussion did the dread work.

While the work of removing the bodies of the corporation's victims was proceeding, the red flare of a blast furnace, owned by the Wheeling Steel Corporation leaped into the sky, showering sparks. Its reflection danced madly against the timbers of the pit mouth glowing on the faces of the men who were taking their dead comrades out of the earth. The glare from the furnace reflected the brutal unconcern of the great soulless corporation for the lives of the workers who coin their blood and brawn into gold for its coffers and give their lives in its service.

Farmers Can Wait! —House Delaying Relief Legislation

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 30.—Chairman Haugen of the agriculture committee of the House is seeking a special rule to expedite consideration of the McNary-Haugen bill, which would create a $200,000,000 government corporation to deal in basic farm products.

This is the last important legislation to come before the House this session.

FIRST BUDGET OF BRITISH LABOR GOVERNMENT GIVEN TO COMMONS

LONDON, April 30.—Philip Snowden introduced in the House of Commons today the first budget of the Labor Government.

A crowded House listened attentively while the Chancellor of the exchequer outlined the fiscal program of the MacDonald Government.

Hands Off Mexico!

The oil workers of Tampico, Mexico, are out on strike. They are waging a brave fight.

But in addition to struggling against their own bosses, and against the Mexican government, they are forced to fight the United States government as well.

• • • •

The Mexican Communist Party has sent an appeal to the Workers Party urging that all labor in the United States unite in urging that Washington and Wall Street keep their,—"Hands Off Mexico!"

The DAILY WORKER gladly joins in transmitting this appeal to the workers thruout the United States.

• • • •

The workers of the Tampico oil wells first endured the tyranny of the Fascisti rule imposed upon them by the counter-revolutionary general, Jose Moran. He has been terrorizing the whole Tampico petroleum region. But he is now in flight before the Obregon forces.

• • • •

But the rule of Obregon, supported by the warships of U. S. imperialism, is just as tyrannous. When the Mexican government sent in troops "to protect" the property of the El Aguila Oil Co., these profiteers took the opportunity to smuggle unorganized workers into their refineries.

The government-controlled labor unions are letting down in their energetic conduct of the strike, claiming that they must not involve Mexico in troubles with the United States, which means Standard Oil, Sinclair Oil and Doheny Oil.

• • • •

H. V. Tompkins, representative of the American Oil Men's Association, in a conference with Manuel Perez Trevino, Secretary of Commerce and Industry, demanded that the Obregon Government furnish armed troops to crush the strike of the Tampico oil workers.

But Senor Trevino is reported to have replied that the Mexican Constitution sanctions the right of workers to strike.

But President Obregon has just issued a statement, under pressure from the big oil interests, from Washington and Wall Street, that practically makes picketing illegal.

• • • •

It is under these conditions that Mexican Oil Workers sent their greetings and their appeal to the workers of the United States. They say they can fight the native capitalists, their own bosses. But the intervention of foreign imperialism is too much for them. They call upon the workers of the United States to help.

Let America's workers, individually and thru their organizations, demand that the United States keep its "HANDS OFF MEXICO!"

Let them demand that Rockefeller, Doheny and Sinclair keep their "Hands Off America!"

Let the workers and their organizations send their demand to congress. Send it to the senators and representatives. Force the members of congress to raise their voices against U. S. strike-breaking in Mexico.

WORKERS OF THE UNITED STATES! HANDS ACROSS THE BORDER! STAND BY YOUR BROTHERS AND COMRADES IN MEXICO IN THEIR HOUR OF NEED!

SLICK SLEMP TO BE MOUTHPIECE FOR SILENT CAL

Canny Confidence Man Is Campaign Pilot

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, April 30.—C. Bascom Slemp's stock as probable chairman of the Republican National Committee and director in chief of the Coolidge campaign went up several points today. This followed President Coolidge's announcement that he personally had taken charge, in relation to essential matters, of the party machinery now being prepared for the Cleveland convention and the ensuing campaign.

This means that Slemp, the most active and the closest of the president's political advisers, stands the best chance of becoming the president's mouthpiece and campaign director general, replacing John T. Adams after the Cleveland convention! or so it is construed by many of the best informed republicans here.

A Practical Politician.

Slemp, whose appointment as presidential secretary created a great deal of gossip, has proved his worth to the administration in a political way many times. He and President Coolidge were virtual strangers when Slemp took up his duties. Since that time, however, the suave ,skillful Virginian has impressed Mr. Coolidge deeply with his political acumen and his ability to play the game of practical politics along the lines which Mr. Coolidge has learned.

Slemp right now is less a secretary than a political adviser and strategist. William M. Butler, of course, is in charge of the pre-convention campaign, because until the convention has actually picked its nominee, the party organization, as such, cannot appear committed to any one man. But nothing now stands in the way of Mr. Coolidge's immediate nomination; hence the time has come when the president can openly admit he has assumed party leadership and intends to exercise it actively from now on.

Trial at Eureka, Calif.

EUREKA, Cal.—Nine men are on trial here for criminal syndicalism, their second trial. All the regular professional witnesses are being used, also a new one, named Munson, who has confessed that while a member of the I. W. W. he was a spy in the pay of District Atty. Cowan of Sacramento. This man has been expelled from the organization. Defense witnesses have been called from all the basic industries of California.

GOVERNOR THIEF IS SENTENCED TO TEN YEAR TERM

McCray Not So Shrewd As Crooked Cal

(Special to The Daily Worker)

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 30.—Warren T. McCray, former governor of Indiana, was sentenced today to ten years' imprisonment in the Federal prison at Atlanta, and fined $10,000, by Federal Judge Anderson for using the mails in a scheme to defraud. Immediate preparations for the trip to Atlanta were made.

Shortly after 10:15 o'clock, Emmet F. Branch, Lieutenant Governor, took the oath of office as governor. The oath was administered by Chief Justice Ewbank, of the State Supreme Court.

Another Indictment Out.

There is an indictment now pending against McCray and Amos D. Morris, former cashier of the discount and deposit bank at Kentland, Ind., charging them with violation of the national banking laws.

McCray's conviction and sentence grew out of his financial failure nearly eight months ago.

In August of last year, McCray called his creditors together informed them he was no longer able to meet his financial obligations and offered to turn over to them his vast holdings of land and livestock.

Blamed Agricultural Depression.

He blamed his failure on the general agricultural depression which had depreciated his properties.

Creditors of the governor, however attributed his failure to speculations on the Chicago Board of Trade and to purchase of land at peak prices when he had no funds to back up his speculations.

Request was made for a grand jury investigation. McCray was indicted in the Marion criminal court on charges of forgery, larceny, issuance of false statements and embezzlement of $155,000 from the Indiana State Board of Agriculture.

He was subsequently indicted by the federal grand jury on charges of fraudulent use of the mails and violation of the national banking laws.

A trial in criminal court on the embezzlement charges, resulted in a hung jury. The second trial brought conviction.

Smallpox Appears.

MOLINE, Ill., April 30.—The Moline City hospital was under strict quarantine today following an outbreak of smallpox in the institution.

PULLMAN BOSSES DODGE MEETING WITH EMPLOYES

the various shop departments of the Pullman plant have made several unsuccessful attempts to get the men together and compromise on the demands of the strikers. The reamers did not go back to work yesterday and refused to meet with some of the company stool pigeons who were trying to get them back to work.

The letter sent by the men to President Carry asking for a conference, which Carry so disdainfully refuses to reply to, follows:

Strike Headquarters
Pullman Shopmen
205 E. 115th Street
Phone; Pull. 0529.

Chicago, Ill., April 25, 1924.

E. F. Carry, President
L. S. Hungerford, Vice-President
The Pullman Company
Pullman Building, Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—

On April 14th work was suspended in the Passenger Steel Shop owing to wage cuts arbitrarily applied. Since that date many more men have joined in the protest and while meetings have been held with local officials of the company no results in the adjustment of the controversy have been accomplished.

Therefore, it is the unanimous sentiment of the employes involved that a meeting be arranged with either or both of you for the purpose of discussing, and if possible settling the matter creating the suspension of work.

We request that you meet a committee selected by, and representative of, the employes at an hour convenient on either Monday April 28 or the day following.

A letter or telephone call acknowledging receipt and advising of date and hour will be appreciated.

Yours Truly,
Wm. C. SANDUS
Sec'y pro te.m.

Yesterday's strike meeting was larger than any yet held. Some of the upholsters walked out and joined the strikers yesterday. They reported that the work in the plant has practically stopped.

There are nearly 20,000 men at work in the entire Pullman plant. Strikers pointed out to the DAILY WORKER today that the departments are dependent upon each other to keep busy. The strike of the riveters, reamers, buckers and all the outside steel workers, who assemble the cars, has therefore practically stopped the work of all of the 20,000 men. Material is piling up, and no cars are being riveted together.

More of the strikers joined the local of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen at yesterday's strike meeting following the appeal of John Holmgren. Almost all of the strikers are now in the union while the others have asked for applications.

Nick Spynow was selling the DAILY WORKER outside the gates of the plant again yesterday. One plain clothesman tried to get Spynow to stop selling the papers by telling him that, "The strikers are a bad bunch. They are no good and you ought to be ashamed to mix up with them." This dick told Spynow that he was selling DAILY WORKERS because he is a foreigner and doesn't know any better. But Spynow replied he was going to continue to sell the DAILY WORKER on the streets every day as he knew he had a lawful right to do so.

Wait Transportation Money Back

Archibald Caldwell and Thomas Doig have placed affidavits in the hands of D. J. Bentall, attorney, in an effort to secure back the transportation money which the Pullman Company has refused to pay the men. Caldwell and Doig were hired by J. Baxter, of the Pullman Company, in Detroit. Baxter gave the men his word of honor that there was no strike on at Pullman and no labor trouble of any kind. He agreed, with that understanding, to refund the transportation of these men after they had worked at the Pullman Plant for thirty days.

Mr. Bentall intimated to the DAILY WORKER last night that Doig and Caldwell were entitled to their money, and that very soon the Pullman Company might have an embarassing suit on their hands.

"I called up E. F. Carry," said Bentall to the DAILY WORKER." And he tried to put the men off again. These men were kept waiting for two days around the Pullman Plant and O'Leary, the employment manager, and other Pullman officials refused them their money. They have given me their power of attorney to act for them. The men are broke and without jobs. The Pullman Company has put them in the position of either scabbing on their fellow workers or starving, and I am going to do my best to see that they receive their transportation money as well as compensation for the lost time and the great inconvenience. Carry told me over the telephone that he would see what can be done. Perhaps we can hurry him in his decision by court action."

Many of the other men from distant points who have been similiarly robbed by the Pullman Company have turned the matter over to Bentall and given him authority to act for them in getting back their money.

HUNGARIAN IMMIGRANT MAY BE DUPONT FIRM TRAVELING SALESMAN

NEW YORK, April 29.—William J. Burns has not yet declared that he has the 99th positively correct solution of the Wall Street explosion, but unless he is too busy dodging jail for his complicity in the Daugherty-Smith criminal activities, a statement should be forthcoming. A man described as a Hungarian immigrant was arrested by the police, on suspicion of having evil intentions toward society. He was found wandering rather aimlessly near the home of the late Charles Murphy of Tammany Hall.

The police obligingly found a dynamite bomb in one pocket and a revolver in another and immediately concluded that he was the Moscow agent assigned to the task of overthrowing the government on May Day which is a favorite day for revolutions and furniture movers. There is a theory, however, that he might be an agent of the Dupont Powder company who forgot to leave his samples at home in his anxiety to see the Charlie Murphy funeral.

Moscow it is stated in quarters generally considered authentic has more up-to-date methods of overthrowing governments than bombs, which are out of date, chief among which is the distribution of a germ labelled "X. Y. C. 33" in the Moscow laboratory. This deadly germ is fatal only to the bourgeoisie and acts with almost human intelligence. It does not indiscrimately attack a bourgeois but selects ocassions such as meetings of the National Civic Federations and other counter-revotionary organizations. When Gompers was seized with dizziness at a recent banquet it was feared that Moscow "got him" and it was also rumored that this germ was responsible for the fainting fit thrown by Judge Gary some time ago while delivering an address.

Since then the germs have learned a lot and May Day may be selected for trying them at mass meetings on the enemies of the workingclass. New York chemists are working on an anti-germ mask which the police will wear on the first of May if the preventative is completed by them.

stirred when Senator King of Utah opened his attack on the Commerce Secretary who is generally regarded as closer to Wall Street than anyone in the cabinet except Mellon and Hughes.

King's resolution demands the smashing of the salmon monopoly. It says in part:

"The Secretary of Commerce, without authority of law, has suspended the fishery laws relating to Alaska, and has granted exclusive fishery rights to favor packing corporations, and has denied to American citizens the common right of fishery as established by the law of the land and recognized by the courts of the United States."

Demand Monopoly End

The resolution goes on to declare that the sense of the United States senate is "that all orders and regulations granting exclusive fishing rights to packing corporations or others in Alaska waters should be immediately rescinded and abrogated.

A bill before demands the breaking up of the monopoly.

The lobby against the anti-monopoly law includes the salmon packers themselves, tin plate manufacturers, banks and merchants, Sutherland says.

3,000 RESTAURANT WORKERS MAY CALL STRIKE MAY DAY

Three thousand workers in Greek restaurants of Chicago are celebrating May Day by making a united demand on the restaurant owners for the eight-hour day and the six-day week. Strikes will follow against all bosses who refuse to yield.

This revolt against the 12-14 hour day and the seven-day week that now prevails is being made under theauspices of the Amalgated Food Workers whose headquarters are at 214 N. State st.

Albert E. Stewart, branch secretary for the union, said the spirit of the workers is splendid and that he was confident that they would keep up the picket lines until victory if any bosses fail to see the light May Day.

He urges all Chicago union men, thru the DAILY WORKER, to stay away from oaoll struck shops.

VICTORY SEEN IN GARMENT STRIKE AS HYMEN QUITS

and the signing of the agreement by smaller bosses, further emphasizes the weak condition of the Dress Manufacturers in the loop.

The long and strong strike of the plucky garment workers against their too-smart bosses is making a big hole not only in the bosses' bank but also in the ranks of their association. The submission of the Hymen shop will undoubtedly draw other association bosses with it.

Two small firms at 302 So. Market street, Weiss and Garfinkle, and several other small dress manufacturers have had to go out of business because of the garment workers' strike. A few of these firms settled early to have their work completed, and, failing to meet the expense of their previous participation in the strike, they closed their shops entirely.

Judge Knows No May Day.

Thirteen injunction cases came up before Judge Charles Foell this morning. They were postponed from yesterday. May Day means nothing to a Superior Court Judge. He isn't in the class of workers that counts the first of May the greatest of all holidays.

It is possible that these cases may be again put off because of a long murder trial which the court must hear first.

The cases of the seven girls who were arrested late Friday evening on Market street have been set for May 6 before Judge Hebel. The girls had to be taken to the Judge's home before their release could be secured, as no court was in session after six p. m., when they were arrested. Hebel is the third judge to take garment injunction cases.

Twenty-eight cases come before Judge Sullivan on the same day, May 6, unless they are defaulted by the prosecution or put off again.

Special Program Today.

The striking garment workers are planning a lively May Day celebration today. They have an excellent concert planned and several good speakers will address them. Vice-President Perlsfein will be one of the speakers to deliver a May Day message to the striking workers who have proven themselves a real force for their employers to reckon with.

The strikers held a peppy dance in their usual strike meeting time on Tuesday.

More unions are contributing funds to help the garment workers finish their fight triumphantly. Local 275 of the Painters contributed $100 at its meeting Tuesday night and offered assistance to the Pullman strikers whenever they should ask aid.

The garment workers are as determined as ever to keep their fighting ranks intact until every one of the dress manufacturers has signed with the union. Their recent victories have only added to their vim and the girls and men all say, "We'll win."

Differences Dropped For Strike.

Neither injunction, arrest, intimidation of police and hired sluggers, nor inducements offered individually by the bosses have succeeded in breaking the united ranks of the strikers or in lessening their determination to get their well-deserved victory.

All differences among the members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers were dropped at the first hint of a strike call and the expelled members have shown themselves to be entirely with the union members against the exploiting bosses. They have been among the most active in carrying on the strike. The expelled members have appealed their case to the General Executive Board of the International and expect to go to Boston to be at the convention when their case comes up.

American workers who wish to help Russia grow out of the necessity of depending on capitalists for financial aid to develop her resources and who also wish to help in the work of Soviet reconstruction are members of the commune.

Competent workers of the various trades are invited to join the 'Herald Commune" now, as the first group is expected to leave soon.

The society meets every second and fourth Sunday at 3 p. m. at the Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia, 1902 West Division st., 2nd floor. The secretary is S. Miller, 1243 N. Claremont ave.

BIG CONVENTION IN CANONSBURG FOR JUNE 17

20,000 Workers And Farmers Represented

By JAMES C. STRONG.
(Special to The Daily Worker)

CANONSBURG, Penn., April 30.—The Washington County Federated Farmer-Labor Party, held its second convention here on Sunday. Fifty-five delegates, representing approximately 20,000 workers assembled in the Labor Temple.

The wage earners of this country made another great stride forward in their fight for political freedom, against the rule of the Pennsylvania coal and steel barons, whose political machine is in control of the country.

Temporary chairman Stose, called the convention to order.

After a speech by Sec'y-Treasurer Strong in which he spoke on the Farmer-Labor movement, the floor was thrown open to the delegates for five minute speeches. While each expressed himself a little differently, all were unanimous in saying that it was time for the producers of the United States to throw away their petty differences and prejudices and join into one big independent, class political party of the Workers and Farmers. To get out upon the political field and challenge the employing class government to a finish fight.

A notable feature of the convention was the presence of three colored workers, delegates from the Colored Voters' League of Washington County. These delegates stated the colored workers were willing to go along with any sincere movement that would better the insufferable conditions of the workers.

Several delegates were present from Fayette county, adjoining Washington. They expressed the belief that probably they were out of place at this convention. After being assured that a welcome was extended to all workers, they told of having been sent by their unions to get information, and find out all about the Farmer-Labor movement.

This again gives the lie to the contention that the workers are not ready for independent political action. These men came fifty miles in search of instruction and enlightenment as how to organize the forces of the workers and farmers against the powerful rule of organized capital.

The convention unanimously endorsed the June 17th convention at St. Paul. A resolution was adopted endorsing the formation of a State Party in Pennsylvania, and calling upon those issuing the call for the Allentown convention, on May 12th, not to put off any longer the building of a real Farmer-Labor Party in the State of Pennsylvania.

Recognition of Soviet Russia and nationalization of mines was endorsed. A resolution condemning and protesting against the action of the Washington County judge who refused citizenship papers to Andy Harmison, a coal miner because of his political beliefs, was adopted without a dissenting vote.

NEW YORK CITY ORGANIZATIONS, ATTENTION!

District No. 2, Workers Party, has arranged a grand excursion and moonlight dance on the Hudson river for Saturday, June 28th. The commodious steamer Clermont, having a capacity of 3,000, has been chartered for this occasion.

Friendly organizations are urged to keep this date in mind and not arrange for any affairs that week.

Workers' Children To Rival Capitalist Scout Movements

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, April 30.—To train up boys and girls friendly to the labor movement and to hate war is the purpose of the newly formed National Council for Child development. Organizations for working-class children to take the place of the Boy Scouts and Camp Fire Girls are to be started in every state.

Labor officials, educators and parents met at the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers' union headquarters April 23 for organizing the New York district. Thomas Curtiss, New York building trades council, is president, and Abraham Baroff, Ladies' Garment Workers, treasurer. A. J. Muste, Brookwood Labor college, and Maude Swartz, Women's Trade Union league are vice-presidents.

Socialist Leaders Support Bourgeois U. S. Mediocracy

NEW YORK CITY, April 30.—Those signing the latest paper call of the "Peoples Legislative Service" and the Conference for Progressive Political Action are Morris Hilquit and Percy S. Grant. The Socialist leader and the unorthodox Episcopalian find themselves bumping elbows as they politely thumb noses at the old political parties and the class Farmer-Labor parties to either side of them.

The timid Norman Thomas is aligned with the "small but determined group" that thinks it has fought so valiantly against the greatest odds! So, too, Helen Phelps Stokes, Morris Berman, Abraham Baroff, Harriot S. Blatch, Alfred J. Boulton, A. G. Dill, John Lovejoy Elliott, Jessie W. Huhan, Morris Kaufman, Harry W. Laidler, Algernon Lee, Bertha H. Mally, Darvin J. Meserole, Joseph A. Whitehorn, Henry Neumann, Charles F. Powlinson, Mary R. Sanford, Edmund Seidel, and B. Charney Vladeck.

"Their labor and sacrifice will have been in vain if, now, the workers, farmers, and forward-looking men and women of the great middle class of our nation do not rally to their support," says the call, referring to the old party progressives in congress.

OPERA STARS AND FREIHEIT SINGING SOCIETY ON PROGRAM FOR BIG MAY DAY FESTIVAL

Preparations have been fully completed for a successful May Day meeting at the North Side Turner Hall, 820 North Clark street, 8 p. m., Thursday evening, May 1st, 1924.

For the concert program there will be the Russian grand opera stars, Nita Obrastova coloratura soprano, and Gabrilius Hrzanowski, baritone, and the well-known Freiheit Singing Society who always please an audience.

An excellent number of speakers have been obtained, among which are Wm. F. Dunne, editor, DAILY WORKER; Alexander Bittleman, member Central Executive Committee of Workers Party, and former Secretary Jewish Federation, J. Kowalski, Secretary Polish section, Workers Party, A. Presi, Editor Alba Nuova, Italian Weekly; John Williamson, N. E. C. of Young Workers' League; Comrade Deweatkin of the Russian Federation, as well as a South Slavic speaker has been scheuled. Martin Abern will preside.

Both halls in N. S. Turner hall have been rented for the occasion in order to handle the big overflow crowd.

May Day this year will be an occasion for pushing forward more rapidly the campaign for the formation of a Class Farmer-Labor Party in the U. S. which we expect will be achieved at the great Farmer-Labor Conference to be held June 17th at St. Paul.

Any worker interested at all in understanding the conditions under which he lives and who hopes to organize industrially and politically for a change, will be in a hurry to get to this May Day Demonstration and Celebration. Admission is nominal, being only twenty-five cents.

What Does May Day Mean To You?

How are you to celebrate this May Day? Are you going to celebrate the victories labor has won? They are many and great ones. But everywhere the greatest victories are yet to be won. May Day is a day when labor looks around, takes an inventory of its achievements and its strength and girds its loins for new struggles and new victories.

How will American workers celebrate this May Day? What are the struggles to which it marches forward with head erect, with militant spirit?

Let May Day, 1924, be a great day of achievement for the American working class. Let it be remembered as a day when great things for labor were accomplished by the real militants.

Make May Day, 1924, a DAILY WORKER May Day! Let those who work for wages give their day's pay to the DAILY WORKER. Let those who do not work for the boss this May Day put in their day in making the DAILY WORKER grow by getting new subscribers.

N. Y. Industrial Organizers to Discuss Shop Nuclei.

This will be a continuation of the discussion begun at the last meeting of Industrial organizers on April 7th. Other problems relative to our industrial activity will also be considered. All organizers should attend without fail.

THE NEEDLE TRADES ALLIANCE IS DEAD; "REST IN PEACE"

By ROSE WORTIS.

The Needle Trade Alliance is dead. This is not a prophesy but a fact. The Alliance organized for the second time last summer, has gone the way of its predecessor. It is no more.

The official weekly of the Journeymen Tailors Union writes:

"As we predicted, the Alliance has ceased to exist. Our union has sent three delegates to the first conference at which an attempt was made to organize the Alliance; and we sent three delegates to the funeral of the Alliance, held February 22nd."

The editor of this weekly complains that his union was the only one that has lost money in the entire venture. For the Journeymen Tailors had actually undertaken to defray expenses of sending three delegates sent to the conference, while all the other unions, located in New York, were spared this unnecessary outlay.

What happened at the conference of February 22nd and who is responsible for the death of the Alliance?

Sigman came to the conference of the Alliance with a grievance. He wanted the Alliance to adopt a common policy for all affiliated unions. This policy was not to outline common methods for building and strengthening the organization, or to lay plans for unified struggle of the workers against the employers, but was to bind all associated unions to carry out a joint campaign against the revolutionary elements in the organization. Sigman demanded a united front against the progressives on his policy of disruption. He wanted a common plan which would compel all unions to follow his tactics against the Lefts; to break up locals, and persecute the militants. Without this he saw no reason for the existence of the Alliance.

Hillman came to the same conference with a different plan. He did not oppose such a joint policy, but he wanted that this policy should be expressed in general terms in a resolution against an organized opposition within the unions and that the officialdom of each union should determine its own methods of carrying out that policy. In other words, Hillman wanted a joint resolution which should be in harmony with his tactics as laid down some time ago in the so-called 'Declaration of Peace" to the New York Amalgamated organization. While Sigman on the other hand wanted a united campaign against the militants along the lines of the Cossack, union-splitting methods he had already initiated.

Because of this disagreement the conference was disbanded and the "Alliance" for all practical purposes dissolved. Although no official burial took place, the last rites were administered and there is no hope for its resurrection.

The secretary of the Journeymen Tailors Union believes that responsibility for the Alliance rests upon Sigman and Hillman alone, but this is a shortsighted estimation. Responsible is the entire officialdom of our unions which organized this sort of an Alliance. And if the officials are guilty, it is not because they put a practical end to the Alliance, but because they are the principal promoters of the policy that has produced dissention and disintegration.

The death of the Alliance is quite natural. In reality the Alliance was born a monstrosity, the product of a sick leadership. The Alliance was organized only to delude the masses into believing that by this means the workers were being united. In reality however, this leadership never wanted unity. At the conference of February 22nd their bluff was called and the actual death of the Alliance reveals their insincerity.

The rank and file of our union will not mourn over this disclosure and bewail the death of the perverted Alliance. The progressive workers in our unions are striving to achieve a real unification of the unions in the industry. The amalgamation of all the unions in the needle trades is the only plan of strengthening our organized power. Amalgamation is the slogan for which the rank and file must carry on a strong campaign in the unions. There is nothing to regret in the death of the Alliance.

"May its soul rest in peace." That is all that can be said.

STRIKE OF SUGAR SLAVES BROKEN; NO ORGANIZATION

Demand Shorter Hours And More Pay

SEATTLE, April 30.—The latest revolt of the sugar plantattion workers seems doomed to be added to the long list of disheartening defeats suffered in the past quarter century by the Oriental laborers in Hawaii. Altho 5,000 to 10,000 Filipinos quit the plantation camps with their families when the call was issued April 1, the companies were able to continue operations by bringing in Japanses laborers.

Three main factors enter into the apparent failure of the Filipinos' strike.

First—Use of the island police in great numbers at all camps and towns. The sheriff of Oahu visited all groups of strikers asking them to return to work. Strikers were disheartened by the use of troops called to overawe them, while other workers were persuaded not to join the strike by the presence of the armed men.

Second—Lack of homes and domain where they can live and hold meetings in security. The strikers were ordered to quit their homes, owned by the sugar companies, immediately after the walkout and were forbidden to hold meetings in any island towns except Honolulu.

Third—Lack of permanent, effective labor organization. The Higher Wages movement has been in existence less than a year and may possibly disappear, to be succeeded in years to come by other evanescent "movements." Filipinos have crowded into Honolulu where the movement's headquarters have tried to take care of them. Many have departed for Manila.

The strike was called to reduce hours from 11 and 12 to 8 and to increase wages from $1 to $2 a day. Better working conditions also were demanded.

PULLMAN CO. FEARS THE DAILY WORKER AND USES THE POLICE TO STOP WORKERS FROM GETTING IT

private Pullman guards if they did not stop selling the paper on the streets adjacent to the Pullman gates. They have been pushed from one gate to another, run down one street and up another for selling the DAILY WORKER at the Pullman gates.

Spynow Gets Special Attention.

But Nick Spynow, of 10701 Stephenson avenue, the Pullman agent for the DAILY WORKER has been singled out for the most vicious assaults of the police. Spynow has time and again had his papers taken from him by uniformed police, and only obtained them back again after stubborn argument on the part of DAILY WORKER representatives. Saturday, Spynow was selling papers at 103rd street when a fat police sergeant took his papers away from him and started to arrest him. Only the intervention of John Holmgren, strike leader, saved Spynow from arrest.

On Tuesday, the day after Spynow's arrest on Monday, the police again began their unlawful attack on Spynow. He was rushed from the employment gate down to 103rd street, and from 103rd street back to 111th street. Word had gone out, probably at the direction of Pullman Company officials, that, "The sale of the paper will be stopped." More police were on hand Tuesday night than at any time, since the start of the strike. Spynow, Reeve, Miss Hodday, John Harvey, and Sam Green were roughly handled and threatened and cursed at.

The most flagrant outrage, has been the arrest, and attempted shooting of Nick Spynow. After Spynow was beaten over the head, and Officer Minton, number 4864, had drawn his club, he started to rush Ppynow down Watt avenue, near 113th street. Spynow, seeing that Officer Minton was dangerously drunk, started to walk briskly away to escape the drunken man's drawn club. Minton drew his revolver and fired two shots at Spynow, who flung himself on the ground to escape being hit. The shots flew over Spynow's head and barely missed some children who were further down the street. Minton seized Spynow, confiscated his papers and telephoned for the patrol wagon.

Officer Beats Bystanders.

By this time a crowd of workers, who were coming out of the Calumet Car shop, nearby, stopped and remonstrated with Officer Minton at his brutality. Minton again drew his club, and brutally beat the bystanders off over the shoulders and head with it.

A friend of Spynow, seeing Spynow in the hands of a drunken, irresponsible policeman, came up and asked Spynow what was the trouble. Officer Minton, number 4864, clubbed Spynow's friend over the head viciously. Minton's blows beat Spynow's friend to the ground, his clothes being torn, his hat falling off, and he receiving an ugly gash in the head. This man has agreed to act as a witness for the DAILY WORKER when Spynow comes to trial on May 8th before Branch 38, of the municipal court. His name is being withheld until that time because he fears further police violence.

until that time because he fears further police violence.

A laundry driver, who has also been secured as a witness, informed Karl Reeve, who was selling papers at the main Pullman gate, of the attempted shooting of Spynow. At the Kensington police station, desk sergeant No. 432, who refused to give his name, told Reeve that "Spynow has not been booked yet, you can't see him and you can't get him out." For the next half hour Reeve witnessed a most amusing exhibition of the mockery of justice. Minton was scurrying around with a bundle of DAILY WORKERS, the desk sergeant was calling for Captain Patrick Wheeler, Wheeler was calling for Officer Minton. What were they doing? Why, after trying to shoot down Nick Spynow, after hounding him for days, after dragging him to the stationhouse, taking from him his watch, pocketbook, private papers and letters and money and locking him up, ALDERMAN GOVIER HAD TOLD THEM THAT THERE IS NO LAW AGAINST SELLING PAPERS ON THE STREETS OF CHICAGO. Govier told Wheeler that a man does not even need a permit of any kind to sell newspapers unless he runs a permanent news stand.

Wheeler, the desk sergeant, and Minton kept the DAILY WORKER agent locked up and kept the DAILY WORKER representative waiting while they looked throu the city law books to see if by hook or crook they could find a charge to justify their unlawful assault upon Spynow.

Finally they agreed that [illegible]now had violated ordinance 366. Reeve demanded a written copy of the charges, and was refused. The desk sergeant refused to tell Reeve what Ordinance 366 was. He was obviously nervous as he wrote Spynow's name in the book. His hand shook so that he almost dropped the pen. Meanwhile John Holmgren, leader of the strike, had secured the bail from John Stancik, 205 East 115th street.

Gets Belongings Back.

It was only after persistent demand that the desk sergeant returned Spynow's belongings. They kept a dozen copies of the DAILY WORKER as evidence. Reeve informed acting Captain Pat Wheeler, on behalf of the DAILY WORKER, that Spynow was the accredited agent for the paper, and the DAILY WORKER would continue in spite of threats to send Nick Spynow out to sell the papers on the streets of Pullman.

In court Tuesday morning, Officer Minton showed up, still half drunk. His clothes were rumpled and torn, and his hand was swelled up and bruised. A court attache told the DAILY WORKER that Minton had been out on a spree Monday night and had run his flivver into a lamp-post.

Officer Minton, was found by Reeve, trying to coax Spynow to sign a paper. He told Spynow it was only a matter of form and that Spynow had to sign it. Upon examination, Reeve found that OFFICER MINTON WAS TRYING TO FORCE SPYNOW TO SIGN AWAY HIS CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO A JURY TRIAL. The case has been set for jury trial May 8th in Municipal Court at 8855 Exchange Ave.

Upon examination the DAILY WORKER finds that ordinance 366 SAYS NOTHING WHATEVER ABOUT THE DISTRIBUTION OF NEWSPAPERS OR THE DISTRIBUTION OF LITERATURE WHEN PLACED INSIDE OF NEWSPAPERS. THE ORDINANCE MENTIONS ONLY THE DISTRIBUTION OF HANDBILLS UNDER DOORS OR ON STREETS AND ALLEYS. It is the common practice for newspapers to place colored pictures, advertisements of everything from fountain pens to groceries, inside of newspapers.

The DAILY WORKER will continue to sell its paper on the streets of Chicago, and will protect with all the means at its command the safety and lives of its authorized representatives.

BUSINESS AGENT OF ICE CREAM DRIVERS KILLED

Union Threatens Strike For More Wages

Just what effect the two deaths from shooting Monday night will have upon the threatened strike of the Ice Cream Drivers could not be learned yesterday from the union offices. Police are holding union officials in connection with the killing of Samuel S. Bills, business agent of the Ice Cream Drivers, and of William Dever, member of the Electrical Workers' Union, Monday night in front of the hall at 134 Ogden Avenue.

Three hundred ice cream drivers are preparing to support their demands for increased compensation with a strike on May Day.

Officials of the Thompson Ice Cream Company said that the drivers were asking for a 33 per cent increase in compensation. The Wholesale Ice Cream Manufacturers of Chicago, of which the Thompson Company is a strong member, are sending out notices of warning to all retailers.

The union refused to confirm the demand for a raise. Members in the office of the union would not commit themselves on the chances for a strike.

"You see, it's a matter of the weather," one of the drivers explained. "We're paid a very small salary and commission. When the weather's bad we don't make much; but when it's good we do better."

The long wretched winter just passed has been hard on the ice cream drivers' incomes and has prompted their demand for increased compensation during the summer months.

The electrical workers striking on the Illinois Merchants' Bank building job, belong to the union involved in Monday night's shooting.

REINSTATEMENT OF EXPELLED GARMENT WORKERS IS BURNING ISSUE BEFORE BIG CONVENTION

When the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union meets in annual convention in Boston, May 5 the most dramatic issue before the assembled 325 delegates will be the demand for reinstatement by eleven Chicago militants—and many others in other cities—who were expelled from the union for their membership in the Trade Union Educational League.

The cases of the expelled militants from New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Boston and other cities cry loudly for justice also, but the Chicago case is the most dramatic, because of the strike now being waged.

The eleven Chicago expelled who will put their appeal up to the fairmindedness of the delegates will come to Boston fresh from the strike battle line on South Market street where they have been taking the most active part in the picketing, seeing the inside of police stations and injunction courts and handling important executive posts during the strike.

Leaders in Chicago Strike.

To mention only two now: Dora Lupschutz, Joint Board member and delegate to the Chicago Federation at the time of her expulsion, has been entrusted with the most important field job during the strike, under the international officials. When the workers poured out of their shops and the battle began, Dora Lipsutz' offer of her services was accepted at once. She was taken into the strike committee and her ability there caused her to be put in charge of most of the picket work.

N. Bosen, former member of Local 18 has been used as an organizer during the strike. Vice President Meyer Perlstein sent him to Waukegan and he has been instrumental there in striking one of [illegible] which was making scab dres[illegible] put on the Chicago market.

The charge which conservative leaders of the international brought against the members whom they expelled so summarily was that membership in the Trade Union Educational League was not compatible with good unionism. At the time they paid no heed to the militant's clear defense that the T. U. E. L. policies, amalgamation, organizing the unorganized, etc., were vital to the wellbeing of the I. L. G. W. U. which was suffering because of the competition of the low-waged unorganized and because of the weakness of the separated crafts.

Working for Union Victory.

But the present dressmakers' strike and the splendid and leading role taken by the expelled militants has shown that the Trade Union Educational Leaguers were the best unionists of them all—working for the victory of the International Ladies' Garment Workers against the Chicago Association of Dress Manufacturers.

The devotion and courage and ability of the militants is recognised by Vice President Meyer Perlstein and all international representatives who visit Chicago. The fact that they have been entrusted with important strike posts speaks for itself.

Demand Their Union Rights.

Now the expelled militants are demanding that the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union reverse the action taken by executives since last summer and restore their union rights. They are fighting side by side with their union comrades during the strike, they demand the right to work side by side with them in the union shops which will be organized as the result of their united efforts now.

Union Leaders Before Expulsion.

The expelled Chicago members who will lay their case before the Boston convention are no mere recent comers into the union. Appended to their names which follow, here you will see the union posts they held until they were unjustly expelled.

I. L. DAVIDSON, recording secretary of the Chicago Joint Board and member of the organizing committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

M. A. KANIEWSKY, secretary and treasurer of the Joint Board and ex-board member of Local 5.

DORA LIPSCHUTZ, Joint Board member, ex-board member of Local 100 and delegate to the Chicago Federation of Labor.

J. GOLDMAN, executive board member of Local 5.

JENNIE SWARTZ, Joint Board member and executive board member of Local 100.

T. TERRY, Joint Board member and member of Local 18.

CLARA GABIN, delegate to the Chicago Federation of Labor and ex-board member of Local 100.

H. FOGEL, executive board member of Local 5.

N. BOSEN, member of Local 18.

These militants were needed before the strike. When they were expelled the union suffered. Their splendid services during the strike have saved the International Ladies' Garment Workers from defeat. In the national open shop campaign that is now beginning, the left wing forces are the power that will turn the tide of battle against the bosses.

The expelled members must be reinstated

CENTRALIA SHAME EXPOSED IN NEW AMNESTY DRIVE

the four Legionaires slain) and the seven were convicted.

"But actually they committed no crime. They were accused and found guilty solely because they were members of the I. W. W. and had fought against the exploitation policies of the Puget Sound lumber barons, and because they defended their hall in Centralia against a mob that had come to drive them from the town.

"The defendants were tried before a manifestly prejudiced judge, who refused to permit the defense to introduce any of a mass of evidence showing that a group of Centralia business men had conspired to attack the I. W. W. hall, but admitted all evidence offered by the prosecution to indicate that the defendants had conspired to fire on the Armistice Day parade.

"Six of the jurors who tried the case have admitted under oath that they were terrorized into convicting the accused men; and declare that they now believe them innocent. Yet under the laws of Washington, the time is long past when any new evidence can affect the Centralia verdict. Only Governor Louis Hart has authority to free the imprisoned workers.

"Hart knows the facts. But he ignores them. He was made governor by the lumber interests. When the prosecution's evidence-giving in the Centralia trial had grown weak, when it had utilized most of its repertoire of spectacular tricks to assail the integrity of the men on trial, it asked Governor Hart to send troops. Hart sent them; neither trial judge nor sheriff knew of the call—and there had been no disorder, nor any indication of such.

"Only the combined action of the working people of Washington can set the Centralia victims free. Such strong pressure must be brought to bear upon Governor Hart that he will no longer dare to ignore the facts in this case."

Fell Inside Hall.

Outstanding points in the Centralia situation, as detailed in the new pamphlet, include these:

Dr. Frank Bickword's testimony that when the parade stopped before the I. W. W. Hall, he offered to lead a raid if enough would follow, but that others pushed ahead of him, forced open the door—and then the shots came from inside.

Evidence that Lieutenant Grimm led the attack on the hall and was slain in the doorway instead of around the corner as the prosecution claimed.

An affidavit from a woman who declares she heard Harry Sellers, juror, say in advance of the trial: "If I get on that jury I'll hang every god-damned one of them."

Judge John M. Wilson's refusal to let the defense show any of these facts: That 100 Centralia business men conspired to drive the I. W. W. out of town; that there had been a raid on an older I. W. W. hall in Centralia, in which the unionists were dragged out, lifted by the ears onto motor trucks, and were deported to another county; that the I. W. W. had been warned that their hall would be attacked on Armistice Day, asked for police protection, and were denied it, that they then distributed handbills to practically every house in town, appealing to law-abiding citizens for a square deal.

Supreme Court Putting On Gloves To Hand Kids Another Wallop

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Passage of the child-labor amendment resolution thru the House became certain, and its passage thru the Senate almost equally assured, when Rep. Nelson, leader of the House progressives opening the debate for his group, declared that "child slavery must go," and reminded the politicians that the "mother bloc" had entered the American political arena.

"Woe to the person, party or state," he said, "that, by encouraging child slavery, encounters the wrath of American mothers. I cannot imagine a person or a party so foolish, nor can I believe there is a single state in the union that in our day would directly harbor or defend the grosser forms of child slavery; and yet it seems strange how opposition to this constitutional amendment by special interests seeks to shield itself behind the allegation of state sovereignty—the right, duty, responsibility, self-interest or pride of backward states to deal with or fail to deal with this evil in their own way and without interference from Uncle Sam. This institution, insidious in its encroachments and intolerable to the moral sense of mankind, is prevalent in states where industries are powerful enough to defeat state laws or prevent their enforcement. The Congress of the United States will offer this constitutional amendment to the states, in order to give Uncle Sam the right to protect his infant children."

Booze, Business And Bankers Swat Reformer Who Boosted Calvin

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Gov. Pinchot of Pennsylvania, who endorsed Coolidge and claimed the support of the organization of the Republican Old Guard in Pennsylvania just before the Coolidge crowd rejected him by 200,000 majority in the primary, has issued a digest of his Buffalo speech of April 26 on "Honesty in Government." He begins with the assertion that the purpose of a public servant, under machine rule, is to "do anything and everything that may be necessary to help the organization."

He closes his plea for dry enforcement with the reflection: "You cannot serve God and mammon. You cannot serve either God or the people if you put some other service first."

Friends of Pinchot advised him against claiming the support of the corrupt Republican organization in Pennsylvania, and especially against pledging his support to Coolidge. But his "practical" advisers persuaded the amiable reformer that this dishonesty would enable him to "help the people."

Then the Vare gang, plus the Mellon financial and business influence, added to the whisky interests and disappointed labor groups, swung the ax on Pinchot.

ROUMANIAN LAND GRAB FOUGHT BY SOVIET RUSSIA

Demand Bessarabian Self Determination

By PAUL HOYER.

(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

VIENNA, Austria, April 30.—The "peace" conference between Rumania and Soviet Russia, called in Vienna to settle differences between these two countries, has gone up in smoke. This occasioned no surprise to the initiated. Four weeks ago, in discussing this question at the soviet embassy in Berlin, I was told that the Russian delegation headed by Krestinsky fully expected that a break would come over the Bessarabian question.

The Rumanians insisted that this territory shall be recognized as belonging to Rumania. Before the war, it had been Russian. After the war, at the behest of and with the aid of France, Bessarabia was simply "annexed" by Rumania.

Demand Self Determination.

Soviet Russia declined to recognize this annexation. In so doing, the soviet government did not insist that Bessarabia belonged to Russian historically, but rather pleaded the right of self-determination of all nations. The Rumanian government never bothered to ask the people of Bessarabia what they thought about being annexed. The Russians feel certain that the farmers, workers and the native intelligentsia are dissatisfied with Rumanian rule.

Here, at Vienna, the soviet delegation insisted that a plebiscite be taken of Bessarabia, and that a free and unhampered vote be insured by the withdrawal of Rumanian troops from Bassarabia. The chief of the Rumanian delegation declared that it was useless to continue the conference if Russia insisted upon this point. Krestinsky insisted and the conference blew up.

Poincare Forced Annexation.

The Rumanians would probably not have been so prompt about breaking up the conference, had they not been egged on by Poincare. The French premier saw to it that the French chamber adopted a vote sanctioning the annexation on the day before the Vienna conference assembled. This was intended as a warning to Soviet Russia that in dealing with the vassal, Rumania, Russia is really dealing with the principal, France. This is the second time recently that Poincare has taken a hand against Russia. It was largely at France's sugestion that the Russo-Chinese negotiations were broken off after the plenipotentiaries of both sides had already come to an agreement. The conjecture seems justified that Poincare sees in Soviet Russia the greatest obstacle to his imperialistic plans.

Methodists For Peace When There Is No War; May Fight Tho

CHICAGO, April 30.— Methodist ministers of Chicago are for peace, but not for the pacifism of non-resistance.

In a conference in the Chicago Temple late yesterday, the ministers voted to memorialize the Methodist general conference in Springfield, Mass., may go on record against the things that make for war.

The resolution to the General Conference reads:

"Resolved: That we memorialize the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church to place itself on record as being opposed to the whole war system with its secret treaties, military alliances, unjust economic concessions, competitive 'preparedness' programs—and that in no way will we participate in any such movement as history has conclusively shown lead to war."

POST COUNTER-REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD SHOWS INFLUENCE OF COMMUNIST PARTY IN MEXICO

By JAY LOVESTONE.

MEXICO CITY, April 29.—The remnants of the Fascist bands of the de la Huerta uprising are being dispersed.

In many quarters the opinion still prevails that de la Huerta will stake his all on one more desperate "final fling," but nobody has any doubt as to the outcome of such a test of strength. The de la Huerta counter-revolution has failed completely.

Working Class Active.

One of the outstanding features of the recent fighting in Mexico is the extent and character of the working class participation on the side of the Obregon-Calles group against the reactionary united forces of Mexican Catholicism, landowners, and Fascisti.

For the first time in the history of Mexico's many revolutions, near-revolutions, and counter-revolutions, a regime has succeeded in maintaining itself in power against an uprising. This development is of epoch-making significance in Mexican history.

It is largely due to the fact that great sections of the rural and industrial masses, consciously and in an organized fashion, lined up in the struggle. And in this part played by the workers and peasants of Mexico, the Communists played a no small role.

Communists To The Fore.

Weak as the Communist Party of Mexico it, it clearly foresaw the eventualities and character of the de la Heurta, the Central Executive Com of the Mexican Communist Party whose influence far exceeds its presently limited organizational strength, that it took the leadership and initiative in rallying the masses against the Fascist outbreak.

When it became evident that the reactionary forces were going to pin their political future on the bayonets of the military following of de la Huerta, the Central Executive Committee of the Communist Party lost no time getting into the fray.

The Committee forthwith made an offer of military and propaganda help to the Callisto forces and the government on the condition that the forces recruited by the Communists be permitted to remain irregular and be subject only to the officers whom they themselves named.

The Communist Party pursued this policy in order to avoid surrendering any of its strength to a government which, tho they now supported against the reaction, they opposed politically.

Communists Make First Declaration.

The first declaration against de la Huerta and for the Obregon regime on the part of any section of the laboring masses came from the Communist Party. Subsequent to this offer to the government and to the appeal to the masses to wipe out Fascism, the Central Committee proposed to the government that the Party send its picked representatives to various states for the purpose of organizing the workers and peasants for active military operations on a large scale.

The entire Central Executive Committee of the party, with the exception of three members who were left at the Capital, to act as the emergency group, were dispatched to various parts of the country to carry out this program of action.

When the revolt was in full swing, the Governor of the State of Vera Cruz fled to Mexico City to avoid the de la Huerta forces. Thereupon the Communists made him the same offer of help against the Fascisti band. In Vera Cruz it later turned out, that the Communists organized the peasants and workers so effectively, that it was their harassing the rear of the de la Huerta army that drove Fascism out of this highly important State.

In the State of Pueblo the forces rallied by the Communists also proved of considerable help to rout de la Huerta.

In Oaxaca, the Communists concentrated their activities largely on recruiting peasants and workers for the Callista army.

Pursue Same Tactics.

Even in the Military School which Obregon suspected of having strong leanings towards de la Huerta, the Communists made their impress against Fascism.

The wholesome attitude of the Communists was most clearly evidenced by the fact that in not a single state of the Mexican Union did they fail to fight energetically against the reactionary forces. It is especially significant to note that in many states the local Communists adopted such measures even before they were instructed to that effect by the Party center.

Of equal importance in the consideration of the almost instinctive soundness of the Mexican Communists is the fact that the Obregon government had been fought bitterly by these revolutionary workers and peasants prior to the revolution. More than that.

While the Communists were fighting for the Obregon government against de la Heutra, they, as a group, lost no love on the Obregon-Callista outfit and did not burden themselves with any illusions as to the true non-proletarian class character of the present government.

Whatever dangers these united front tactics of the Communists brought to their organization, and unquestionably these have been and still are many serious dangers, the Central Executive Committee took decisive steps to counteract at the very first opportunity with a strong declaration against Obregon's regime as soon as de la Huerta's politico-military grave was dug and his threat to the safety of the republic buried.

Struggle In Vera Cruz.

The Fascisti military clique was especially harsh with the workers in Vera Cruz. Here de la Huerta and Already the presence of about 25 delegates is assured. This number will be increased before the close of the Congress.

Fraternal delegates from the Communist Parties of Cuba and Central America (Guatemala) are expected to participate actively in the sessions of the Convention.

Delegate From U. S.

For the first time in the history of the Communist movement on the American continents a duly authorized representative of the Communists from the United States, a delegate from the Workers Party of America, will attend a convention of the Communist Party of a Latin-American country.

The Mexican Communists view this step of the Workers Party as a most significant movement in the direction of organizing a centralized unified Pan-American Communist movement to deal effectively with the aggression and increasing encroachments of the Yankee imperialists and their Wall Street-Washington government in the Latin-American countries.

The present party congress assumes extraordinary importance for the Mexican and other Communists because of the delicate and complicated situation in the country arising out of the de la Huerta revolt on the eve of the national elections.

Among the strongest delegations at the congress are the representatives from the Vera Cruz district, where the Communist Party wields considerable influence amongst the agrarian and industrial masses.

One of the prominent delegates from Vera Cruz is Comrade Ursulo Galvon, who is the leader of the heroic band of peasants that dealt crushing blows to the rear of the de la Huerta forces in the fighting in the state.

Comrade Galvon is the President of the League of Agrarian Communities of the State of Vera Cruz. He is also a member of the Praesidium of the Red Peasants' International recently organized at Moscow and now making rapid growth in many of the principal countries. Galvon was en route to Vera Cruz from the international peasants' congress while the port was in the hands of the Fascisti de la Huerta forces. He was wired by his comrades to avoid the port, but he managed to land secretly and organize a splendid military fighting force of Communists and poor peasants to rid the state of the reactionary forces.

Farmers' Representatives Present

Delegates from the important industrial center of Orizaba, where the Communists have influence among the textile and tobacco workers, are expected to play a prominent part thruout the convention.

One of the delegations from the State of Oaxaca will be an ex-colonel, Comrade Roberto Ramirez, who resigned from the army in order to be a more effective worker for the Communist Party. Comrade Roberto Ramirez is now a candidate for the national Chamber of Deputies.

The States of Sonora and Durango will also be well represented. The powerful Agrarian Party of the State of Michoacan and the League of the Defense of the People's Rights, both organizations of strongly Communist character, are expected to seek representation at the Congress.

All in all, despite the most insuperable obstacles created by the present military situation in the country and the extreme suffering resulting therefrom amongst the farming and industrial masses, no less than ten states will be adequately represented at this Convention.

Reports have reached the Central Executive Committee of the Communist Party that delegates from the other states are making desperate efforts to break thru the numerous barriers and come to the Congress by all means of transportation available.

Communist Influence Grows.

Within the last year the Mexican Communist Party has greatly increased its influence, tho it is still organizationally weak. The Mexican Communists are confronted with almost unbelievable and countless difficulties arising from foreign imperialist aggression against the country, from the extremely poverty stricken state in which the overwhelming mass of the working and farming population finds itself, from the dangers of Indian and Spanish-Mexican conflicts, and many other peculiarly complex situations.

Recent months have seen a marked favorable attitude developing towards the Communist Party amongst the railroad and textile workers and the various peasants' leagues and unions of which there are a number in Mexico.

It is interesting to note that the Congress is being held in "La Casa del Pueblo," the "House of the People". This was once a Catholic monastery. During the great tenants' strikes of 1922, the Communist Party and the Union of Striking Tenants took away the building from the Church. All efforts to force the return of this building to the Catholic missionaries have failed to date.

Important Questions Before Delegates.

The principal questions confronting the delegates are the agrarian problem, the tactics of Communist participation in the national elections, the strengthening of the Party organization, and the growing serious dangers of American imperialism.

Comrade Bertram D. Wolfe has been especially assigned by the Central Executive Committee of the Party to prepare and organize the material and data on which the Party policies on these and other questions will be based.

Spirited discussions and a lively interesting Congress are expected by all the delegates present.

General De la Huerta and his agents declared all labor organizations outlawed. Many workers and peasants were shot down in cold blood. Under these circumstances the Communists banded themselves together in an underground organization and smuggled food, ammunition and sundry military supplies to the government forces.

Six Communists are known to have been shot by the de la Huerta mercenaries for aiding the government in this fashion. Among the workers who were thus murdered by de la Heurta or who met death at the front, was the local Secretary of the Young Communist League.

Some Workers Hesitate.

Let no one get the impression that all the workers and farmers of Mexico consciously and actively fought on the side of the Obregon government. Some workers and peasants who were followers of the Anarchist Federation or who were members of the Railway Workers' Union, were very slow in getting into the fight, even when they were finally drawn in. On several occasions anarchist followers even joined de la Heurta. It was not until the latter showed his real hand by crushing the workers' organizations of all shades of opinion, that the Anarchist Federation woke up to the cruel realities of the situation. After a few anarchists were murdered by the Fascisti, the organized Anarchists under Communist pressure, particularly in Vera Cruz, where a strong united working class front against Fascism was formed, expelled those of their spokesmen who had declared themselves for de la Huerta.

The Railroad Workers' Federation, which is independent of the General Federation of Labor, formally declared its neutrality as soon as the conflict broke out. Many of the railway workers were extremely disgruntled at the treatment they had been receiving at the hands of the Obregon government. Besides, de la Huerta, in preparation for his revolt, had made it his business to demoralize sections of the ranks of the railway workers by a liberal dispensing of funds amongst them. The Fascist leader was well-aware of the fact that the strategic importance of having the railway workers on his side in a military struggle could not be overestimated.

But the Communists among the rail way workers worked actively to counteract this potentially grave menace to the success of the Callista forces. Utilizing their strong influence among the railway carpenters as a base of operations, they launched a determined campaign among all railroad workers against the Fascisti coup. Soon many railway workers rallied to the colors against de la Huerta despite the fact that they were warned by their superior Federation officers that such practices were in violation of the accepted policy of the national organization to keep out of politics.

Communists Gaining Strength.

The position taken by the Communist Party in the de la Huerta rebellion has greatly helped to strengthen the comparatively weak national organization of the Mexican Communists. The role played by the Communists in vigorously resisting Fascism has brought them much closer to great masses of Mexican workers and peasants who now have considerable confidence in Communists in several states.

Today the national organization of the Mexican Communist Party is still very weak. But the ideological and general political influence of the Communists the country over is already much greater than the numerical strength and is steadily developing proportions that are to be reckoned with in the class conflicts of our Southern neighboring country.

The present conditions in Mexico, political and economic, are favorable for the building of a powerful mass Communist Party.

Borah Is Perfectly Safe Republican, Says Senator Edge

Washington, April 30—Senator Edge of New Jersey, republican, today endorsed Senator Borah for chairman of the Republican National committee.

Republicans need not fear that Borah would "introduce reforms or innovations which might embarass," Edge said.

"If they deal with his viewpoint of the solution of some national problems or differ from the attitude of some other republicans, it would not be fatal."

American Dollar Diplomacy in Action

By JAY LOVESTONE.

ARTICLE VIII.

Program of Action.

The price of our imperialists for the development of the industries and natural resources of the colonial and so-called backward countries, and the price of American "humanitarian help" towards European reconstruction is complete economic hegemony over all of these territories. The steps already taken by the United States government in helping capitalists secure a firmer foothold in the Near East, Far East, Latin America and Europe, are only a prelude to more entangling alliances which are bound, sooner rather than later, to draw an army of millions of American workers and farmers "over there" to fight for the safety and defense of the foreign investments of our employing class. The tying up of the interests of a small skilled section of our working class with the interests of the monopolistic group of the capitalist class, is an added danger to the welfare and security of the whole working class and the exploited poor farming masses.

In the light of this ever increasing militarist and imperialist menace to the peace and security of the American workers and poor farmers the need for united action against American imperialism is more urgent than ever. Towards this end the Workers Party of America proposes the following program:

1. General propaganda to arouse the opposition of the laboring and farming masses to imperialism and militarism.

2. A united front of all workers' and farmers' organizations against the maintenance and extension of American imperialist plans.

3. Concerted action by the workers' and farmers' political and economic organizations to compel Congress to enact legislation prohibiting the expenditure of a man or a dollar to guarantee the investments of American capitalists abroad.

4. A vigorous campaign in all labor and farm organizations for the economic and complete indenpendence of all possessions of the United States.

5. Struggle against American interference in the political and economic affairs of Mexico, the South and Central American republics. The immediate evacuation of all territories now occupied by American military and naval forces should be demanded.

6. A special organizational and propaganda campaign to help the Filipino people in their resistance to American capitalist exploitation. Our workers and farmers should render the greatest help possible to the Filipinos in their struggle for complete national independence from United States imperialist domination, and for the improvement of their conditions at home.

7. Special publicity campaigns are to be organised exposing American capitalist brutality in our possessions and in territories occupied by the military and naval forces of the United States. The interests dominating Mexico, Central America, South America, and our island possessions must be exposed in their light as imperialist brigands before the working class and poor farmers.

8. Struggle against the reactionary trade union leaders of the United States and of the weaker exploited countries. These leaders of the type of Gompers and the Mexican Morones have become part and parcel of the imperialist coterie oppressing the working masses.

8. Struggle against the attempt of of the imperialist Coolidge administration to unite the countries of the world against Soviet Russia and against the tacit support given to the monarchist movement in Germany by American reactionary forces.

10. An intensive campaign against American participation in the League of Nations, the World Court, the Reparations Commission, and all other imperialist conferences and alliances.

1. The organization of an international united front of the political and economic organizations of the workers and poor farmers against international capitalist imperialism. The workers of all the American countries must unite for a common struggle against American imperialism and the native capitalist groups of all the countries.

12. That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the labor organizations of all the American possessions, Mexico, the Central and South American countries.

PROSPECTS OF LABOR PARTY SEEN BY WOLL

Wants Esch-Cummins Law Repealed to Stop It

By H. M. WICKS.

NEW YORK CITY, April 30.—Matthew Woll, Vice President of the American Federation of Labor and head of the Photo-Engravers' Union, speaking before the convention of the National Civic Federation here on the subject, "Is There Need for An American Labor Party?" declared whether or not there was formed an American Farmer-Labor Party would depend upon the attitude taken by the two old parties.

Woll said that if the two old parties continue to help business and neglect the workers and farmers, it would not only create a third party of farmers and workers but would wreck one of the old parties.

Apparently so naive that he imagines the old parties can serve the workers and farmers, Woll hastened to reassure his cohorts in the National Civic Federation that in his opinion the old parties could forestall the creation of a third party by repealing the Esch-Cummins law, or changing it so that railway workers can adjust their wages and working conditions by voluntary action. If this is done the demand for parliamentary action will cease, according to Mr. Woll.

Gompers Shows Off.

Old Man Gompers was also present and spoke on The New Industrial Philosophy of the American Federation of Labor." He prefaced his remarks by admitting that the title of his lecture was a misnomer because the policy was not new at all. The burden of his discourse was to the effect that the A. F. of L. had never favored anti-trust legislation as such legislation tended to hamper legitimate expansion of business and it was to the interest of all people in the country, workers and employers alike, to see that industry continued its normal development.

In face of the steady decline in membership of the organizations affiliated with the A. F. of L., Gompers had the audacity to assert that "The American labor movement is not doing so very badly."

"The relations existing between employers generally and the organized labor movement is better now than it ever has been," boasted the Old Man of the Sea.

Chester M. Wright, renegade socialist and former editor of the now defunct New York Call, seconded Gompers' senile discourse.

Elects Officials.

Officials were elected. Samuel Gompers was re-elected as vice president; Warren S. Stone, pooh-bah of the Engineers Union and prominently identified with the Empire Trust Company, a Wall street concern controlled by the Schwabs and Du Ponts, is chairman of the Social Insurance Department. Alton B. Barker, Tammany candidate for president against Roosevelt in 1904, is President of Civic Federation, while August Belmont, multimillionaire, is chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Department. The notorious prevaricator, Conde B. Pallon, is chairman of the Department on Study of Revolutionary Movements, in which position he will continue to lie about the vanguard of the working class during the coming year as he has in the past. Many other hangers-on of American capitalism, fit for company of Sam Gompers, are on the various committees that were elected.

Favor Military Training.

The armour plate manufacturers, represented by flunkeys of Schwab and the Du Pont powder manufacturers, passed a resolution strongly condemning pacifism and recommended strong support of Citizens' Training Camps and close cooperation with the civilian aids to the secretary of war in the several states making effective the National Defense Act.

STEEL TRUST'S PROFITS RISE TO $50,000,000 DESPITE SHORTER DAY

NEW YORK, April 30.—An extra dividend of fifty cents a share on U. S. Steel common was announced here today.

The regular dividend of $1.25 on Steel common also was declared.

Earnings of U. S. Steel corporation for the quarter ending March 31 were announced as $50,075,445 after taxes have been deducted, compared to $49,958,980 for the preceding quarter and $34,780,069 during the first quarter of 1923.

U. S. Fights Labor In Porto Rico For Capitalist Exploiters

WASHINGTON, April 30.—Santiago Iglesias, president of the Porto Rican Federation of Labor and Socialist senator in the island legislature, is leading the struggle begun by his own party and by the rank and file of the Republican party of Porto Rico, against the attempt of Sen. Tous Soto, leader of the Republicans, to throw that party into an alliance with the Unionist party to control island politics and to destroy the labor movement. Editorials from Republican papers in San Juan, reaching here, show that the alarm raised against Iglesias by Tous Soto and Senator Barcelo, leader of the Unionists, has failed to stampede the public.

The first purpose of the Barcelo-Tous Soto alliance is to secure from Congress a bill limiting the franchise in the island, thereby cutting off a large part of the votes which represent labor. Senator Willis of Ohio is chairman of a subcommittee of the senate committee on insular affairs which has been asked to report a bill enabling Porto Rico to elect its own governor. The sugar, coffee and tobacco companies and the bankers controlling American ownership of the industrial life of the island, are cooperating with Secretary of War Weeks in this attempt to eliminate the Socialist party and the labor unions at one stroke.

Iglesias, in an appeal to the American Federation of Labor for help, says that over 30,000 fraudulent registrations for the next election have already been discovered.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., April 30.—The oldest woman in northern Indiana, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Mayo, is dead at the home of a daughter here. She was 109 years old. She was born in Owensboro, Ky., in 1815, and until four years ago was a resident of Evansville, Ind.

Lansing's Fakers Sabotage Meeting For June Convention

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LANSING, Mich., April 30.—Edgar Owens, District Organizer of the Workers Party, spoke here recently on the Farmer-Labor convention to be held at St. Paul on June 17th. He had a fairly large audience considering the handicaps under which they had been assembled.

Early in the month a committee from the Lansing local of the Workers Party succeeded in gaining entry to the Trades and Labor Council. The workers attempted to get the support of the Council for the June 17th Convention. They were told to arrange a date for the hall and bring an able speaker and that the Council would co-operate in securing a good attendance.

The meeting was arranged and George Allen, editor of the Lansing "Industrial News," agreed to assist in publicity by advertising and personal soliciting of trade union members. While professing friendship, Allen, who belongs to the Labor Council proved himself utterly contemptible. He not only failed to give any notice to the meeting in his press but he was largely responsible for Council members turning away, by denying the meeting to many interested workers who wanted to attend. In spite of this sabotage Owens had an enthusiastic audience.

Teachers May Worship Hole In Ground For God In New Jersey

TRENTON, N. J.—Discrimination against teachers in New Jersey on religious grounds has aroused so much protest that Governor Silzer has been forced to order school boards to stop questioning prospective teachers regarding their religious affiliations. An opinion of the state attorney general cites the first amendment of the United States constitution, the state constitution and various statutes which make such practices illegal.

Co-operative Society Helps Workers Eat Under Capitalism

GUELPH, Ont., April 30.—Workers in Guelph, Ont., know how co-operation can cut the high cost of living. For 19 years they have had a co-operative society which has not only directly benefited the members by saving many thousands of dollars in grocery bills, but indirectly it has benefited every citizen of the city by lowering the prices charged by private merchants.

$80,000,000,000 WASTED IN WORLD WAR, SAY BANKERS

Allies Cost Twice That Of Germans

By LELAND OLDS,
Federated Press Industrial Editor.

The total cost of the war to all nations, expressed in 1913 dollars, amounted to the huge total of $80,680,000,000 according to an analysis prepared for the Bankers Trust of New York by H. E. Fisk. This represents, says Fisk, the value in gold of goods unprofitably consumed during four and a half years of insensate strife. It is sheer waste equivalent to all the wealth accumulated by the people of France and Italy combined in the course of centuries. It exceeds by 50 per cent the total cost of the government of Great Britain from 1688 to 1914.

The enormity of the total impresses the Bankers Trust statistician, but he fails to point out the extraordinary fact that the debt burden assumed by the common people as a result of the war amounts to five times as much. The inflammatory method of financing the war adopted by the financiers left the population in debt to the wealthy classes to the tune of approximately $412,000,000,000.

The burden of this debt will steadily increase as prices slowly approach the prewar level, thereby increasing the amount of labor which the workers must exchange for each dollar that they use in paying the interest and principal of the debt. In the course of the generations which will be required to pay it off the owning class will reecive in interest and principal many times the value of the goods and services utilized in the war.

More Than England's Wealth.

The $80,680,000,000 which the war would actually have cost if the governments had controlled the rapacity of the financial oligarchies, represents colossal waste which is emphasized by Fisk in the statement that it exceeds by $10,000,000,000 the entire wealth of the people of Great Britain in 1914, including the railways, the docks, the shipping traversing every sea, the entire navy, the great factories, the coal, tin and iron mines, in short all the property of every kind in England, Wales, Scotland and Ireland. If all this wealth had been suddenly destroyed in 1914 the loss would have been $10,000,000,000 short of the waste due to the war. He continues:

"Coming home for a final comparison, we find that the expenses of the United tates government from its foundation in 1791 thru the year 1913, a period of a century and a quarter were $24,500,000,000—less than one-third of the gold cost of the great war, and yet during this period we fought England in 1812, Mexico in the '40s, the very destructive civil war in the '60s, at various times many Indian campaigns, to say nothing of the Spanish war in 1898.

"To the current expenses of government we could add the Louisiana purchase, the acquisition of Alaska, the purchase of the Virgin Islands, what we paid Spain for the Philippines, and the cost of constructing the Panama canal, and even then the figure would be far under a third of the total cost of the great war."

Allies' Cost Twice Germans'.

Of the total expenditure of 80,680,000,000 "1913" dollars, $56,184,000,000, or 69.64 per cent, was the cost to the allied and associated powers and $24,497,000,000, or 30.36 per cent, the cost to the central powers. Approximately $68,890,000,000 went into military expenses, $5,144,000,000 to other special expenses due to the war and $6,242,000,000 was used in paying interest on the war debts.

The whole study is of value as showing what the people would actually have paid for the war if the advice of unbiased economists to pay-as-you-go had been accepted. But of course that wouldn't have given the money classes the enormous mortgage on the world which they now hold.

Female Parasite In Tale of Woe: Ring Cost Only $1,500

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 30.—Some interesting bits of testimony were taken in the trial of a divorce, suit brought by Mrs. F. J. Stuart against her husband, president of the Consolidated Iron and Steel Corporation, which operates plants in many cities. Mrs. Stuart's complaint was that her husband had not properly provided for her. Her testimony revealed the aristocrat's idea of an American standard of living—for themselves.

There was the wedding ring, it cost only $500. Yes, and her solitaire, the neglected wife bought that in Australia for $1500. In her bedroom she had to contend with a cheap rug that cost the paltry sum of $150. And so it was, as the victim of neglect quoted similar figures in appraising her other personal property in an effort to show in what poverty she was compelled to live. Poor woman, she wants Circuit Judge McElhinney to intervene and see that she is properly provided for with her just share of this world's goods!

WASHINGTON, April 30.—The special federal Grand jury before which government counsel Atlee Pomerene and Owen J. Roberts will lay evidence of alleged criminal action in the execution of the naval oil reserve leases, was sworn in here. Hearing of evidence will begin April 28.

This May Day!

This is International May Day!

This is the day we celebrate!

In all sections of the United States, in the agricultural as well as the industrial communities, imposing demonstrations will be held under the direction of the Workers Party. Never before in the history of the American Communist movement have so many celebrations been planned.

So in all the countries of the world. Everywhere labor today challenges the rule of the master class. And in Soviet Russia the workers and farmers celebrate another year of triumph over world imperialism.

On this day the workers at home see the bankruptcy of American capitalism in the many revelations now being made in the tornado of investigations that has struck the national capitol.

And the workers and farmers of all lands see world imperialism, in struggling gasps, fighting to maintain itself thru imposing the Wall Street-Morgan-Dawes panacea for the chaos in Europe resulting from the last great war, that came upon the world ten years ago. More and more the workers of the United States see their interests linked up with those of other lands. May Day is becoming truly international thru the growing solidarity of the workers everywhere in reply to the consolidation of capitalist imperialism.

On this May Day we receive the agenda of the Fifth World Congress of the Communist International, to be held in Moscow, June 5th. It lists the mighty problems that will be discussed by the spokesmen of labor's vanguard everywhere. The world economic situation will be reviewed, trade union tactics discussed, a program of World Communist action decided on for the first time, and the questions of Fascism, the Farmers' International, the Youth Movement, International Red Aid, the Co-operative Movement, work among women, work in the army, taken up, thoroly considered and the most fitting action taken.

Perhaps the biggest and most inspiring fact for awakened labor on this May Day, as on the May Days of the past six years, is that the Communist International, the world leader of the revolution, meets and discusses its problems and makes its plans without interference from imperialism's white terror. Behind the bayonets of the Workers' and Farmers' Red Army it builds the power that will carry the world revolution to triumph.

In the United States the workers and farmers have big tasks before them on this May Day, 1924. During this presidential year, with the old parties of big business wallowing in the mire of their own graft and corruption, with a growing industrial depression, with the cost of living increasing as wages are hit by new reductions, the call goes out everywhere for land and city labor to organize its political, as well as its economic power, thru the National Farmer-Labor Party that will grow out of the conference planned for St. Paul, Minn., June 17th.

The call of May Day, 1924, is to build the mass, class National Farmer-Labor Party. Down with the capitalist Teapot Dome! Forward to the Workers' and Farmers' Government! Forward to the complete triumph of labor! Move forward on May Day, 1924!

The Trail of Self-Murder.

An estimate of 16,000 is placed upon the number of suicides in the United States last year by the Save-a-Life League.

It admits that poverty is one of the main causes of self-murder, and in its report states that, "Nothing is more pathetic than the many disabled soldiers who themselves ended life's battle, 2,000 having gone out in this regrettable way."

It is also admitted that many of these ex-soldiers, who committed suicide, were left in sickness and poverty because of the wholesale grafting in the Veterans' Bureau of the Harding-Coolidge Administration.

We do not recollect of any activities being carried on by the Save-a-Life League during the recent world war, when millions were being slaughtered in Europe. Nor do we find that the League is carrying on any campaign against future capitalist wars, or against the capitalist system that breeds wars, as well as hunger and suicides.

But the figures made public in themselves may help turn the stomachs of the workers and farmers of the United States against the new war that the House of Morgan is preparing. In that they may do some good.

Again Give Up Hope

Again the news comes from the coal fields that hope has been given up. This time it is for the lives of 114 miners in the pits of the Wheeling Steel Corporation, near Wheeling, West Va. This news of the wanton murder of coal miners has come often of late, from Southern Illinois, from Northern Minnesota, from Utah and Pennsylvania, as well as Kentucky, West Virginia and other states. And nearly always the death pits are non-union mines.

The Benwood mine of the Wheeling Steel Corporation, open shop for the past two years, during which three disasters have taken place, is another tombstone in the West Virginia industrial graveyard. It is another death monument to the greed of the West Virginia mine barons, who have made this state an outlaw among the commonwealths of the nation. In the days of the Russian czar, West Virginia was looked upon, by all thinking workers, as the Siberia of America. The present disaster, needless and criminal, is another proof of the cheap price that the mine barons put upon the lives of their coal diggers.

The Benwood disaster is a challenge to every member of the United Mine Workers' Union. It is a grinning defi of the mine barons, dripping with the blood of hundreds of slaughtered workers, against the whole labor movement. If the lives of 115 coal miners can be taken at Benwood, West Va., without penalty to the mine owners, than the conditions of labor and the lives of all workers are threatened.

The voices of the 115 dead may be silenced but they call in thunder tones for the organization of all West Virginia's non-union fields. They call for the militant and aggressive West Virginia Farmer-Labor Party. They call for the united front of all producers to carry on successful war against the ruthless owners of industry. The triumph of labor over its oppressors under capitalism is the greatest penalty that could be inflicted upon the murderous regime of the Wheeling Steel Corporation, and all its anti-labor breed.

Let the disaster at Benwood be a spur to workers everywhere to speed that day of final victory.

Did Coolidge Win?

On the day following the exposure of his deal with Henry Ford, by which the flivver king was to get Muscle Shoals on his own terms, "Cautious Cal" Coolidge captured the republican primaries in Ohio. At the same time Daugherty was picked as one of the seven Coolidge pledged delegates to the republican convention at Cleveland.

No doubt the Coolidge campaign managers will try to read into these results an endorsement of the graft and corruption that prevails in government in Washington. They will claim that the electorate has spoken, and given notice of its approval of the Coolidge regime.

But the balloting showed that only a handful of voters marched to the polls in this great state. It was the machine vote of the reactionary republican party. Coolidge's only opposition came from the fake progressive, Hiram Johnson, of California, who endorsed corruption in the high places in Washington, when he dodged casting his vote on the ousting of the millionaire, Newberry, of Michigan, from the United States senate, for having purchased his election. This defeat in Ohio just about puts Hiram on the political dung heap.

Coolidge won in Ohio, for the same reason that he won in Michigan recently. Johnson offered no suitable opposition, and only the bought votes controlled by the republican organization went into the ballot box.

It is this fact, that the workers and farmers refused to be drawn into the old party primaries, that gives the most encouragement to the organization of a class Farmer-Labor Party. The producers are planning for a class party of their own. Michigan will be well represented at St. Paul, June 17th. If the voting, Tuesday, in Ohio, means anything, it indicates that there are hundreds of thousands of thinking men and women in Ohio who need representation at St. Paul next month. There are six weeks ahead during which every effort should be made by militant workers and farmers in Ohio to see that they get that representation.

The only trouble with Governor Warren T. McCray, of Indiana, seems to have been that he didn't steal enough. If he had stolen a few hundred millions, he would still be an honored and respected citizen, a pillar of the church, and a staunch defender of Americanism, instead of being a candidate for the penitentiary. When you steal under capitalism, the rule is that you must steal wholesale in order to get away with it.

Daugherty helped rob even the school children of the nation thru refusal to prosecute the stationary trust, thus aiding it to reap an unchallenged profit of 650 per cent. When the school children hear of this, they'll begin to question the Coolidge-Daugherty brand of 100 per cent "paytriotism."

Don't forget the class war prisoners on International May Day, 1924. Remember Sacco and Vanzetti, Mooney and Billings, Dolla and Blankenstein, Ford and Suhr, and all the rest. They are on the inside for you. Do what you can for them on the outside.

If all the crooked timber in Coolidge's official cabinet were thrown out, only the mirror would be left, and in it "Cautious Cal" could survey the biggest crook of them all.

Between Two Dictatorships

By William F. Dunne.

The reverend Norman Thomas finds irresistible the temptation to take a sly crack at the left wing whenever the opportunity presents itself but at the same time never forgets to proclaim or infer his absolute fairness and impartiality.

He is moved to write to The Nation commending it for its disapproval of the expulsion of a Communist from the Bookkeepers, Stenographers and Accountants' Union of New York at at the behest of Samuel Gompers but adds the sorrowful remark that after he has read the DAILY WORKER editorial on the subject in which Gompers is referred to as "dictator and coward" he is "compelled to remember that it was the left wing which introduced into the labor movement the glorification of the notion of dictatorship and the capture of power by any means that may work."

Mr. Thomas is habitually wrong in his statements relative to left wing theory and tactics and the present case is no exception. The Communists who are the left wing of the American labor movement advocate, not the dictatorship of a minority, as Mr. Thomas would have us believe, but the dictatorship of a class—the workingclass. Their tactics for the capture of power are at all times based on the idea that a majority of the workers must first be won over to the Communist position.

Narrowed down to the limits of trade union movement these tactics also presuppose the winning over of a majority of the union membership. Communists reject entirely the theory that a minority by a coup can seize and hold power independent of the interests of the majority of the masses involved. In the unions the communists conduct an intensive educational campaign designed to convince the rank and file of the incompetency and non-workingclass character of the present leadership; what is more culpable from both the liberal and reactionary standpoint is that they organize the left wing sentiment thus crystallized.

The Communist view of the unions is that they are of necessity workingclass organizations and that as such they must include, the more successful they become in organization work, all elements of the workingclass irrespective of political opinions, religious differences or color distinction. This is the only workable basis for unions which are the instruments used by the workers in their daily struggles with the capitalists. The Communist policy in the unions is to organize these diverse elements around a program based on their common needs as workers.

There are at the present time a number of important unions that the Communists could "capture" if they believed in using the tactics which Mr. Thomas accuses them of glorifying; that is, they could seize control of the offices and have at the same time a majority of the membership behind them instead of a minority as is the case with dozens of union officialdoms. Thy realize however that the American labor movement as a whole must be brought up to a certain level of understanding before anything approaching Communist leadership could greatly influence the trade unions nationally. This process is being accelerated by the increasing instability of American capitalism and the outright betrayal of the workingclass perpetrated by the officials. The Civic Federation meeting in New York the other day attended by Gompers, Woll and a couple of notorious hangers-on of the Gompers machine is only one item in the list of treacheries.

When Mr. Thomas refers to the capture of power "by any means which may work" he doubtless is thinking in parliamentary terms and looks upon a recorded majority as the only mandate for the control of official positions. In this we disagree with Mr. Thomas and all his kind. Speaking only of the parliamentary system in vogue in the American unions, it is notorious that there is no such thing as a square election where the economic interests of the machine are involved and those who base their idea of the representative character of trade union officialdom upon returns in union elections admit a childlike faith that has long since departed from one who knows anything of the practical workings of the American labor movement.

It is just here that the distinction between the Communists and the liberal-progressive elements becomes perfectly clear. The Communists accept the crooked character of trade union parliamentary processes as a reality and rightly conclude that the present leadership of th trade unions maintains itself by an outright dictatorship which has no broad class basis. The liberals and progressives become disgusted with the rank and file and conclude that rotten as the officialdom may be, it is at least more intelligent—and therefore more worthy of consideration than the rank and file.

This accounts in a large measure for the swing of the so-called progressive elements into the Gompers camp and they are now extremely angry because the Communists treat them just about the same as they do the Gompers official family. As a case in point the reaction of Mr. Thomas after reading this article will undoubtedly be:

THE DAILY WORKER is committing the sin of which I have often accused the Communists. It is attacking me—a liberal—when it could use its time and space to much better advantage in criticizing Gompers, Morgan, Rockfeller, the capitalist system and other evils.

Communists, however, depend not upon the good will of intellectuals or trade union officials but upon the needs of the masses of the workers expressed in organization and action to overthrow trade union and capitalist dictatorships. The Workers (Communist) Party of America has no interests separate and part from the workingclass of America.

So apparent is this becoming that all those whose idea of solving the labor problem is to do something for the workers instead of arousing the workers to do something for themselves are either active or passive enemies of the Workers (Communist) Party and therefore of the whole workingclass.

THE VIEWS OF OUR READERS ON LIFE, LABOR, INDUSTRY, POLITICS

To The Daily Worker: Having some contact with Iowa and her problems, I feel duty-bound to point out to the Iowa Communists the possibilities for a real Farmer-Labor Party in their state.

The Communist in Iowa have the nucleus for an excellent Workers Party organization. Such an organization will not come into bloom, however, until these comrades have put themselves on the political map of their state at least to some degree and I believe that the Farmer-Labor movement offers them that opportunity.

Iowa is a state of 2,000,000 people, with a good number of fair-sized towns and cities well-linked up by railroads. Towns which can be considered in the nature of industrial centers are Council Bluffs, Missouri Valley, Sioux City, Mason City, Davenport, Burlington, and Cedar Rapids. All these towns have some degree of trade union organization, most of them have trade union papers.

The farming population of Iowa is regarded by capitalists polticians as "radical." They are ripe for a Farmer-Labor Party. They need to be told about the Farmer-Labor convention which will be held at St. Paul on the 17th of June. They must be urged to send delegates to that historic gathering of militant farmers and wage-earners.

All this offers wonderful opportunities for the Workers Party members in Iowa. I would therefore urge every party branch or member-at-large in the state to immediately get in touch with the Farmer-Labor League, 155 West Graham avenue, Council Bluffs, and assist that organization in its efforts to line up Iowa for the mass class Farmer-Labor Party and the June 17th convention. It is an opportunity for Communists to show their colors.

TOM MATTHEWS.

I was happy to read in Wednesday's issue of the DAILY WORKER that Comrade O'Flaherty's brilliant column, "As We See It" will be back with us soon again. Another feature that I would like to see once again on the first page of the DAILY WORKER is Fred Ellis' cartoons, which in my opinion are among the best that the American Communist movement has yet produced.

A paper such as the DAILY WORKER, to appeal to the broad mass of workers should try and add to its number of features, for these are the methods that will make the circulation grow. However, the few that it has must be retained and I feel that Ellis' cartoons are an important factor.

Fraternally yours,

FABLE 3.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 30.—Speaking from the white House steps to a delegation of "dirt" farmers from South Dakota, who came to hear Magnus Johnson deliver his speech on "Government by blocs or by blockheads" Calvin Coolidge, declared that the greatest danger confronting the people of America today, is the influence of Wall Street. "This rapacious organization" said the president "has not alone throttled the voice of the people of America, but has stretched out its hand and is now bringing Europe under its control. "Hell-and-Maria" Dawes, who went over to Germany, is nothing else but a tool of the big bankers and I propose to show in the presidential campaign, that the Communists are not the menace that confronts America—with all due respect to my friend Sam Gompers—but the men of great wealth. We need more men like Magnus Johnson, Senator Wheeler and "fighting Bob" LaFollette in the senate. Then, crooks like Harry M. Daugherty and Mellon could not get away with the graft." The speech has created a sensation in Washington, and a horde of alienists from Wall Street is on the way to Washington to prove that the president is insane.

Why Every Junior, Young Worker and Old Worker Should Be a Communist.

By WILLIAM LURYE, Age 13.
Marshfield Junior Group.

In the United States today more than two million workers are without jobs! Do you know what that means? Starvation and suffering not only to these workers but starvation and suffering to their children, starvation and suffering to the mothers of these children.

We have 1,200,000 farmers driven from the land into bankruptcy on account of the bitter exploitation of the capitalists. Are we going to stand for this? I say NO! We have suffered long enough, it is time something was done. What can we do? Well, I'm going to tell you.

ORGANIZE! Organize the juniors! Teach them to be strong and sturdy! Teach them to fight the capitalist public schools!

ORGANIZE the Young Workers! Teach them what's wrong in this system. Teach them to fight those big fat capitalists! Organize the old workers! Show them how they've suffer- gether with the Young Workers, the ed for so many years. Bring them to- Juniors! Put some spirit into them! Wake them! Teach them to fight those bullies with the big fat stomachs who care for no one but themselves.

Altogether, juniors, young workers, old workers! Get behind the work and push! Help to establish the second workers and farmers government.

May Day.

By TILLIE L., Age 9.

May Day is Labor's International Holiday. "It is a day of struggle," that's what the juniors say. With that we mean that all comrades, little ones and big ones, come together and celebrate. They talk about all the things that happened, what the capitalists did, and what they did. Then they discuss what they should go on to do; and everybody feels good. The older comorades feel that if they work hard they will have a Workers' and Farmers' government; the juniors know That's why on May Day all the jun- better homes and real good times. That's what on May Day all the juniors should sell Young Comrades, get new members and help make bigger and better junior groups. The older comrades should do the same. Let's everyone get together, work hard and help make the Second Workers' and Farmers' government. Now, let's give three cheers for our great International Holiday.

Ready, let's go—rah-rah-rah!

Needle Trades' Convention Coming

The early part of May will see important conventions of the principal unions in the clothing industry; the Ladies' Garment Workers at Boston on the 5th; the Furriers at Chicago on the 12th, and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers at Philadelphia, also on the 12th. Vital issues for progress will be fought for in all three conventions by the left-wing militants who have been waging continuous battle to keep the organizations in this industry in step with developments in industry and in political life.

In all three unions, as explained in detail by J. W. Johnstone, in the LABOR HERALD for May, the left wing workers have been meeting opposition from the right wing reactionaries, usually assisted by the union officials who, in some cases, like the Furriers and the I. L. G. W., have gone over completely to the yellow-Socialist—Abe Cahan reaction and waged a war of expulsions and sluggings against the T. U. E. L. and the left generally. These fights will come to a head at the conventions. While the fight in the A. C. W. has so far not taken on the open and bitter character seen in the other unions, Comrade Johnstone explains fully in his excellent article on the needle trades, the definite danger signals which have appeared in the tendency of the A. C. W. administration to permit the Forward right wing gang to begin the same disruptive war against the left as has weakened and nearly wrecked the other unions.

Another test of the A. C. W. will be its action upon the call for June 17th, since the 1922 convention favored a class Labor Party, the militants will fight for these fine words to be put into deeds. The article in the May LABOR HERALD is indispensible to any militant who seeks to keep in touch with the latest developments in the labor movement.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

They installed Jess Smith in Daugherty's office, unknown to the latter, tho people saw them drinking booze together, but so clever did the Communists work that Daugherty does not know to this day that Jess had a desk in his office. The Communists induced Daugherty to turn over the Department of Justice to the bootleggers who made a "little green house on K. St.," their headquarters. They prevailed on Daugherty and Jess Smith to withhold prosecution of a Japanese air craft company that robbed the government of $3,000,000 after $200,000 in bribe money went into the spacious pockets of Daugherty, Jess Smith and Co. The wicked Communists still bent on "destroying confidence in public officials as part of their plan to bring about the overthrow of this government by force and violence" induced Daugherty to violate a federal law against the interstate transportation of fight films, by having said pictures shown in the home of Edward McLean, Harding's boon companion, in the presence of Harding, Coolidge, Hughes, Hoover and other cabinet members, including Daugherty, thus bringing these "columns of Americanism" into disrepute and contumely and destroying public confidence in them.

One hundred and fourteen miners are entombed as the result of a mine explosition in West Virginia, the infamous coal baron-controlled state. Here are more casualties on the industrial battlefield; more sacrifices on the altar of capitalism. When the agent of an American trust is killed in Mexico, or China, notes are dispatched by the affronted American secretary of state, demanding satisfaction, and behind the note is the mailed fist. But the American government is silent when hundreds of workers are murdered thru the greed of the coal barons. It is cheaper to hire miners than to install safety devices. Labor is cheap. Labor leaders listen to "reason." Gompers says that relations between employers and employes were never better. And the murder goes on.

Charles Murphy, boss of Tammany Hall for many years, passed away. He made a fortune on "glucose" during the war. His enemies branded him "Glucose Charlie." His organization holds New York City in the hollow of its hand. It makes and unmakes mayors. It is supposedly democratic, but is on good terms with the local republican machine. They trade judges who sit on the bench and send radicals to jail for not appreciating the beauties of American democracy. Much could be written about Tammany. It holds its power by denouncing the Traction Trust, which it practically owns, and posing as progressive which it is. It secures the releases of criminals who are afterwards under an obligation to it. It is a little to the right of the Socialist Party, at times. The latter accused it of stealing most of its planks, the most important of which were a five-cent fare, sanitary public convenience stations and municipal graveyards. Now that Murphy is dead, the question is, "Who is to take his place?" Otherwise things are going along as usual. Merely the death of another political grafter.

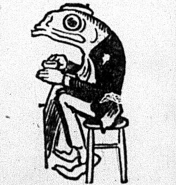
Another Murphy, initials M. J. for eight years director of the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia, has been chosen Vice-President and Cashier of the Federation Bank of New York, it was announced by Peter J. Brady, President of the bank. Mr. Brady declared that Mr. Murphy brings a rich experience to the bank and an idealistic viewpoint. Mr. Brady is lacking considerably in the latter. He is supposed to be the power behind the Central Trades Assembly in New York, editor of the New York City Record and has a sumptuous suite of offices in the New York municipal building. He is president of the Allied Printing Trades Council and is the prime booster of Major George L. Berry, for Vice-President on the Democratic ticket. If things go bad with our labor leaders in the unions, they have their banks to fall back on. Why should they bother organizing any more workers? Banking is a more respectable, interesting and safer diversion.



The Poor Fish says, there shouldn't be so much criticism of Hoover for giving the salmon rights to the Alaska Packers' Association after all Hoover did to feed starving people during the war.

100,000 QUIT CHICAGO JOBS ON MAY DAY

Great Celebrations For International Labor

International Labor Day which first wrote its revolutionary message across a Chicago sky was celebrated here Thursday by more than one hundred thousand workers who downed their tools and took May 1 for themselves, not for their bosses. Huge meetings were held by the Workers Party and labor organizations.

The 40,000 union men in the ranks of the Amalgamated Clothing workers deserted their factories and jammed the mighty Coliseum to the doors, afternoon and evening.

Needle Trades Celebrate.

The thousands of members of the International Ladies' Garment Workers, from the cloakmakers and allied crafts and the striking dressmakers, took the day off and attended a union entertainment, concert and dance in the halls at 180 W. Washington St.

The Amalgamated Food Workers, left their restaurants and bakery shops and made a gala day of it in their headquarters at 214 N. State St.

Out in Pullman, the strike of the steel car builders received renewed impetus and enthusiastic May Day meetings were held in Stancik's hall, morning and evening.

More conservative labor organizations which officially recognize only the hundred percenters' Labor Day in September when labor and capital fraternize, did not join in the international celebration officially but tens of thousands of their members took the day off nevertheless.

Big building trades' jobs failed to show their usual quota of men at work. "Celebrating May Day" was the answer to inquiries as to where the rest were.

The youth were celebrating and the old timers, remembering the great May Days of the eighties when the great eight-hour fights were on, took the day off too.

Remember Chicago Martyrs

Many a grey-haired Chicago worker thot with reverence of Parsons, Engel, Fischer, Spies and Lingg who sacrificed their lives thru their early May activities for labor in 1886 and hundreds of workers made a pilgrimage to the memorial to the martyrs at Waldheim cemetery.

Sidney Hillman addressed more than 10,000 workingmen and women at the Coliseum May Day afternoon. He emphasized the May Day spirit of solidarity which had won the Amalgamated's victories.

Hillman spoke of the recent victory of the union which defeated the bosses' attempt to cut wages this May 1st. He explained the new employment insurance scheme now going into effect by which all workers in the union received 40 per cent of their regular wages during periods of unemployment, after the first week out.

Hillman Lauds Russia

The Amalgamated's success in organizing the great Russian-American Industrial Corporation was emphasized by the speaker who went on to laud the Soviet Republic for its magnificent achievements for the working class.

Playing of the "International" by N. O. Berarinelli's band brought enthusiastic applause and thousands of workers joined in singing Russian songs with soloists.

Big Turn-Out in Detroit.

DETROIT, Mich., May 2.—Workers of many nationalities in Detroit attended the spirited celebration of May Day held here in the House of the Masses, at which J. Louis Engdahl, editor of the DAILY WORKER, was the principal speaker.

The meeting was held in the evening, and the appeal of the chairman, Cyril Lambkin, for the payment of the day's wage to the DAILY WORKER fund, by all those who had worked during the day, met with large response.

BENTLEYVILLE, Pa., May 2.—Coal miners here went back to work today after a spirited May Day celebration consisting of a parade and speaking. Members of Local Unions 1165, 1197, 5071, 2278 and 155, United Mine Workers of America, participated in the parade and listened to the speaking of Ludwig Lore, editor of the New Yorker Volkszeitung, the German Language Communist daily, M. PARIS MAY DAY STRIKE TAKES HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OFF JOBS

PARIS, May 3.—Europe's Labor Day—May 1—was recognized by an extensive cessation of work here today.

Several hundred thousand employes of factories and shops obeyed the order of the General Confederation of Labor for a May Day strike to demonstrate the solidarity and power of their organizations.

Taxi users planned a reprisal strike tomorrow and agreed to refuse tips to cabmen.

STRIKING CAP MAKERS SETTLE THREE SHOPS

Early Settlement Of All Shops Expected

Three Cap Manufacturers have already settled with the Cap Makers' Union, Local No. 5, which started its strike yesterday. An enthusiastic meeting in Crawford Hall was addressed by Max Salzman, of the Y. W. L., and Jack Johnstone, painters' delegate to the Federation of Labor, during the afternoon.

The shops that settled will abide by the agreement pending with the Cap Manufacturers' association. The Uniform Cap Manufacturers are negotiating with the union at present and will probably settle within a few days. The remaining shops, numbering thirteen or fourteen, have formed a new association which the union hopes to smash in short order.

Monday morning there will be an important strike meeting at 1221 Blue Island avenue, 10 a. m.

BIG REVOLT IN SUGAR TRUST COLONY

Coolidge Backs Wall Street Tools

HAVANA, Cuba, May 2.—This little colony of the American sugar trust has a man sized rebellion on its hands. There is an election campaign which has evoluted into an armed conflict. President Zayas has asked for an appropriation of $1,000,000 to secure his relection or as he puts it "to combat the rebellion."

The United States cruiser Cleveland has arrived in Havana harbor ready to shoot some American democracy into the benighted Cubans. The rest of the United States navy is busy between here and the "Horn" on similar errands.

All demonstrations scheduled for May Day were forbidden. A strict censorship is imposed on all news and the press is only allowed to print whatever lies appear more plausible to the government.

The Cuban government, loyal tool of Wall Street, appealed to Washington for assistance in crushing its political enemies. It was not long forthcoming. "Silent Cal" in less time than it would take to say "Harry Daughtery" wrote one of his famous epistles forbidding the export of election munitions to the political opponents of the present government. Provisions were made, however, for the unlimited supply of the army to the Zayas government.

Besides the proclamation and the embargo on arms to the rebels, the Coolidge govenment stands ready to send troops to Cuba to maintain the grip of the sugar trust on that country which was formerly "freed" from the Spanish yoke by the United States.

Englewood Y. W. L. Encounters Egg-Throwing Invasion

A recent meeting of the Englewood branch of the Young Workers League was almost swamped by an influx of outsiders. The Young Workers were outnumbered three to one but proved themselves better stickers in the end.

The invaders disagreed violently with the Y. W. L. speaker and refused to believe that they were being constantly exploited by greedy capitalists. Most of them nursed. They emphasized their opposition with an egg bombardment, which damaged the walls of the hall but failed to make any casualties among the Young Workers.

The outsiders began to leave at 10 p. m. ad by 11 the Y. W. L. was left undisputed possession of the hall and laid plans for further meetings, if the branch is given encouragement from Chicago headquarters.

LADIES' GARMENT DELEGATES LEAVE FOR CONVENTION

Demand Reinstatement Of Expelled Members

Delegates to the International Ladies' Garment Workers' convention in Boston are already leaving, to be ready for the opening session on Monday. The three representatives of the striking Dressmakers' local No. 100, Oscar Simons, Frieda Reicher and Mary Rienabel, have gone—under instructions to vote for reinstatement of the expelled members—and the delegation of expelled members will leave tonight. The expelled members will attend the convention unofficially so that they may present their case when the Appeal Committee reports on it.

Cannon At May Day Meet.

The dressmakers held a big May Day celebration yesterday with splendid singers and several speakers. James Cannon, member of the C. E. C. of the Workers Party, addressed the strikers for some time and made a most favorable impression.

There is some doubt among the strikers as to the exact terms of the settlement with Hymen Bros. Three of the active workers who belonged to the Hymen shop were seen in the strike hall yesterday while their fellow workers had returned to their places. The returning strikers had made a short parade down Market street before entering Hymen Bros. and were subjected to a lecture by the boss who made some cheap pretense of penitence.

Says It's 40-Hour Week.

"The basis of the settlement," said Meyer Perlstein, vice-president of the I. L. G. W. U., "was the 40-hour week and an increase in pay." When asked whether this 40-hour week applied to all workers, including piece-workers and time workers, the vice-president said that it did.

The question was asked Perlstein because a number of strikers understood that the settlement with Hymen Bros. had been on the old 44-hour basis. The fight for their Saturday's freedom was one of the main issues of the strike.

One of the girls whose shop settled soon after the strike began remarked indignantly:

"Here I've had eight Saturdays off and if my boss demands the same terms as Hymen got, he can make us take the 44-hour week again. We'd have had our nine weeks' fight for nothing."

Injunction Cases Put Off.

The cases that were scheduled to come up in Judge Foell's court on May Day were put off until May 8. The judge refused to work on May Day after the DAILY WORKER pointed out to him that it was labor's holiday!

Seven cases come before Judge Hebel next week and twenty-eight before Judge Sullivan. The cases before Judge Foell are under the Graceline injunction. All court cases on the injunction issue are likely to be put off indefinitely or defaulted for lack of prosecution if the Dress Manufacturers' Association cracks any more and signs with the union.

Penn. Carpenters Endorse St. Paul Farmer-Labor Meet

BETHLEHEM, Pa. May 2.—At the last session of the Pennsylvania Eastern conference of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers, a motion was passed endorsing the June 17th convention to be held in St. Paul for the purpose of forming a class farmer-labor party. The conference pledged its full moral support to the convention and expressed its regret that their financial condition does not permit them to send delegates.

Review of the conditions existing in the trade was made by the delegates from all parts of the state and steps were taken to strengthen the organization and further improve the conditions of the workers in the trade.

The conference decided to issue a monthly bulletin and elected H. O. McClurg, secretary of local 587, as the editor.

The next session of the conference will be held in Reading, Pa., on July 5, 1924.

New York Laundry Workers Demand Raise In Pay From Bosses

NEW YORK, May 2.—The International Laundry Workers No. 280 has sent its demands to the hand laundry bosses of the city. In the downtown section they are demanding an increase of $5 to $7 a week. It is expected that the organized workers in other industries, will support the campaign of the laundry workers by demanding that their own laundry work be done by members of the union. The union looks forward to a hard fight, which will, however, undoubtedly be succesful.

GROUP OF PULLMAN STRIKERS

Strike pickets gathered in front of their hall at 250 E. 115th St. Note the five-year-old picket, who is on the job daily with his father. He has also taken to selling the DAILY WORKER among those still at work.

R. R. CARMEN'S VICE PRESIDENT PAYS TRIBUTE TO DAILY WORKER; FLAYS SCAB PULLMAN COMPANY

"I want to extend my thanks and that of the strikers for the support rendered by the Workers Party and the DAILY WORKER in our fight against one of the rottenest labor-baiting companies in America," said John Holmgren, vice-president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen to an audience of workers that packed Stancik's hall at 205 E. 115th St., May Day evening in Pullman.

It was the Workers Party May Day celebration. Max Salzman of the Young Workers League had just finished speaking when the strike leader came striding down the aisle and mounted the platform.

Only Paper Supporting Strike.

"The DAILY WORKER is the only paper in Chicago giving any support to this strike," Holmgren continued. "The News, The Tribune, the other Chicago dailies and the Pullman Calumet Index and the other Pullman papers are owned by organized capital."

Holmgren told of the bigness of the fight the Pullman workers were in and the need of extending the strike to other departments. He described the "progressive wage cut" policy initiated by Francis Gun, efficiency expert. The "progressive wage cut" means cutting the wages in one department at a time so that only one group of workers will revolt at one time.

Can't Work in the Air.

The steel shop men have fooled the company, said Holmgren. They are standing pat and extending the strike. Soon the rest of the plant will have to shut down for they can't "work in the air" if the steel shopmen refuse to build the foundations for the cars.

Holmgren, who is a powerful speaker, pounded the speed-up system with the force of a rivet-gun. His voice crashed thru the hall as he flayed the driving piece work tactics of the "efficiency experts" who have taxed the men to the last limit of endurance.

Like U. S. Government.

Only a powerful union can check this deadly speeding and prevent progressive wage cuts, emphasized the speaker. The company union is useless to the workers. The company union, he explained, is a plan to control the Pullman workers just as the United States government—a greater company union—controls the workers of the nation for organized capital as a whole.

"This wage cut," said Holmgren," is to give former governor Frank Lowden the cash to buy his way into the vice-presidency." Lowden's wife, formerly Florence Pullman, owns most of the Pullman stock.

"They caught Lowden in the act of buying the republican nomination for president in 1920,' said Holmgren, "and now he's trying to get the vice presidency in 1924.

Hate to Be With Harding.

"Harding got the presidency when Lowden was caught. They didn't catch Harding. Now he's gone to his reward and I'd hate to be where he is now."

Holmgren urged the workers to begin their fight against imperialism by fighting imperialism in Pullman. The audience cheered him to the echo.

The collection of nearly $60 was turned over to the Pullman strikers

HARRASSED CROOK INVOKES INJUNCTION TO SAVE HIS HIDE

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Former Attorney General Daugherty today applied to the District Supreme Court for an injunction against the senate Daugherty investigating committee to prevent it from investigating his alleged failure to prosecute violators of the anti-trust laws.

Daugherty also asked an injunction against the Western Union Telegraph Company here to prevent them from furnishing the committee with his private telegrams sent from here since he took office.

American Round World Flyer May Be Storm Victim

BREMERTON, WASH., May 2.—Belief that Major Frederick L. Martin, Flight Commander of America's round the world effort might have returned to Cignik, have been dispelled.

Local radio stations were in communication with Cordoav, Alaska, and the Northern station reported Major Martin had not been seen in Chignik since he left Wednesday noon.

He was bound for Dutch Harbor and has not shown up there. He hopped off in face of a Northern gale.

Defeat Of Liberal Party Bill May Bring Liberal-Labor Rift

LONDON, May 2.—The proportional representation bill, sponsored by the Liberals, was defeated in the House of Commons today 238 to 144.

It is forecast that rejection of the bill, due to lack of support by the Labor Party, will widen the breach between the Liberals and Labor Party and may result in an early general election.

Liberals strongly favored adoption of the measure. They hoped it would give them a greater representation in the House of Commons.

Dawes Losing Sense Of National Dignity; Plan To Park Army

COPENHAGEN, May 2.—The new Government proposes that Denmark shall be the first nation in the world to disarm completey. The government next intends to introduce a bill providing for reduction of the army and navy to a few necessary frontier guards. Only a few soldiers and boats will be retained. Military and naval appropriations will be reduced to one-seventh the present budget.

PULLMAN STRIKE STOPS ORDER FOR 3,000 CARS; WHOLE PLANT MAY CLOSE

News that the Pullman Steel Car Company has been unable to do a tap of work during the last three weeks on a rush order for 3,000 steel cars leaked into strike headquarters yesterday.

The order was to have been filled at the 103rd Street shops but the company have no men for the steel department at the main plant which is now on strike, much less for the new work.

John Holmgren, vice-president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, told the DAILY WORKER that it was only a matter of time until the entire Pullman plant would be shut down. The effective tie-up of the car body builders is holding up work in other departments.

The DAILY WORKER'S own investigation bears out this statement. Men from the main office of the Pullman Company have informed DAILY WORKER reporters that there is a "lot of noise" but very little work inside the plants. The effect of the strike has not only hit the entire plant by stopping the current of production at a vital point but it has caused the workers in the other departments to slow up while they are thinking about the strike going on outside.

Investigators who have been sent thru the plant find morale shot to pieces. Workers expect the company to cut their wages if they hold their jobs. For once the Pullman Company has overreached itself.

Man Killed in Plant.

Great excitement prevails over the report that a worker was killed by a wild rivet run in the hands of an inexperienced operator. An ambulance was seen removing a body but the company is trying to hush the affair up. This has had a disturbing effect on the rest.

One man, who has quit since, reported to the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, that he drilled only eight holes in two days and spent the rest of the time cutting out rivets put in by careless or indifferent workers.

Hundreds of innocent workers, lured by big promises from labor agents in Battendorf, Iowa, Detroit, Columbus and Dayton, have been streaming towards the employment offices. The few that got past the pickets quit when they found there was a strike. The handful of scabs now working are worse than useless.

Scab Herder Baxter.

An attorney is handling the cases of workers who came here on the assurance that there was no "labor trouble." Refunding of transportation is demanded.

A scab herder named "Baxter" has sent many here. Baxter, a former freight foreman for the Pullman company, has been operating in Detroit, getting men for the company. He left there for Columbus and Toledo where he once worked as a riveter. Copies of the DAILY WORKER will follow him and balk his work. The company's desperate efforts for scabs is explained by the fact of the rush order for new cars and their fear that the strike wil spread.

Great Mass-Meeting Monday.

Two thousand copies of next Monday's issue of the DAILY WORKER have been ordered by the strikers. This issue will announce the details of a great strike mass meting Monday evening at Knights of Pythias Hall at 111 St. and Michigan ave., Roseland. John Holmgren, prominent local Pullman citizens in sympathy with the strike and speakers supplied by the DAILY WORKER will address the mass meeting which will explain the strike issues to the workers in other Pullman departments and to their women relatives.

Adolp Werner, vice president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen addressed the strikers yesterday morning and joined with John Holmgren and the strike committee in laying plans for the extension of the walk-out.

SLUGGERS CAN'T STOP SAM GREEN OF Y. W. L. FROM SELLING PAPERS

Pullman strikers are angered at Chicago detectives, Emil Mertz and Frank O'Keefy for assaulting and arresting Sam Green of the Young Workers League while he was selling the DAILY WORKER in front of the Pullman plant May Day morning.

The two plainclothesmen slugged Green when he demanded that they show their badges and prove they were policemen, after they had seized him.

Green was promptly bailed out by John Stancik, owner of Stancik's hall where the strikers meet and yesterday morning demanded a jury trial in the South Chicago Court where John Holmgren and a DAILY WORKER representative appeared in his behalf. His trial will come up in a few weeks.

Green was back on the strike line that noon and sold hundreds of papers before the day was over. The total number of DAILY WORKERS sold May Day in front of the Pullman plant was 1,200.

HEART BREAKING SCENES ENACTED AT MINE HORROR

BENWOOD, W. Va., May 2.—The Wheeling Steel Corporation is directly responsible for the deaths of the 125 miners in the gas explosion and fire of last Tuesday, according to M. W. Brajdich, a miner who arrived at the Benwood mine shortly after the disaster occurred.

The mine was one of the oldest mines in the state and had been very carelessly inspected. The fire boss was reported drunk most of the time and the mine foreman, in the same condition. Brajdich claims that the men could not have failed to notice the gas pocket if they had made any effort at all to inspect the mine. Both of them paid for their carelessness with their own lives and sacrificed over a hundred innocent workers.

President S. M. Scott of the Wheeling Steel Corporation, mentioned the explosion of three months ago, but failed to add that three miners lost their lives at that time and that there had been previous explosions.

The Benwood mine was organized for some time, but in 1922 the company broke the union during their strike, Brajdich states. Many union miners who had gone into this mine again in the hope of organizing it once more, paid to the limit in the explosion, when they lost their lives. Emil Yurosich, one of these earnest organizers, is well-known in District No. 5. of the United Mine Workers. He and Brajdich went into the Westmoreland, Pa., field in 1922 and organized several locals.

Brajdich says that John L. Lewis claims credit for the organization work he and Yurosich did and that John L. Lewis is also responsible to a degree for the disaster for his signing the Cleveland agreement.

The bodies taken from the mine are in a horrible condition, Brajdich relates. Most of the men were too badly burnt about the body and head for identification. The scene in the Cooey-Bentz morgue is too gruesome to describe.

"Workers from all parts of three states, West Virginia, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, are coming and offering what little sympathy and help (they can) to the families of the dead workers," Brajdich relates. "Wives crying, children bawling for their fathers, but dead bodies refuse to answer. It's enough to break any human heart, but the capitalist class laughs at this.

"One woman told me this morning her husband paid $25 for a job last week," continues Brajdich, "and there are many other cases of this kind."

Instead of offering help to the stricken families of the workers, the Wheeling Steel company officials are yelping what a pile of money it has cost them to get the bodies out of the mine!

REPORT COAL STRIKE NEAR SETTLEMENT

40,000 Coal Diggers Are Involved

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 2.—Basis for an agreement to settle the strike of 40,000 coal miners in the southwest has been reached according to reports today.

Minor details in the new contract remain to be worked out by the subcommittee of union representatives and operators carrying on negotiations before the agreement will be ready for signing. The pact will end the strike in effect since April first, and is expected to be completed tonight.

According to advance reports the workers who insisted upon renewal of the present wage scale for three years have won most of their demands.

by the Workers Party.

Max Salzman's speech explained the party's tactics in organizing a united political front against the Teapot Domers thru the June 17 Farmer-Labor conference.

The Workers Party activities in the Pullman strike, he showed are a necessary part of the party's program of activity in the class struggle. Strikers cheered the Young Workers League speaker. They had seen Sam Green, a Y. W. L. worker arrested and beaten up by city detectives on the strike lines that morning and had bought their DAILY WORKER—1,200 were sold—from Y. W. L. youths.

Little Ones Sing International.

At one stage in the program the curtain rose. A score of youngsters in knee trousers and short dresses sang the "International." They were the Lithuanian children's singing society.

Esther Lowell of the DAILY WORKER talked on May Day as the historic day of strikes for the 8-hour day and hailed the fight that was now being waged against the huge steel car concern.

A. Marik spoke in Polish and emphasized the need of solidarity.

Karl Reeve was chairman of the meeting. Much party literature was sold.

Dunne Speaks With John Holmgren To Pullman Strikers

"Thirty years ago my father took part in a great railroad strike that began against the Pullman company," said William F. Dunne, editor of the DAILY WORKER, and member of the electrical workers' union, addressing the Pullman strikers May Day morning.

Dunne expressed his pleasure at seeing another battle against the gigantic open shop outfit that was dominated by the industrial aristocracy of the United States. He urged the strikers to keep their lines intact now because this fight was probably just the starter for bigger revolts against the wage cutting scab policy of big capital.

The speaker traced the industrial situation that was forcing the workers to revolt and said that indications pointed to nation-wide workingclass battles that could turn the tide and build up the unions that have been weakened by the open shop onslaught.

HOOVER LINKED TO LOBBYISTS OF SALMON TRUST

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Dan Sutherland, Alaska delegate to Congress, declared that lobbyists from the Alaska Packers Association, Libby, McNeil & Libby and the Pacific American Fisheries were working in the halls of congress to prevent passage of the house bill to end monopoly of the salmon streams. Sutherland said that Hoover knew these lobbyists. Sutherland added that Hoover could secure the passage of these bills if he wanted to. One of the lobbyists, Sutherland said, is Frank Warren of Portland, Ore., former dollar-a-year man and Hoover representative in the food administration.

With Warren's assistance, said Sutherland, the United States government was charged 75 cents in excess of the federal trade commission's estimate of a fair price per salmon case during the war.

Testimony before Congress showed that the Salmon Trust thus favored, sold the military forces 5,200,000 cans of decomposed salmon, afterwards rejected.

Spurred by the expose now going on, President Coolidge has come out for "conservation" and made one obscure reference to the desirability of ending the monopoly.

TELEGRAM FROM COOLIDGE TO FORD DEMANDED BY COMMITTEE

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Senator Norris, chairman of the Senate Agricultural Committee, today called on Ernest G. Liebold, Henry Ford's secretary, to furnish the committee with a copy of a telegram he said President Coolidge sent Ford between Dec. 19 and 21 last.

Without specifying what he believed the message contained, Norris directed Liebold to send the committee the telegram as soon as he returns to Detroit. Norris said he would submit the message to the committee in executive session before making it public.

So huge was the Moscow workers parade that more than five hours were occupied in passing a given point. The workers marched by shops, led by their shop committeemen.

Rain and bitter cold failed to dampen the ardor of the demonstrating masses. The long processions wound thru Moscow's streets towards Lenin's tomb in Red Square where Lenin's successor Alexis I. Rykov stood on the rostrum above the tomb welcoming his comrades as they filed past.

8 Killed In Germany

BERLIN, May 2.—May Day in Berlin was a time of repression by the military and the police. Sabers, clubs and guns were used on the workers who came out in celebration of their day. In Keenigsberg one militiaman paid the penalty for his violence with his life, but a worker was killed also and many were wounded. Six workers were killed in Hindenberg, Silesia. In the Gera, seven militiamen were wounded, and 27 workers injured at Graetz, Thuringia. Police violence ruled all over Germany. Details of many injuries have not yet come in.

The Young Worker Plans June Issue For Young Miners

The Young Worker, official organ of the Young Workers' League of America, has announced that its June 1st issue is to be a special young miners' number, dealing with the specific problems of the young workers in the mines all over the country, and their relation to the Young Workers' League.

The issue will contain special articles by such well-known and active workers among the miners as Barney Mass, Young Workers' League District Organizer in Southern Illinois; Thomas Myerscough, secretary of the International Progressive Miners' Committee, Jack Johnstone, Assistant Secretary of the Trade Union Educational League; Charles O'Neill and Pat Toohey, of the Pittsburgh district, and many others.

Special efforts are being made to have this issue distributed on as large a scale as possible and it is expected that Workers Party branches, no matter what language, which function in mining territories, will help the Young Worker by sending in orders immediately for a bundle of the special issue. A bundle of 100 can be obtained for $3.00; that is, 3c per copy in bundles of five or more.

The DAILY WORKER urges the comrades in the mining territory to send in orders to the Young Worker for the special issue and distribute it widely among the young miners. The propaganda effect will be of tremendous value.

Orders by mail should be in the hands of the Young Worker by May 10th. Telegraphic orders will be received up to May 13th. Send all orders and money to the Young Worker, 1009 No. State St., Chicago, Ill.

BROWDER URGES WORKERS RALLY BEHIND JUNE 17

NEW YORK, May 2.—Addressing a large audience of trade union militants, at Stuyvesant Casino recently, Earl Browder, outlined the main arguments for the establishment of a national class farmer-labor party in the United States. He urged those present to work for the proletarian, June 17 convention, instead of a middle-class and bourgeois convention of July 4.

He declared that "the basis of the political conditions today is the change of class forces and the change in the structure of capitalist society. These changes are first the growing conflict between the various sections of the capitalist class, as for instance in the oil and automobile industry. Secondly the Anderson and the Daugherty injunctions have caused the disillusionment of the workers with the two dominant political parties. A third cause is the bankruptcy of the American agricultural system. The farmers are being proletarianized. They are losing their respect for private property. Even the middle class is becoming dissatisfied, as shown by the creation of blocs in Congress. The middle class is threatening to revolt against the dominant parties, but is also trying to control the revolt of the working class. The middle class is looking to LaFollette as a saviour."

"The rivalry between June 17 and July 4 is creating a class division in the farmer labor party movement, which we want," said Browder. June 17 is one of the most important and most revolutionary events in the development of the American working class."

Depression Shuts Big Industries Of South Bend, Ind.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

SOUTH BEND, Ind., May 2.—The huge Studebaker plant which employs approximately 15,000 men, has closed down for a "spring vacation" of two weeks. Of course everyone understands that the vacation is not being given on account of the weather, but on account of a glutted market.

For the past two months a constant process of laying men off, has been going on. Of late, the Studebaker company has been compelled to store thousands of unmarketable machines. It seems certain that thousands of the men who are now out on "spring vacation" will not be called back to work.

Plow Factory Closed.

The Oliver factory, which manufactures plows, and which employs between 3,000 and 4,000 men, has practically closed down since the 18th of April. Only a small force of men has been retained. The plant is going thru the identical conditions that preceded the complete shutdown in 1921.

Wilson Bros., a short manufacturing company which employs 3,600 women and girls, is operating only three days a week. Also the number of those being employed at all, is being slashed every week.

The entire attitude of the business men of South Bend is one of fear, verging on panic. The workers, both the employed and the unemployed, are beginning to wonder whether they are going to re-live the conditions of 1921.

Philadelphia Boss Painters Turn Down Workers Demands

PHILADELPHTA, May 2.—Philadelphia District Council of Painters, Paperhangers and Decorators recently opened negotiations with the boss-painters for the renewal of an agreement. The conditions proposed by the district council were—the establishment of a wage scale of 1.12 1-2 cents an hour and the closed shop system.

The bosses rejected these demands and offered instead to sign upon the terms prevailing at present in the industry. In other words, the bosses insisted that the open shop system should stand and that the present wage scale of 95 cents an hour should remain in force.

The results of the negotiations were reported to a large and enthusiastic union membership meeting which approved the actions of the negotiations committee and decided to reject the offer of the bosses and to delay action on the matter until the coming fall.

Meanwhile an intensive organization campaign will be carried on and preparations will be made for the coming struggle with the bosses. As a beginning of this campaign the membership assessed itself with three dollars each.

All workers engaged in the industry and who are not yet members of the union are urged to join immediately and help carry on the fight for better wages and against the open shop.

HUGE GATHERINGS HELD THRUOUT ALL U. S. ON MAY DAY

Chicago Workers Turn Out In Thousands

May Day was celebrated by thousands of workers in Chicago with an enthusiasm that marks the rising tide of labor's revolt in this country against the growing oppression of the capitalists and their rotten Teapot Dome government. On Thursday evening, May 1, Turner Hall, 820 North Clark Street, was packed to the doors with workers who came to hear the inspiring message of Communism to the exploited slaves of America.

The meeting was held under the auspices of the United Front May Day Conference of Chicago. The speakers were William F. Dunne, editor of the DAILY WORKER, Alexander Bittelman, secretary of the Political Committee of the Central Executive Committee Workers' Party, Antoni Pressi, editor of Alba Nouva, J. Kowalski, secretary of the Polish Federation of the Workers' Party, Max Shachtman, editor of The Young Worker, B. Sherman, Left Paole Zionist, Jewish Socialist Party, and Martin Abern, Chicago City Central secretary, who acted as chairman.

The speakers dwelt upon the rise of capitalist dictatorships all over the world and the standing challenge of Soviet Russia under the Dictatorship of the Proletariat thru the Communist Party to the world bourgeoisie. Soviet Russia was pointed out as an inspiration to the workers everywhere. An appeal was made at the end of the meeting for members to join the Workers Party. A substantial collection was taken up.

There was an excellent concert program consisting of the Freiheit Singing Society and the Russian Grand Opera Stars, Svetloff, tenor; Nina Obrastzova, coloratura soprano, and Gabrilius Hrzanowski, baritone. The meeting opened with the singing of the "International" by the Freiheit chorus and the audience.

Duluth Mass Meeting.

DULUTH, Minn., May 2.—The workers of Duluth last night celebrated International May Day by filling Woodmen Hall to capacity when J. C. Bentall returned to Duluth with the message of working class solidarity. Great enthusiasm characterized the meeting thruout. Every speaker, among whom were W. E. McEwen and A. A. Siegler, were applauded again and again as they appealed for independent political action of the workers and exploited farmers.

Bentall was tendered a great ovation when he rose to speak. A collection of one hundred and ten dollars was taken up. The surplus after defraying expenses, will go to the Labor Defense Council. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Duluth May Day Conference. Norman Tallentire, district organizer of the Workers Party, acted as chairman.

Quaker City Celebrates.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 2.—Fifteen hundred workers jammed Lulu Temple and cheered the speakers of the Workers Party who gave the slogan "A class party on June 17th." William Weinstone, M. Epstein, and others spoke. The DAILY WORKER received a great demonstration. The meeting heartily endorsed the June 17th convention and pledged energetic support for success.

Police Grab DAILY WORKER

SOUTH BEND, Ind., May 2.—The South Bend locals of the Workers Party and the Young Workers' League held a fine May Day meeting in Workers' Hall, Thursday. Comrade Paul Cline of the Young Workers' League, was the speaker. The large crowd of workers which attended, was very much interested in the speaker's outline of the development of the class struggle in the United States, and the forces making for a Farmer-Labor Party. The meeting was held under the close surveillance of the police, who, tho they did not interrupt the speaking, grabbed up all the copies of the May Day issues of the DAILY WORKER.

Textile Workers See Mills Close.

LAWRENCE, Mass., May 2.— Two of the largest mills have just closed here for an indefinite period, altho business had seemed to be picking up. The Pemberton Company has thrown 500 cotton goods workers out of work and the Methuen Company, 300 workers. The reason given was the condition of the buying market.

2 STILL JAILED FROM PALMER'S MAY DAY PLOTS

Sacco - Vanzetti Await Workers' Action

By KARL PRETSHOLD.

The workers in dozens of foreign countries when they celebrate May Day this year will remember two workers who are in American prisons facing death as the result of a plot of the United States Department of Justice to scare the country into fits on May Day, 1919.

The country was scared, one man was murdered by the Department of Justice and to cover up the crime two workers were framed up and today, four years after their arrest, are in danger of the electric chair. They are Nicola Sacco and Barfhelmo Vanzetti.

Salsedo Tortured.

Wililam Flynn and his agents of the department rigged up a little bomb plot for May Day 1919. All the big politicans got nice little bombs in the mail the morning of the first of May. February 25, 1920, Robert Elia was arrested because another May Day was coming around. He was charged with having something to do with the bombs sent thru the mails. His friend Andrea Salsedo who tried to hire a lawyer for him was arrested for his pains. Salsedo was arrested in the early part of March. He was beaten and kicked and given the "gold fish." It was kept up for two months. Elia in an affidavit tells of hearing the screams of Salsedo on March 8th. Weeks passed. Both men were continually tortured. Elia later told of how Salsedo gradually lost his mind.

Salsedo Killed.

On the morning of May 3rd, just four years ago, Mr. Von Wedenholt of Bergenfeld, N. J., on his way from work saw a body drop from the window of the 13th floor of the Park Row building where the Department of Justice had its New York office and where Elia and Salsedo were imprisoned.

Salsedo had found freedom from torture. At the morgue Mrs. Salsedo was told, "He is yours now to do as you like with."

The authorities did not even bother to hold an inquest.

Sacco-Vanzetti Arrange Protest.

But Salsedo had friends. While he was imprisoned they were trying to get him a lawyer. Two of those friends were Nicola Sacco and Barthelemo Vanzetto. Vanzetti had come to New York from Boston just a few days before tdying to get Walter Nelles to act as lawyer for Salsedo and Elia.

When they heard of the murder they turned their energy into arranging protest meetings. On May 5th they were arrested in Massachusetts and questioned for hours about their radical connections.

Both Sacco and Vanzetti had destroyed all literature that would connect them with the radical movement. They had seen what it meant to be arrested as a foreign-born "red."

The Department of Justice was anxious to nip the protest against their killing of Salsedo.

Elia was rushed to Ellis Island and deported because he was the only person who could tell what had happened on the thirteenth floor of the Park Row building during the long weeks he and Salsedo were confined there.

Frame-up of Sacco-Vanzetti.

It remained only for the Department of Justice to stop the spreading of the story of Salsedo's death among his countrymen. After being held for many hours Sacco and Vanzetti were charged with killing a pay-roll guard and robbing him of $18,000.

The Department of Justice was saved again.

But the workers of the world learned the story of their frame-up and also of the murder of Salsedo. Where one worker would have heard of the killing of Salsedo if Sacco and Vanzetti had been permitted to hold their protest meetings today, hundreds of thousands know the story of that murder and how the authorities tried to cover it up by killing two more workers.

Today the workers of the world are not only celebrating May Day, they are also demanding the freedom of Sacco and Vanzetti who face death because the bosses and their agents hate May Day.

Christians, Pacifists Plead For Nation To Enter World Court

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, May 2.— A huge delegation of church, peace, and law organizations beseiged Congress today with a plea for American participation in the world court.

The court crusaders appeared at the opening of the hearings before a special Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which is considering various proposals for American participation in legal adjudication of world affairs.

James G. McDonald, head of the foreign policies association, in opening the session, urged that the Senate take steps guaranteeing full American adherence to the International Justice Court, now sitting at the Hague.

MEXICAN WORKERS GIVE FOUR DAYS TO CELEBRATING GREAT INTERNATIONAL LABOR HOLIDAY

By JAY LOVESTONE.

(Special to the Daily Worker.)

MEXICO CITY, Mexico, April 30.—At a session of the Central Labor Council of Mexico City, I was somewhat surprised at the apparent ease with which the labor body was working, in view of the recent turmoil in particular and the youthfulness and inexperience of organized labor in Mexico in general. The proceedings went on very smoothly and were handled with despatch.

The chief subject of debate for the sixty odd delegates crowded into the small room, was the problem of organizing successful May Day demonstrations. Communications from local unions after local union showed that there was widespread interest amongst the masses for making the international workers' holiday one huge demonstration of the solidarity of the oppressed masses. To an American accustomed to "Anti-red" denunciations bearing the Gomper's union label every May first, and to July fourth spreadeagle orations on the Labor-Capital peace day in September, this attitude of the Mexican workers was most refreshing.

Russian Posters on Wall.

As a matter of fact the whole atmosphere surrounding the deliberations was in most striking and welcome contrast to the staid and stifling atmosphere so characteristic of the average American central labor body. On the walls of the meeting room there were posters inscribed in Russian, showing how the working and peasant masses of Soviet Russia repelled the world capitalist reaction, and how the Red Army was leading the working class to victory.

In the chair of the presiding officer there was seated an almond-eyed Mexican who was an example of the type reared in the union of Spaniard-Indian and Oriental. Amongst the delegates one could see the native Indian, the Spanish, Mestizo or Creole and the American or "Gringo" types. Here and there were to be seen women delegates. The representatives of the various local unions come to the meeting in their working clothes, in their overalls, in their tattered garments.

The salutations "Delegate" so and so and "Brother" so and so were significantly absent from the deliberations of the Central Labor Council here. The Mexican workers address each other as "companeros" or comrades. The communications from the various local unions to the central body called "La Federacion de Sindicatos de Obreros del Distrito Federal" all ended with the slogan "Salud Y. Revolucion Social." In the English of our trade union movement this would be the shocking closing of "Greetings and Social Revolution."

May Day Strike Planned.

There was considerable discussion over the question of taking the workers in the ice factories off their jobs on May 1st. The owners had made the plea that these workers should stay at their posts because of the hospital needs for ice. The delegates would brook no such ruse by their bosses. They were determined to present an unbroken front in the May 1st demonstrations. A special committee was appointed to see to it that there would be no scabbing in the ice factories.

Opposition from the ice bosses will very likely be encountered. One delegate reported that his employer had decided to run the ice factory on May 1st, that he had proudly boasted of his having no fear of a strike since he had already gone thru four strikes and had managed to "fix" them with bullets. In order to make sure that the bosses would toe the work, delegates from the chauffeurs, flour mill workers, transportation workers, department store clerks, and other unions volunteered to organize themselves into squads to prevent the ice manufacturers from violating the international holiday.

Remember Haymarket Victims.

All in all, the May Day celebrations planned by the Mexico City organized workers will last four days. Mass meetings, theatrical performances, concerts, parades, a demonstration to commemorate the murder of the anarchist workers in Chicago in 1887, an address by Luis N. Morones, president of the Mexican Federation of Labor, to be released to the workers of the whole country on the radio, are part of the auspicious program.

Extensive preparations for the celebration of the workers' international holiday are also keeping busy large sections of the unorganized masses of workers and peasants. The writer had the good fortune to take in a rehearsal of a great mass chorus of thousands of men, women and children. Crowded in the "Platio", a sumptuous arena in the court of the "Secratavia de Educacion, Publica," were thousands of workers and farmers dressed in their overalls and working clothes, singing under the directions of their leader who was preparing them for the inauguration ceremony to make the grand opening of the National Stadium on May 1st. The colors of the variegated shawls covering the Indian women blended in charming effect with the sad strain running thru the powerful mass tones. In music and color, in art and literature, the spirit of the masses bears the wholesome imprint of revolt against capitalist imperialist oppression.

As one looked down upon this vast mass of genuine enthusiasm he could not but be impressed with the powerful wave of revolt that these oppressed people will sooner, rather than later, let loose against their exploiters.

Mental Robot Factories Will Shock Liberals This Side of Revolution

(By The Federated Press)

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 2.— English colleges have more academic freedom than America's goosestep institutions, Bertrand Russell, British Socialist and professor, replies to President A. Lawrence Lowell, Harvard university here. The argument started over an interview with Russell published in the college paper, Harvard Crimson, charging that control by capitalist trustees was responsible for the ban on radical speakers like Debs, Foster and Nearing by the Harvard union.

"Any one who cares more for academic pursuits and the advancement of learning than for political propaganda would wish to see the government of universities in the hands of men of learning rather than uneducated millionaires," saps Russell. After pointing out that learning is less respected than wealth in this country, he concludes:

"A university should be primarily a place of learning and education, where whatever propaganda may occur is neutralized by opposing propaganda. Under the existing system, however, the propaganda of one side prevades everything, while that of the other can only creep in thru an occasional cranny."

CHICAGO COUNCIL FOR PROTECTION OF FOREIGN BORN WORKERS NOW ACTIVE IN AGITATIONAL DRIVE

In order to organize the working class for the protection of the foreign born workers, a council has been formed in the city of Chicago composed of local unions and other working class organizations, with a total of seventy thousand affiliated workers. The aim of this council is to organize a class protest against the drive of the employers and to unify the ranks of the workers against any such drive.

The drive of the employers against the Foreign Born workers has culminated in a number of anti-alien and immigration bills now before Congress which go as far as to demand the registration of aliens in this country and give to the Secretary of Labor the power to deport any aliens, which he regards undesirable, and to import any class of labor which may be necessary for the industrial needs of the country.

Owing, however, to the exigency of the political situation and due to the fact that this is an election year, and if such a bill were adopted it would mean the defeat of the party advocating it, the Employing Class of this country have agreed to the passage of the Johnson Bill, which while on the surface a much milder bill, and which does not call for the registration of Aliens in this country, yet is as vicious an Anti-Labor Bill as could be found and one that must be fought by the Militant Workers in order to safeguard their interests.

The Chicago Council for the protection of Foreign Born Workers has thruout its secretary addressed the following letter to Congressman Johnson the originator of the Johnson Immigration Bill which has now passed both the House of Representatives and the Senate.

"On behalf of the Chicago Council for protection of Foreign Born Workers composed of Local Unions and other working class organizations, with a total of seventy thousand affiliated workers, I am instructed to protest against the final passage of the Johnson Bill HR 6540.

We protest the final passage of the Johnson Bill because if its immigration clause, stipulating that applicants for immigrants certificate shall furnish to the consular office copies of his military record, and prison record if any, as well as copies of all available public records concerning him, kept by the Government to which he owes allegiance. We protest the passage of this bill for its stipulation that the documents furnished shall be permanently attached to the application and become part thereof and for its further stipulation that copy of immigrant's photograph is to be permanently attached to their immigration certificate as well as to the fact that this bill give the consular officials the power to select those immigrants they desire, and reject those whom they regard as objectionable.

All these provisions it is clear to us are made for the purpose of establishing a system of selective immigration, threatening prospective immigrants to accept a status of submission so they may be used by the employers in their endeavor to smash the existing labor organizations and lower the conditions of life of the workers in this country both native and foreign.

In view of the impending final adoption of this Johnson Bill, we call upon the Industrial Workers to unite their forces with the exploited farmers, into the building up of a great Farmer Labor Party, which will be able to settle accounts with the politicians who serve the Employers, and in the future to prevent the passage of laws inimical to labor.

In order to effectively take part in the drive for the formation of a Class Farmer Labor Party, the Council for the protection of Foreign Born Workers at its next regular meeting has as a special order of business the election of delegates to the Farmer Labor Convention at St. Paul, June 17th, as well as electing delegates to the State Farmer Labor Meet at Peoria, May 18th.

In addition to this a Mass meeting will be held Friday, May 9th, under the auspices of the Council for the protection of Foreign Born Workers at 8 P. M. 3322 Douglas Blvd. at which speakers from the Chicago Federation of Labor, Socialist Party, and Workers Party, will protest against the drive made by the employers on the Foreign Born Workers.

DAVIS ATTACKS FOREIGN-BORN WAGE SLAVES

Defends Washington Robbers

Speaking before the rich men's clubs of this city in a lecture campaign in favor of his move to finger print, photograph, and deport foreign-born workers who do not accept the present order of things, James J. Davis declared that the only means to cut down the overdevelopment of industry is to keep out undesirables.

How such a policy would prevent overdevelopment while the entire machinery of production is in the hands of the capitalists who are not by any means hard up for their labor supply, not to speak of the high standard of efficiency to which machinery has been brought in recent years, is not clear to the average person.

But Mr. Davis is not an average person. He is a member of the Coolidge cabinet and can see nothing wrong in the high handed burglarious activities of practically the entire cabinet a considerable number of whom have been unceremoniously kicked out by Coolidge in an effort to save the Republican Party from being wrecked beyond salvation, and to make his reelection at least a possibility.

This is the Mr. Davis who was hooted by the delegates to the recent miners' convention in Indianapolis, when he appeared to lecture them on their duties to the employing class of this country. A foreigner himself, like Gompers and other renegades to their class he is now the most bitter enemy of the foreign-born workers who are robbed of the fruits of their toil by the capitalists in America.

In his address to the City Club, Mr. Davis grew very red in the face and denounced the investigations in Washington. He particularly defended Harry M. Daugherty who, he declared, was hounded because of his prosecution of "reds." Davis commented on the fact that John L. Lewis, Gompers and conservative labor leaders did not join in the cry for Daugherty's head but that the major part of the campaign was traceable to Moscow influence which operates thru the Workers Party and has for its principal mouthpiece the DAILY WORKER.

Mr. Davis called on business men to take more interest in affairs and join with conservative labor for harmony between employers and employes.

PATRIOTIC SUGAR PLANTERS REVOLT IN CUBA PROVINCE

Four Veterans Held By Zayas Government

(Special to The Daily Worker)

HAVANA, May 2. — Hhe Zayas government today took drastic steps to put down rebellion which has broken out in the Province of Santa Clara.

Orders were issued for arrest of all leaders of the patriots and veterans' association, the organization considered responsible for the rebellion and four men were taken in custody in Havana. They are Mario Garcia Velez, brother of General Velez; Carlos Alsugaray, wealthy sugar planter and vice-president of the veterans' association; Dr. Oscar Soto, a lawyer and secretary and treasurer of the association, and Federico Moraleu, leader of the movement in Havana.

The government announced loyal troops had clashed with the rebels at Juan de la Yeras, ousting them from the city hall, which they had seized. The rebels sustained numerous casualties.

Packers Hid Big Profits And Got Away With It

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, May 2.— Warning has been issued to Attorney General Stone by Benjamin C. Marsh of the Farmers National Council, that the progressive farmers will oppose any modification of the consent decree under which former Attorney General Palmer dropped the anti-trust prosecution of the big meat packers.

"Palmer entered into a shady collusion with the packers, on the consent decree, to prevent any real packer control legislation," says Marsh. "When the fiasco of a packer control bill was finally enacted and entrusted to Secretary Wallace to emasculate, he promptly went into a deal not to enforce it. The April bulletin of the National City Bank, an Armour institution, states the combined sales of Armour, Swift, Wilson and Cudahy in 1923 were $2,015,000,000, and their combined profits $31,418,000. Thanks to Secretary Wallace, the meat packers can still pad their books and conceal $50,0000,000 of their profits."

Japanese and American officers and men struggled together in the water finally saving their boats. No lives were lost.

Warned Women Seek Forbidden Floyd Dell Book

DAVENPORT, Iowa, May 2. — Floyd Dell's "Janea March" has been the most pouplar book at the library since Miss Hermine Schmed told the local Chamber of Commerce to shun it.

Miss chmed, hailing back from Calfornia, warned the Iowans to avoid ocialist literature and ban Socialist speakers. She got her audience of women's civic societies so excited that they have been besetging the library for all forbidden books even since.

Dell was once a newspaper reporter in Davenport bt apparently that ins't why the women want to read his book in spite of the undefiled Miss Schmed's protests.

By HELEN A. SEIGL

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 2.— The comrades in Providence are busy with the plans for a picnic on May 4th.

Under the direction of the German branch, the United German Societies of Providence held a very successful concert in one of the largest halls in that city. Up to date, the German Societies have raised over $700 for the relief of German Workers and children.

A series of bazaars have been held by the Providence Russian Women's branch for the Ruthenberg defense in the Michigan case. They have also collected $17.00 for German relief.

Bosses Applaud MacDonald

American workers who do their own thinking will not be shocked at the news that British capitalism is almost unanimous in applauding the MacDonald-Snowden budget introduced in the House of Commons on behalf of the Labor government.

This news should knock another prop from under the unthinking who have unwittingly accepted the British Labor government as a 100 per cent victory for the working class.

MacDonald's government keeps on piling up the testimony that is needed to show the great masses of workers and farmers that only thru Soviet Rule under Communist leadership can they attain to full power.

The MacDonald-Snowden budget wins the praise of "every section of the public, including the conservative strongholds, represented by the old banking institutions," says the news report. The American capitalist, H. Gordon Selfridge, owner of a big department store in London, states that the budget is not only "sound in detail but in principle," while representatives of two American banks in London "predict immediate beneficial sale of British securities abroad and improvement in the financial conditions in the kingdom."

In other words the big bosses and bankers of Great Britain admit that their position has been strengthened by the financial policy of the MacDonald government. And why not? Among the Snowden offerings to the big profiteers was the complete abolition of the corporation's profits tax, which means the loss of $51,000,000 yearly by the government treasury.

Sops were thrown to the workers, in the shape of a few reductions in food duties, by this Snowden budget, which bears the label "Socialist," since its author, Philip Snowden, has always been considered one of the most outspoken Socialists of the British Independent Labor Party. The duty was reduced on sugar, but it still remains 14 times as great as it was before the war. The duty has also been reduced on coffee, cocoa, chicory and dried fruit. But they were also cut on automobiles, foreign films and motorcycles, with which the workers are not generally acquainted. In fact, this is only pushing the British back to the prewar free trade basis, and if British profiteers are anything like the U. S. variety, as they no doubt are, reductions in tariff duties will have little effect on the actual prices of commodities.

The actual policy of the labor government toward the workers is seen in the taxes on admission to the cheaper movies. The tax on 12 cent seats in the movies and cheaper theaters has been abolished, but above that to the 18-cent seats the tax has only been reduced. Seats costing more than 18-cents will be subject to the same taxes.

This is in glaring contrast to the complete abolition of the corporation's profit tax.

The budget, therefore, makes no vital attempt to settle the housing and unemployment problems. The workers, due to low wages, will remain crowded in the same hovels, and when out of work, as one and a half millions of British workers are today, they will be continuously on the verge of starvation.

In the hour that the workers' and farmers' revolution struck Germany, when the kaiser fell, the German social-democracy proved the greatest ally of Junker capitalism. So in England. When British capitalism faced a huge unemployment army at home, and discontent in all her colonies, the MacDonald labor government has come into power to save British capitalism by betraying the cause of the working class.

The only result, in England, as in Germany, and everywhere else, will be a constant and steady drift of disillusioned workers and farmers into the ranks of the organized Communist movement.

In the words of Nicolai Lenin, in his pamphlet, "The Left Sickness of Communism," written during the early days of the Bolshevik Revolution in Russia, and years before the MacDonald government came into power:

> "The formation of the government of the Hendersons, which is continually approaching nearer, will prove that I am right, will draw the masses to my side, will hasten the political death of the Hendersons and the Snowdens, just as was the case with their like-minded brethren in Russia and in Germany."

The Snowden budget, applauded by the big employers, bankers and landlords of Great Britain, should be a big factor in driving the workers into and thus helping to build a real mass Communist Party in that country.

Coolidge may have dropped Daugherty from his cabinet. But it was the Coolidge-republican machine that elected Daugherty a Coolidge delegate from Ohio to the republican convention. The thieves certainly hang together.

Mobilizing The Liberals

The Dawes plan has been swallowed hook, line and sinker by the little coterie that claims to uphold the standard of liberalism in America. Just how approval of a plan promulgated by finance capitalists providing for the enslavement of the workers of a whole nation is consistent with the public expressions of sympathy made for the German workers and the fierce denunciation of the German exploiters is something that would require much explanation from any but a liberal group. They, however, are so anxious for the stabilization of European capitalism that they are quite willing it should be purchased by the deepest degradation of the working class.

The Nation says in its issue of April 30:

> There is some hope in the very fact that the Dawes plan depends so largely upon the financiers. They have a longer and a wider vision than the petty crew of nationalist politicians who have made such a mess of things. If the plan is to succeed the powers will, for a number of years, be turning to the international financiers for loans, and the financiers will not attempt to float the huge credits required unless they are convinced that the proposed system is economically sound. What they call "economic soundness" may mean a new kind of industrial slavery, but it is at least better than an era of new wars.

The endorsement of the Dawes-Morgan scheme by the most humanitarian group among the American bourgeoisie is proof that the working class of America is confronted with the most gigantic imperialist conspiracy yet entered into by its rulers. Gone are the liberal insistences that allied and German rulers alike were guilty of fomenting the world war and now in evidence is the supine obedience to the wishes of the finance-capitalists that was the outstanding feature of the period prefacing the entry of America into that struggle.

The Communist press alone in America is raising its voice in protest against this monstrous proposal to guarantee the loans made by the House of Morgan with the power of the national government.

It is noticeable that the liberal press is silent upon this phase of the question altho it is the basis for the whole scheme.

"The Dawes plan," says The Nation, "is at least better than an era of new wars." This is not only slipshod but vicious reasoning, leaving out of consideration altogether the atrocious nature of the plan so far as it effects the German working class. The Nation knows enough of the causes of our entry into the last war to honestly say that just such loans as are now proposed caused our participation.

In accepting the Dawes proposal The Nation, therefore, is committing itself to the new war that will, unless capitalism is overthrown before, bring on another world struggle with the House of Morgan attempting to drive the working class of this nation into the trenches against the working class of Germany and other European nations to which loans have been made.

All Cut and Dried

Everything is being beautifully cut and tried for the republican national convention at Cleveland. Cal Coolidge is already going ahead as if he had the nomination stuck away in his pocket. William M. Butler, the New England millionaire, and C. Bascom Slemp, of Virginia, expert dispenser of political patronage, are to be in charge of the steam roller.

It is very evident that the flattening out of all opposition will not be a very strenuous job. Coolidge now has 825 delegates pledged. All he needs is 556 votes to insure his nomination. So he has a walkaway.

Butler and Slemp will not have the difficult task that Penrose and Smoot had at the 1912 republican convention in Chicago, when "Teddy" Roosevelt carried out his split.

But this is not because discontent is absent among the millions of workers and farmers who voted for Harding on the republican ticket in 1920. It is because these workers and farmers have given up hope of getting anything from the republican party.

Arthur Brisbane, editorial writer of the Hearst papers, for instance, laments that in the presidential primaries, in the shoe factory town of Haverhill, Mass., only 693 men and 121 women, took the trouble of voting out of 17,000 registered voters. More than 16,000 did not vote at all.

This is the story of the old party presidential primaries everywhere. It is an indication that the Coolidge steam roller may triumph at the Cleveland convention of the republican party. But the Slemps and the Butlers will find that they have won an empty victory. They will discover that while they have been oiling up their machine, that the masses have been busy deserting to the standards of the mass, class National Farmer-Labor Party. Everything may be cut and dried at Cleveland. So much the better. It will be easier for the workers and farmers, at St. Paul, June 17th, to put the republican party, as well as the democratic, in cold storage, and there let them rot. Victories in the old party nominating conventions this year mean as little as hollow triumphs in the old party primaries.

The presidential campaign jokesters are at work, the first act being a little fun at the expense of the candidacy of William Gibbs McAdoo, the $250,000.00 oil baby. They are trying to find out under what conditions "McAdoo'll Do" or whether the voters will make it "McAdieu." Even with this added attraction, however, we do not believe the old party circus will win an audience of any size among the workers and farmers who are busy planning for their own class party.

FRENCH MILITARISTS AND GERMAN CAPITALISTS IN UNITED FRONT

By ANISE

ESSEN, Germany, April 14 (By Mail).—The three-cornered fight still drags its weary way along in the Ruhr between the French, the Big Business Interests of Germany and the German workers. It is a confused fight, but so far the German workers are having very much the worst of it. Under the pressure of patriotic feeling, they combined with their bosses to fight the French, and now the beaten bosses have combined with the French against them. Reparations, as far as may be, are to come out of the hide of the miners and steel workers of the Ruhr.

In the past six years, they have sunk down and down. Not only are wages far below pre-war, while prices are fifty percent above pre-war prices. Not only are there a million unemployed in this small concentrated region, only a couple of hours travel north and south and east and west. But, step by step, they have lost all the gains achieved with their blood in the revolution.

It is easy to forget that there was a revolution,—of sorts—in Germany. I forgot it all the time, for nowhere in the world is exploitation of workers more raw than in Germany now. Nowhere are they expected to live on such starvation wages. From ten to twelve cents an hour is the wage for a skilled worker of the highest class in the steel mills, and in almost every works there is much part time work, due to disorganization of transport under French attempted management. Krupps, with their old traditions of paternal care for workers, have been parcelling out twenty-four hours a week to single men and thirty hours to men with families, giving thus a wage somewhere between two and three and a half dollars a week.

Yet with all this surplus of men, they are lengthening the hours of daily labor. "They have established almost every length of working day except eights," said a member of the factory council in one of the big plants, to me bitterly. "They have seven and a half, and nine and ten,—everything but eight. They are out to break in principle the eight-hour day."

While I was standing in the office of another Factory Council, written notice was brought in from the factory management that henceforth any worker wishing to consult the factory council, must first obtain leave of absence from his foreman. The secretary of the Factory Council turned to me: "Step by step they have taken away all our power" he said. "Our workers' council is nothing but a shell."

Yet he could look back to the thrill of the days when there was a Red Army in the Ruhr, and the miners seized and nationalized the mines, appointing a "Commission of Nine" delegated from local trades councils and mine committees, to take over the whole of the Westfalian Coal Industry and manage it in trust for the state. The Communists led the way, but the local Majority Socialists also took part in it, urged on by the spirit of the workers towards a new Germany. That was in 1919—the pale, disillusioned secretary of the Factory Committee in a big establishment, whose name I shall not mention because it might affect his job, told me with a tired smile that "those were good days." The managers came to work or remained away at the permission of the workers' committees. The output of coal rose steadily.

But the coalition government of Socialists, Catholics and Democrats sitting in Berlin, declared themselves in favor of nationalization by their voices, but announced in the same breath that the act of the Ruhr miners was an act of war. They sent an army to take control, and the miners gave in to the will of their own Socialist representative in the Reichstag, trusting them to bring nationalization of mines in due and orderly fashion.

A year later they were striking again,—not now for nationalization, but to maintain the six-hour day underground. And even while the strike breaking corps and the armies, sent by the Socialist government, was advocating against them, the same Socialist government was thrown out of Berlin by the Kapp Putsch. The loyal miners of the Ruhr rose at their call and joined a general strike to save Ebert, Scheideman and Noske. And within a fortnight, the Socialist leaders, back in their seats thru the uprising of the workers, sent the same royalist troops who had just been fighting against them, to put down the "red rebels" in the Ruhr. So a democratic Socialist government was saved to Germany, but the most active, able men of the Ruhr who helped save it, were slaughtered by it like sheep.

When the French advanced into the Ruhr and the workers laid down tools, they played into the hands of German Big Business thru their patriotic feelings. They realize this now, very bitterly. "It was not that we thought a German capitalist any better than a French one," many of them said to me, "but we thought we could control our conditions better under our own German labor laws and with the protection of our trade unions." It was a hard situation. They struck against the insolence of invading armies; they carried on the greatest general strike known in history in the most complicated industrial area of the world. But all its result was to give German Big Business a superb weapon to use in making terms with the French.

Even with this weapon, they did not make very good terms. The invading armies were too strong for them. They agreed in the end to produce one-fifth of their coal free of charge for the French, to be charged against reparations, and to pay a tax of eight francs a ton on the remainder. It is a tax under which the Ruhr can barely operate; the German industrialists declare, and perhaps truly, that it cannot keep on operating under this tax. Some of the mines are losing money, they say, and others are only getting by because of the nine months of safety and extension work put in during the "passive resistance," and paid for by the German people.

But Big Business in the Ruhr openly exults over one good result of the French pressure. It has abolished the eight-hour day. It gives them the threat of foreign bayonets behind their dealings with their workers. It gives them a vast reservoir of unemployed, hungry enough to break any strike. The catastrophic fall of the mark, which was directly caused by the Ruhr War, in its drain on the treasury of the German Government, has broken the trade union treasuries and the sick benefit funds and the the old age pensions of the workers. They have nothing left; they are down to potatoes and margarine; and watching them are a million unemployed who haven't even those potatoes.

That's the situation in the Ruhr today. I talked with representatives of Big Business who were cheerfully declaring that "at least the Ruhr War did one thing. It smashed the nonsense about the eight-hour day and workers' committees." I talked to representatives of the French, who politely declared: "All that we ask is that they shall pay the coal tax that they owe us on reparations; it is nothing to us whether they collect the costs from the German Government, or pay it themselves, or get it out of the German workers. That is a matter of German internal policies."

I went into German miners' homes where they were sleeping in the corner on straw under a ragged quilt. And these were not Russian peasants, but Germans, famed for generations of thrifty housekeeping and well arranged homes. I went thru one of the big dormitories—maintained by Krupps, with its roof garden, library, club rooms—all solid in enduring stone. And an irrespressible youth stuck his shoulders over the partition of his cell-like bedroom, crying: "Long live the unemployed . . ." He was staying in bed thru the afternoon to keep down his hunger, for he had nothing to eat.

I went into office after office of sick pensions, unemployment pensions, insurance of all kinds, and heard the sickening story repeated of how they were ruined by law,—the law that required them to place their savings in municipal bonds and government loans, and that bankrupted, the decent honest people who obeyed it, while the men who invested in dollars and raw materials, got rich.

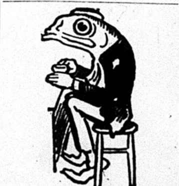
I heard the secretary of the Employers' Association in the biggest steel center saying: "The workers have become sensible; they see they must work ten hours . . . ." And I heard workers' representatives say: "Not at any time has there been such hate as now against the bosses. We know that we have been betrayed. They told us to strike to save our eight-hour day and our German working conditions. Now they have made terms with the French to kill all the gains of the revolution. If they refuse to sign the next contract with the French,—we will not do another passive resistance job for them. We will run the mines for the French, or for anyone who pays us wages. Until. . . ."

But that "until" is a precarious hope. It means until they seize the mines again with a Red army for a Soviet Germany. This might have been done easily once, if they could have held the mines when they first took them, but they surrendered them again to a German government too feeble to know its own mind. A government which gave them back to their private owners and then bankrupted the entire German nation to keep them for those owners against the French.

Revolution now in the Ruhr seems impossible, until the French workers are ready also. And that may be a long, long time. And yet revolutions make their own laws, and I may be too pessimistic. It was well known last autumn that the Ruhr was looked upon as a powder-magazine, which both the French invaders and the German Big Business interests were afraid to see explode.

Meantime, it is a time of attribution and hunger. The one bright spot I saw in Essen was at the Youths' Hostel, where the International Workers' Relief is feeding a few hundred cheerful youngsters from the nearby free schools. There is also a much larger Quacker Relief going on, which is feeding over one hundred thousand Ruhr children with funds from America; but I did not happen to be present at the schools where its work was done. The German relief organizations are themselves feeding large numbers of adults and children, especially among the unemployed.

Even in relief there are class lines. Not in the American relief; that is administered impartially thru the schools. But the German relief societies have drawn most of their contributions from timid capitalists of the Ruhr itself, who wish to avoid the smashing of stores and offices which took place frequently last autumn. They show a tendency to feed "good ones," especially those who have church connections and who come properly recommended; and to avoid the families of strikers. I heard many complaints of this, and of the difficulties put in the way of the Workers' International Relief in their attempts to get dining room space and kettles. But these are merely very small incidents of the class struggle that still goes on, tho with banked fires, in the Ruhr.



The Poor Fish says he is not in favor of May Day as a workers' holiday because there is always so much trouble everywhere on that date.

Views of Our Readers

To the DAILY WORKER: Dear Comrade: Before they stop our daily, I hope you can dope out and publish the facts, as I have, re, "The cause of the Teapot Dome investigation."

It began with your first editorial on page 6, April 18th inst. edition. Also your third editorial, page 6, of the 17th inst.

It's as clear as sunshine to me, that affair was brought out at a moment figured out years ago by the bunch, and all along understood by Daugherty et al., Coolidge, wherein for the panning they got in the "expose," they were to be allowed the privilege of robbing everyone and everything during their first term in office, and that they will be well taken care of again when after having put over the Dawes Commission Program, while we were hypnotized by the Teapot Dome affair.

The two incidents are connected in a way that, whether premeditated or not is enabling them to rejuvenate the Kaisers perfected machine, to pay the war debts including our own, which if it does, workers all over the "allied" countries will either have to work faster and more efficiently, also cheaper than Germany can, or sit back and starve, while Germany works. In the first instance we also will have to meet Russian, Japanese, Chinese and German wages and living conditions and go them one point lower, or, in the second case starve (or fight?). We scarcely expect to meet either of the first two conditions, consequently, "must" circumvent, in some manner both. Perhaps the means will suggest itself to you? If so, you can understand why Daugherty is still a friend of Mr. Coolidge who knows they will have use for him soon again? Of course it is needless for me to say that you realize the Dawes agreement completes ultimately the League of Nations plan. Regardless of how it came about, as it furnishes us, France, England, Italy, Belgium and the present German government all a common interest in seeing to it that no one shall interfere with the German machines working to the limit and the rest of us taking our medicine? A perfect international capitalistic arrangement with every nation united "militaristically" to enforce their League idea. For God's sake get behind this idea. Get it to as many sources of dissemination as possible and do it now. Else, I opine even the start of the June 17th convention will be forestalled for reasons of national safety.

Yours in spirit,
TOM MARX.

Wants "Constantine" Published.

To the DAILY WORKER: Wishing to offer my opinion as to what story to publish next in the DAILY WORKER, I think "Constantine and the Beginning of Christianity" by Tichenor is a nice little booklet. It will help to disperse many superstitions of the workers' minds. The booklet is edited by Haldeman-Julius Co., Girard, Kan.

—D. K. MINTILOGLI.

P. S. Not very long ago a comrade from Pullman, Ill., suggested that the DAILY WORKER should have "a question and answer" column. What about it? I think this, too, is a mighty good idea.

To the DAILY WORKER: What do the workers have to say about those yellow socialist humbugs riding in and out of the Coliseum in the Yellow scab taxis on May Day? These socialist sympathizers only stand in the way of a real Workers' and Farmers' government.

Fraternally, M. Frimel.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

Judging from the reception th Dawes plan has received from Ameri can liberals and alleged progressive we would not be surprised to see hi name mentioned in liberal publica tions like the Nation as a likely run ning mate for Senator Robert LaFol lette, on an independent ticket, pro vided the Wisconsin senator make up his mind that the irregular pa tures are greener and sweeter an healthier for his political constitutio than the fodder to be secured regu larly in the G. O. P. ideal farm. The Nation gloats over the Dawes pla and with the approval of the Berli Vorwaerts and the British Labor Par ty we expect the Socialist Party to give its backing—such as it is. Mor gan has seen worse days.

American liberals held a convention in Washington a few days ago and decided to send a message to the "people" of Europe, following the tactics so successfully used by the late Woodrow Wilson in destroying the morale of the Kaiser's subjects in the late war. Elections are taking place very soon in France and Germany and it is expressed that liberals will b victorious in the electoral struggles in Europe; that France and Germany will follow the example of England and give a pseudo-labor liberal party an opportunity to straddle the fence for a while and keep the capitalist robbers from quarreling over the loot.

The statement is almost as incoherent as the press interview given by Harry K. Thaw after his recent acquittal on the charge of insanity. It says the German people have adhered to the principle of political democracy since 1917. What about the dictatorship of Von Seecht and the murder and imprisonment of thousands of radical workers while the Hittlers and Ludendorfs who took up arms against the Reich are let off with a polite slap on the wrist. But perhaps capitalist dictatorship as long as it wears the fig leaf of Republicanism is not immoral in the eyes of liberalism! The statement goes on to say that it fears the German people may at this critical juncture "turn away from liberal and enlightened leadership." This is positively insulting. The leadership of Stressman, the monarchist, Ebert, the renegade saddler whose hands are red with the blood of Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg and the German Morgans of industry who hold the economic life of that country in the hollow of their hand. If that be liberal leadership three cheers for Coolidge and his gang.

The Mellon tax bill may have easier sledding now that Philip Snowden, Chancellor of His Majesty's Exchequer, has brought in a bill that cuts the shackles off British Big Business and gives even the long neglected workers cheaper sugar, tea, and abolishes the tax on his nine penny movie seat. Snowden was considered one of the most extreme socialists in the Independent Labor Party. When the MacDonald government was allowed to take office by the liberals and big business, a small section of the British ruling class was in terror, but after the new cabinet had a chat with the King, their evil forebodings were dropped. They all kissed the King's lower extremities, and even John Wheatley the Catholic radical from Glasgow almost crushed the Royal knuckles, his handshake was so hearty.

Even at that, after they left, the King rubbed his hand across Adam's apple, to see if his windpipe was alright, having in mind the disappearance of his Royal Cousin, Nicky of Russia, after the Bolsheviks came into power. Such things don't happen in England. The socialists like their King nice and fat. They wear their knee creeches nifty. They fight for the honor of being appointed Pot Boy to His Majesty, an old and honored office and they delight in bringing in budgets that prove the Labor Party (Socialist) is not a class party but a party for all the people, except the working class. To favor the latter would be rather indelicate. The workers must show a spirit of generosity and thus eliminate class rancor and class war.

The Chicago Tribune represents Ramsay MacDonald, the socialist, coming to the aid of British business, which is tied to a stake by a gang of scalp hunting tax inflicting Indians. The Indians run and Mac cuts the bonds and business beams like a semi-intoxicated Democrat. In the other hand American business is tied to the stake while the American Indians tickle him on the ribs with vicious tomahawks, with the Congressional Tax Relief Expedition, represented by a Republican on an elephant and a Democrat on a jackass dickering in the offing, much to the discomfort of Uncle Sam, whose jugular vein at any moment may feel the sharp edge of an Indian blade. The Chicago Daily News is more than happy over Snowden's budget. Winding up a eulogy, that would tax the enthusiasm of James Oneal, it says "The results of the application of these sterling qualities cannot fail to be beneficial to the people at large." That's that.

"The idea becomes power when it penetrates the masses."

What the World Thought of Lenin -

By ALEXANDER TRACHTENBERG.

THE way Soviet Russia paid tribute to the memory of Lenin during the week his body lay in the Moscow House of the Unions needs no recapitulation. Even the capitalist press was forced to print column long cables giving accounts of the mourning by the Russian masses over the loss of their great leader. The damage which will be paid to his spiritual heritage in the years to come will be just as profound and devoted as was the respect and love shown to the dead teacher during the never-to-be-forgotten last week in January. In reading the news from all parts of Russia, one cannot but feel that tens of millions of workers and peasants have made a place in their hearts for Lenin's memory, which they will carry with them until their dying days.

It is necessary to review the way the world's revolutionary workers organized in or in sympathy with the Communist movement receive the news of the death of their great teacher and leader. The most illustrious pupil of Marx, Lenin by his life and work, has left a heritage which will forever remain a source of enlightment and inspiration to the disinherited thruout the world.

FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS ACT.

The governments of the various countries which have diplomatic or trade relations with Russia have all expressed their condolences upon Lenin's death. Premiers or foreign ministers of these governments sent official communications to the Commissariat of Foreign Affairs. According to reports in the Russian press, 21 different countries have officially expressed their condolences to the Russian government. These countries include England, Germany, Italy, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, Turkey, Persia, Afghanistan, China, Mongolia, Japan, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Poland, Finland, Lithuania, Esthonia, Latvia, Mexico and Chile.

The official expressions of grief over Lenin's death by the various governments did not prevent some of those governments from prohibiting memorial meetings for the same man. While President Ebert wrote to Kalinin that "the German people express their sorrow to the Russian people over the loss of their teacher and leader," and that "the significance of Lenin and his influence upon the fortunes of the Russian people and the whole world was so great that a true revelation could be given only by future generations," meetings where similar sentiments were being expressed were dispersed by the police in Dresden, Hamburg, Bremen, and other German cities. The fate of Lenin memorial meetings in Poland, Latvia, and Lithuania was not better notwithstanding the warm sympathy tendered by these countries to the Soviet Government. Proper diplomatic usage required the dispatch to Russia of messages of condolences upon Lenin's death, but his name could not be mentioned sympathetically without invoking the wrath of the governments at home.

The conservative and liberal capitalist press thruout the world gave much space to news from Russia after Lenin's death. It has wasted so much space on rumors about his death during the past six years that it was willing to open its pages wide now that Lenin was really dead. What has occurred in Russia during that memorable week in January was so spontaneous and impressive that it could not be ignored. Besides the avalanche of news from Russia, much space was devoted to editorial comment upon Lenin's life and work as well as upon the way the Russian people were paying tribute to the memory of its dead leader. While disagreement was exhibited regarding Lenin the man and his aims, unanimity was reached upon how well he built, for none ventured to question the strength of the Soviet Government, which he left as a heritage to the Russian people people and the world.

EASTERN PEOPLE MOURN LOSS.

Lenin has given much of his attention to the problems of the East. His work in behalf of the national minorities within the confines of the Soviet Union has become known among the people of Asia. His death was received with genuine sorrow by the millions who considered him the emancipator of subject peoples.

In India the nationalist press called attention to Lenin's services in the interest of the Eastern peoples. The "Bombay Chronicle" remarked that "Lenin's name will live longer than the names of his opponents."

The entire PERSIAN cabinet attended the memorial services held at the Russian embassy in Tekeran. There was also present a large delegation representing different Persian organizations. The Mesopotamian leader, Halesi, turning to Lenin's portrait during his address remarked: "The East which you have awakened is ready for the final struggle. It is only waiting for the proper moment to bring about the dream of your life —the unification of all Eastern peoples; the establishment of the right of self determination for all peoples, no matter how small they may be."

The Turkish National Assembly at Angora devoted a special session to a review of Lenin's life and work. When a Deputy referred to Lenin as the leader of the Russian revolution, other deputies suggested the term of "leader of the world revolution", which the speaker accepted as a correction. Lenin's aid and encouragement to the Turkish people in their struggle for national independence was particularly lauded by the different speakers. The Turkish press devoted much space to Lenin. The "Enigun" wrote that the death of Lenin was not only a loss to Russia, but also to Turkey. The "Ikdam" declared Lenin one of the greatest men of the world. "Marx was for Lenin what the Koran is to the orthodox believers," opined this journal.

The KOREAN Assembly of People's Representatives adopted a resolution expressing "its great sorrow on the death of the world leader Lenin. The Korean people, like other subject peoples, lost in him their staunchest defender. We are certain that the work of the emancipation of mankind which Lenin began will be carried to a successful conclusion".

The MONGOLIAN foreign minister who is also Chairman of the Peoples' Party, wrote: "the death of Lenin is not only a heavy loss to the working masses, but also to the small nations of the world".

THE CHINESE DEEPLY MOVED.

Public memorial meetings were held in CHINA. Representatives of the various political parties and public groups visited the Russian plenipotentiary Karachan to express their condolences. The Chinese press commented profusely upon Lenin's life and work. The "Tchen-Pao" wrote: "Lenin is dead, but his soul lives in the Soviet order. The whole world is shocked by his death, but none are as grief-stricken as the weak and subject peoples. Our only hope and solace is that the subject peoples will follow in Lenin's footsteps and will continue the struggle for their liberation". The "Tchen-Ben" wrote: "Peoples call many heroes, but really, few deserve that appelation. Lenin was the hero who enjoyed universal love. Lenin was the bright star of humanity, and can be compared to Sakia-Muni and Christ. The heavens are merciless. He went out from our world, but his ideas will live forever. The "Pekin Evening World" declared that the "news of Lenin's death cannot be read without heartache. Lenin was a genius who knew not only how to destroy, but also how to build. China needs its own Lenin, i. e., a man with an eye for the future; a man with an iron will who could lead his people out of chaos. Lenin is no more, but what he has created will live forever. The "Pekin Leader" considered Lenin as "the most remarkable man of the twentieth century". The "Daily News" said that "under the leadership of Lenin, Russia passed from chaos of destruction to the road of rehabilitation. Lenin will live in the future as a man who has dedicated his genius and his whole life to the work for the good of mankind".

THE SOCIALISTS ALSO LAMENT.

The Social-Democratic leaders who joined the mourning procession of the revolutionary workers remembered only in part the old Roman adage to speak of the dead either nothing, or good. Realizing the esteem and love which Lenin enjoyed even among the Social-Democratic masses, the leaders felt the need of praising his devotion to the cause of the proletariat, not forgetting, however, to refer to "his mistakes" as well.

Friedrich Adler, who once thundered against the Social-Democracy of the Second International and is now doing business under that decrepit firm, sent the following message of condolence to Zinoviev in the name of the Second International: "Deeply shocked by the untimely death of Lenin. We are deeply moved in this tragic moment to tell the workers affiliated with the Communist International that, notwithstanding our differences concerning the roads the working class must traverse, we are certain that Lenin traveled his way out of deep conviction, pure heart, and moved by deep devotion to the great cause of the workers of all countries".

Karl Kautsky thought that Lenin was poor on international affairs, but rather well-acquainted with Russian conditions. One wonders that Kautski gave the man who called him renegade, as much credit for knowing the country which he turned into a battle ground for Socialism. Kautsky is forgiving and declares: "Our differences should not blind us to acknowledge the greatness of the dead. He was a collosal figure very few of whom can be found in the world history".

The German Social-Democratic organ the Berlin "Vorwaerts" thought, of course, that Lenin was not a Marxist, but believed that he acted "according to his honest convictions and, guided by disinterested motives, has devoted his life to the struggle for Socialism. According to the "Vorwaerts", the "Russian revolution was a peasant revolution, but Lenin covered it with proletarian ideology to secure the support of the proletariat". That the reverse was the case, was Lenin's contention, but, then, he was not a Marxist of the Social-Democratic brand.

The SWISS Social-Democratic organ, The Berne "Tagwacht" does not share the opinion of its Berlin contemporary regarding Lenin's failure". Under the title, "Lenin and Frogs", the "Tagwacht" writes: "The Berlin Vorwaerts believes that Lenin reached other results than what he set out to accomplish. The great work of Lenin is his destruction of the monarchy. If Germany had travelled the same road Rosa Luxemburg, Karl Liebknecht, Haase, Eisner would be alive today and the Russian workers, whom the German proletariat were able to aid only two years ago, would not be helping the starving German workers today. But the 'Vorwaerts' does not care to discuss the results achieved by Russia. We do not doubt that the Russian revolution lives in the hearts of the workers thruout the world". The declaration of the Executive Committee of the Swiss Social-Democratic party says among other things: "We recognize the historic greatness of Lenin, his character of an unbending revolutionist and his imperishable significance as a fighter against the rule of imperialists. Before his memory we, too, lower our banners".

Neither does Paul Levi, a Social-Democratic member of the recently dissolved Reichstag agree with his official party organ. "The collosal work of Lenin," writes Levi, "will be realized only then when it will show its political and economic influence, not only in Russia, but in Europe and then the rest of the world. While there is still a subject and suffering proletariat in the world, the souls of all will be turned with awe to the first great experiment of liberation of the proletariat and the man who gave it his name".

The Austrian Social-Democratic organ, the Vienna "Arbeiter-Zeitung", after comparing Lenin with Robespier and Cromwell, writes: "We shall not forget his work in 1917 which gave a great impetus to the labor movement the world over. We cannot overlook the fact that the state, which he has created in the midst of incomparable hardships, remains revolutionary and continues to serve as a revolutionary factor amidst the chaos of the capitalist world".

Otto Bauer, leader of the Austrian Social-Democracy and probably the best post-Kautskian Social-Democratic theoretician, says "me to" in discussing the significance of the Russian revolution and Lenin's role in it. Bauer develops the theory that altho there are differences (sic) between the Communists and the Socialists, the Russian revolution should be looked upon as the common achievement of both sections of the labor movement, just as the French revolution was the work of Danton, Marat, Robespierre, who fought among themselves. "Time will come," Bauer writes, "when our children will look upon the great revolution of our time as the accomplishment of all of us, notwithstanding the differences which divide the Communists and revolutionary (?) Social-Democrats. In the spirit of this community, we too, bow before the memory of the immortal leader". The Austrian Social-Democrats like to distinguish themselves from their German brothers and refer to themselves as revolutionary Social-Democrats. Perhaps, that is why Bauer, in contradistinction to his German comrades in the Second International, does not share the latter's opinion about the Russian revolution having been an agrarian revolution with proletarian trimmings. Bauer writes "we, too, were his (Lenin's) pupils. The hegemony of the proletariat over the peasantry (as developed in the Russian revolution)—this is the only road to power. This Lenin taught us".

"I NEVER SAW THE GENTLEMAN"

In answer to an invitation of the Moscow "Isvestia" to send a message concerning Lenin, Arthur Henderson secretary of the British Labor Party and member of the MacDonald Cabinet authorized the following reply thru his secretary: "The Minister for Home Affairs asked me to reply to you that since he never came in contact with Lenin, he cannot, much to his sorrow, comply with your request". The "Socialist" Minister Henderson had no opinions on Lenin and his work, since he has never met him As he had never said hello to Marx either, he probably would have nothing to say regarding the founder of scientific Socialism of which he is supposed to be a follower. Henderson's statement is, indeed, the prize statement of all issued by public men regarding Lenin.

Not being a member of the labor government, G. B. Shaw felt more free to express a conviction that "a monument should be erected to Lenin in London as there was to Washington, tho Lenin was treated to more calumny than Washington in his time in Great Britain."

The Daily Herald, the official organ of the Labor Party, writes: "Lenin rises in history as a giant compared to all his contemporaries. His greatness consisted in the combination of iron will with deep learning and wonderful sense of reality. Among all historical figures he stands out the greatest leader of the labor movement and generally one of the greatest leaders of peoples in all history. The mourning which has overtaken Russia is not over the Chairman of the Council of Commissars but over Illyitch, friend of the laboring masses, a mourning over a man who wanted to conquer the world not for himself but for them".

The I. Y. P. "New Leader", MacDonald's party paper, writes about the revolution: "When humanity will quietly review the work of Lenin it will see in the victory of a small group of disciplined enthusiasts in a whole empire a monument to human will, which will tower over all our accomplishments". And about Lenin—"We are pygmies in comparison with him".

The French Socialist organ, "Populaire" wrote on Lenin's death: "We can only bow our heads before the remains of a man who has played the most important role in the history of international Socialism since Marx and Jaures. Lenin was a great statesman and theoretician. He will remain in history as the incarnation of the Russian revolution. He will be passionately discussed and interpreted. Lenin leaves this world at a time when the experiment which he began has not yet produced final results". Amidst the reverence which the revolutionary French workers exhibited upon the receipt of news of Lenin's death, the French Socialists had to join the mourning procession.

The Italian Socialist "Avanti", at present controlled by the most reformist Socialists, was forced to pay tribute to the memory of the great revolutionary leader knowing the sorrow which the masses of the Italian workers have experienced upon learning of Lenin's death. The "Avanti" writes: "The death of Lenin— a heavy loss for Russia and a heavy loss of the international proletariat. The Russian proletariat lost a great leader who could combine theory and practice and always find a way out in the most adverse conditions and in the interest of the proletariat". The present leaders of the Italian Socialist party, Toratti, and Modigliani are not of that caliber. They have meekly allowed the destruction of the Italian labor movement by the black shirted Fascisti.

The Swedish Socialist leader Hjalmar Branting wrote in the "Sozialdemokraten", "Lenin has accomplished a great historic feat, clearing with a merciless struggle his land from everything old. The developments showed that Lenin understood his people better than anyone else and has evaluated the conditions in Russia better than the Mensheviks." This opinion does not prevent Branting from accepting from his comrade in the Second International, the Menshevik Abramovich, the claim that the Russian revolution was carried out in Russia by the Bolsheviks with little or no understanding of Russian conditions and against the interests of the Russian workers. While praising Lenin's work in behalf of the Russian people, Branting, as a leading member of the Council of the League of Nations, has been supporting various counter-revolutionary plots which were engineered by the League of Nations against Russia.

The Old S. P. Muddle.

And the American Socialist Party must not be overlooked in this review. As of old it is in chaotic condition regarding policies and public utterances. One would think since only few people are left in the Socialist Party they would reach a common agreement regarding the place of Lenin in the labor movement. Instead of that we have Eugene Debs issuing a warm statement of condolence, and Julius Gerber, writing in the New York "New Leader" that Lenin was "a most despotic ruler any nation ever had," and that "at his death capitalism was more promising in Russia than even under the Czar." The New York Socialists held a Lenin memorial meeting in the Rand Hotel, while the Pennsylvania State Socialist convention at Harrisburg voted to table a resolution of condolence on Lenin's death.

Leninism—the True Weapon.

Can one really speak of Lenin and the American Socialist Party at the same time Yes, because both are dead. But while Lenin is only dead in body, the Socialist Party is dead both in body and spirit. A visit to 35 Eastern cities during my present lecture trip, brought home to me the fact that the Socialist Party, which had previously had strong organizations in these cities, has absolutely disappeared from the political arena. Here and there a few stray old members still cling to the old firm as a habit. The only functioning proletarian elements working for Socialism in this country are those in the Communist Workers Party. It is these militants in the labor movement who have paid true homage to their great leader and teacher Lenin. Together with the French Communist organ "L'Humanite" the American Communists declare: "Lenin's name, memory, and example will remain as lights burning in the dark which will never go out. With his name on their lips and his image in their hearts, the workers of the world will continue the struggle with the methods which he has pointed out until the final accomplishment of their ultimate aim — the estanlishment of a free workers society."

AMERICAN LABOR'S YEAR BOOK.

(Federated Press Book Review.)

By SCOTT NEARING.

American labor has a good right to be proud of the current issue of the American Labor Year Book, 1923-1924, published by the labor research department of the Rand school. On four previous occasions this publication has appeared, but the fifth volume is larger and far more complete than any of its predecessors.

For one thing, the whole book has been written by the research staff, Solon De Leon, director, and Nathan Fine, associate, who have abandoned the policy of compiling articles by experts in different fields. The present volume contains an extensive chapter on Industrial and Social Conditions, Trade Union Organization, Labor Disputes, Labor Politics, Labor Legislation, Workers' Education, Labor Banking, Co-operation, and similar topics. In addition it has three extensive sections dealing with all the internationals on the trade union and political field, the labor struggle in all the important countries of the world, and co-operation.

The usefulness of the book is greatly increased by its list of labor conventions for 1924, its diary of the principal events of the international labor movement in 1923, and a very complete International Labor Directory, covering labor unions, labor and socialist political organizations, and the labor and radical press.

Numerous well chosen tables of figures are used, with excellent effect to illustrate the outstanding events of American labor history during the past two years, while the data concerning the international labor movement is the only available material in convenient book form in America, and is subdivided by country. The volume contains the convention and other decisions and activities of the constituent bodies of the A. F. of L., the Independent organizations and the Trade Union Educational league. There are the platforms and attitudes of all the radical political parties in the United States, workers' education groups, and a review of the principal strikes that have occurred during the past two years.

The fifth volume of the American Labor Year Book, 1923-24, should find a place on the reference shelf of every editor, librarian, teacher and lecturer who is asked for material regarding the labor movement. It also furnishes a mass of information to the active propagandist for a new social order.

American Labor Year Book, Vol. 5, 1923-24, published by the Labor Research Department, Rand School of Social Science, 7 East 15th Street, New York. $3; postage 15c.

CO-OPERATIVE REFERENCE BOOK

The People's Year Book for 1924 contains enormous information in short space on the co-operative movement of the world, with special emphasis on Great Britain, where it is most firmly rooted. In addition the book is a storehouse of miscellaneous statistics on cost of living, trade public finance, and reviews of music art, the drama, and literature. The British Co-operative Wholesale society is the publisher.

The co-operators who have published the People's Year Book successfully combine a comprehensive review in a compact yet attractive form. The book correlates the co-operative activities in the various countries with those of the trade union and progressive political action. From an American point of view a shortcoming of the book is the brevity of its review of our co-operative movement.

Co-oporative society officers will want a copy to keep in touch with their brothers around the world; co-operative store managers will want a copy to compare their achievements with the stores run by other countries. Public libraries cannot pass over the only reference book on a world movement that represents more than 30,000,000 organized consumers.

The All-American Co-operative commission is distributing the People's Year Book for 1924. Send your order with $1 by check or money order to the commission at 806 B. of L. E. Building, Cleveland, Ohio, and you will get the Year Book, postpaid.

Three Leaders of Men,---Wilson, Gandhi and Lenin

By EVELYN ROY.

Three figures appeared upon the world's stage during the troubled period of the war and after, who will go down in history as three leaders of the greatest mass-movements of our times. They are Woodrow Wilson, the American; Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi, the Indian, and Vladimir Ulianov (Nicolai Lenin), the Russian. The first reached the zenith of his glory in 1918-19; the second caught the public ear as leader of the Indian movement for emancipation that reached its height from 1919-1922; the third retained the center of the world's stage from November, 1917 to the day of his death, January 21st, 1924. Wodrow Wilson died in an obscurity which a semi-state burial and public condolances were ineffectual to remedy. "Mahatma" Gandhi was released from prison by odd coincidence, on the day of his American contemporary's death, a sudden illness and operation which almost resulted in his own demise being responsible for his sudden release. The great Russian breathed his last week before Wilson. Thus the three names that had filled the press of the world in their heydey, again leaped into prominence and contiguity.

A Striking Fact.

It is a striking fact to arrest the attention of the observer, that the three largest countries of the warld produced each a leader unique after its own kind, to point a solution to the catastrophic times thru which our generation is passing. India, the country of an immeasurable past; America, the country of today, and Russia, the land of future promise, sent forth three prophets. Wilson has been most aptly characterized as "the last prophet of the bourgeoisie; Gandhi may be epitomized as the apostle of the petty bourgeoisie, and Lenin will go down in history as the leader of the revolutionary proletariat.

Men of such differing creeds must of necessity differ widely from each other, not in word alone but in deed. Such is the case. Wilson's claim to immortality is based upon his war slogans, his "Fourteen Points," and formulation of the idea of the "League of Nations." Gandhi's cry for "Swaraj," to be achieved by Non-violent Non-cooperation based upon suffering, sacrifice and soul-force, was meant to be applied not alone to India, but on an international scale as well. The goal of Nicolai Lenin was the International Social Revolution, which would overthrow the capitalist system with all its inherent evils, and replace it by a new society founded upon the rights of the working-class to the full product of its labor.

The League.

These three goals are as different as the men who formulated them, and as the means which they proposed to bring them into being. The League of Nations, both in its original idea and in actuality, is grounded on the status quo of industrial civilization. Its modus operandi is arbitration and compromise with the existing order. Nothing to be fundamentally altered; classes and nations, free and subject, to remain in a perpetual state of suspended hospitality, subject to the final arbitrament of the League itself, so constructed as to prohibit any revolutionary change from below. The League of Nations has well been called the "Holy Alliance of the 20th Century." Like its predecessor, it is concerned mainly in perpetuating the existing system under the guise of humanitarianism and Christarianism and Christian brotherhood. It is the apotheosis of bourgeois culture and bourgeois liberalism. If it has remained ineffective and deserving only of the epithet "organized impotence," it is because the idea itself is incapable of concrete realization in any better form, founded as it is upon inherent competition, jealousies and rivalries that arise inevitably out of the capitalist order of society. Wilson's Fourteen Points and League of Nations were a bourgeois vision of a bourgeois Utopia which has not and can never materialize, from the very nature of the society and civilization it seeks to perpetuate.

"Swarj."

The "Swarj" of Mr. Gandhi has never been clearly defined, but its implications can be gathered from the writings and speeches of its chief exponent, as well as of his immediate disciples. It rests, not upon the status quo, but upon a reversion to a previous state,—an imaginary "Golden Age", when the horrors of capitalist civilization from which it seeks to escape, had not yet been born. Swaraj or "Self-Rule" as applied to India means reversion to the pre-British, even the pre-Musulman era. It aims to go "back to the Vedas", to which history accords a respectable age varying from three thousand to fifteen hundred years. Its symbol is the wooden plough and the "Charka," or spinning-Wheel. It denounces modern civilization and industrialism in round terms and prescribes for the entire humanity the remedy it would apply to India. But this complete reversal of the existing order is not to be achieved by violence. Violence is the very negation of the doctrine of "Satyagraha," (soul-force) which seeks to overcome hate by love, force by non-resistance, and whose only weapon is Non-cooperation with existing institutions until these change themselves.

Tho the outlines of Swaraj are vague, the implications are very clear. Capitalism would revert to landlordism and handicraft production. The wheels of time will turn not forward, but back. There will be no elimination of classes; Mr. Gandhi believes that "the rich and the poor are always with us." He is positively against class-strife. But he would soften and ameliorate exploitation and injustice by the application of the principles of religion and human brotherhood. Philanthropy would take the place of social justice.

Leninism.

Lenin's goal of the Social Revolution, as its name indicates, implies the complete overthrow of capitalist society and its substitution by the Communist society, wherein the means of production, distribution and exchange pass to the hands of the producing class, which for the first time in history would be freed from the yoke of exploitation. Social production for use would replace production for exchange and profit. The laborer will receive the full value of his toil. Private ownership in the means of production, including land, will cease to exist. Only he who performs socially useful labor shall be counted as a member of society and entitled to its rights and privileges. "He who would eat, must work." Modern means of production, evolved by the capitalist order—machine production and all the conquests of science over nature—will be preserved and improved upon for the benefit of all mankind, not for a small class, as heretofore.

By the overthrow of capitalism, imperialism, its highest and ultimate expression, will also disappear. Subject races and nationalities will for the first time receive the right to develop unhampered in their own way. The emancipation of the peoples enslaved by imperialism is a necessary corollary of the emancipation of the classes enslaved by capitalism. International rivalries, hatred and competition, leading to war, will disappear, and with them the need for war itself. Science and human life will no longer be prostituted to the service of destruction, but to the evolution of the human race.

With the abolition of private property and the universalizing of the opportunity for education and useful service, classes will cease to exist, and a classless society, or rather a society composed of but one class, that of socially useful workers, will come into being. Humanity will progress and develop, not by competition with and exploitation of its fellow-men, but by emulation in the highest ideals of service to mankind which the society of the future will inculcate.

The Need of Struggle.

Such a goal, natural and inevitable as it seems, taken logically as the outcome of the present breakdown of capitalist civilization, will not come to pass of itself. The working class must acquire the state power and wield it during the transition period in the interests of its own class—that of the overwhelming majority of the population—just as in the past the state power was held and wielded in the interests of the bourgeosie, and before them, of the feudal nobility. Much as the workers abhor bloodshed, much as they detest the destruction of human life and of the wealth which they have produced by their labor, they cannot expect that the privileged classes now in possession of the state power will yield it without a struggle.

The first attempt to carry out in practice the principles of socialism, such as the nationalization of land and industry, will meet with the immediate opposition of the ruling class, which will call out all the forces of the state to defend its own interests. Therefore the workers must be prepared to meet force by force, and to wrest mastery from the hands of their opponents on the battlefield. During the transition period that must follow, the Dictatorship of the Proletariat will replace the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie, now thinly veiled under the mask of bourgeois Democracy.

This dictatorship will continue until society as a whole accepts the new state of affairs, and a new generation is brought up in the ideals of the proletarian Socialist State.

Lenin the Only Realist.

Such is the goal of Lenin. And of the three men who prophesied so differently, his was the only creed which has been carried into living and actual reality. The Fourteen Points have passed into oblivion since the framing of the infamous Treaty of Versailles; the League of Nations remains what it must always be, "organized impotence." Wilson, the last prophet of the bourgeoisie, died in obscurity after enjoying a dizzy adulation accorded by millions of human beings whose hearts turned to him in hope at his magnificent promises of "a war to end war"; "self-determination of small and subject nationalities"; "peace without annexations and indemnities"; "open covenants openly arrived at," and the promise of universal disarmament safeguarded by the League of Nations.

The mockery of those promises need no longer be exposed. It is palpable to the whole world who looked to him for their fulfillment. Had the followers of Woodrow Wilson looked less at the man and more at the system of which he was the spokesman, they would have been spared the great disillusionment and despair that weighs upon them today.

Gandhi's Impotent Programs.

The release of Mr. Gandhi by the British Government which imprisoned him sets the public seal upon the recognition of the utter defeat of his program. He, too, was at one period of his career a leader of masses of men; one-fifth of the human race contained within the confines of India alone looked to him for their redemption, while an ever-growing following of disappointed and disillusioned pacifists outside turned towards this new Messiah arising in the East to seek a solution for their war-weariness.

"Swaraj within a year"; "non-co-operation with the existing government until it changes its heart"; "boycott of schools, law courts, government institutions and titles"; "civil disobedience, including non-payment of rent and taxes"; such were the slogans of Gandhism which carried the movement among the masses of the people and swept him to the supreme position of command of three hundred and twenty millions of human beings.

There was a time when his rule was more real than that of the Government of India—when, a leader more realistic than he might have forced that government to its knees and to make concessions, or contested its supremacy in the battle of an entire nation against the bureauracy. But that moment passed, thanks to the retreat at Bardoli, when the Indian workers and peasants were ordered to pay rent and taxes to the landlords and government, and their attempts at mass action repudiated by the leader of the nation.

Steady Decline.

From that moment to the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Gandhi, his sentence to six years in jail and his release after serving two years, the Indian movement for freedom has suffered a constant decline until today the government is so sure of its strength and power that they can release the Prophet of Non-violent Non-co-operation, based upon Soul-Force, with impunity. No terser commentary is needed upon the collapse of a great movement.

What of Lenin, the Communist?

Meanwhile, what of the Russian Revolution, whose leader lies cold beneath the winter snows of Moscow, mourned by a hundred and sixty millions of his fellow-citizens and by the milions of workers and peasants thruout the world who received, however remotely, his message of emancipation?

Has this revolution, successfully made and maintained against the onslaughts of its countless enemies during the past seven years, proved itself an illusion, a Utopia unrealized in actuality?

Has Russia returned to capitalism, as alleged by its capitalist foes who can make no worse allegation?

Has the Revolution of October, 1917, betrayed its declared ideal of being the precursor of the International Socialist Revolution?

By the answer to these questions must the life and work of Nicolai Lenin and his followers, the Russian Communist Party, be judged, and by the eventual working out of those problems which the Russian Revolution has propounded to the world, will Lenin's true greatness be revealed to posterity. Of Wilson and Gandhi we can say at once that they have failed; history awaits no verdict. But the work of Lenin remains unfinished, in a transition state as he himself predicted.

Russian Revolution a Fact.

Meanwhile we can know this much, that the Revolution is an accomplished fact. The Russian autocracy and corrupt bureauracy are no more. The old bourgeoisie has been overthrown. War and revolution have given way to peace. Military Communism has made way for the New Economic Policy, which is an expression of what Lenin termed "State Capitalism."

The dictatorship of the proletariat rules in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, which is the new name for the group of autonomous and independent federated states that once constituted the Empire of the Czar. Church has been separated from state. Land and great industries have been nationalized. Foreign trade remains in the hands of the state. The old secret treaties have been published and repudiated. Russian imperialism has ceased to exist. Freedom to subject peoples has been granted. The old form of state based upon property and privilege has given way to the new form known as the Soviet, based upon occupation. The Russian Revolution has given birth to a new form of government as well as to a new social system based upon social instead of private ownership in the principal means of production, distribution and exchange.

The slogans of the Bolsheviks in 1917-18: "Peace, land and bread"; "All power to the Soviets"; "The Dictatorship of the Proletariat"; "Freedom of Subject Nationalities within the Russian Empire"; "Abolition of secret treaties and repudiation of war debts"; "Destruction of capitalism and imperialism, and the freedom of all enslaved peoples"; finally, "International Proletarian Revolution and the foundation of the World Communist State"—these are either realized or in process of realization,

CONCERNING STATESMEN

Marx, instead of from works of Marx.

Again, Marx, on page 406 of Volume I of the Charles H. Kerr edition of "Capital" refutes the vulgarizers by asserting:

" . . . . as Vico says, human history differs from natural history in this, that we have made the former, but not the latter".

Mankind lives under an environment that contains both natural and artificial elements. The first exists independently of man. The other is the creation of man. At a low stage of development man responds unconsciously to his environment and the first rudimentary social institutions work like natural forces, blindly and destructively. But, as man advances to higher forms of social organization, he brings both natural and social forces more and more under his domination.

Today we have reached a stage where we understand these social forces. We know their effects, their direction, their action, reaction and interaction, therefore, we are able to a considerable degree to subject them to our will.

This understanding of the social forces at work in the world today is the one thing that distinguishes the leaders of the Bolshevik revolution in Russia from all other statesmen. Thru using the Marxian method intelligently they have been able to hold their own against a hostile world, because they have correctly estimated the political and economic power of their enemies.

Professor Beard asks: "What Is a Statesman?" Then after confusing Marx with the vulgarizers' conception of Marxism, proceeds to further inquiry. He discusses the fact that Bismark, the Iron Chancellor of Germany was a towering figure "in the history books written between 1890 and 1914," but today there are many who seriously doubt the majesty of Bismark. In the case of Gladstone, the alleged founder of liberalism in England, Professor Beard questions even one monumental achievement to his credit.

Many statesmen admired by Carlisle are described by Beard as "evanescent windbags." Others, esteemed in one generation are "dismissed from the school books and biographical dictionaries with a scant bow by the next generation."

Quite evidently the Professor considers as statesmen only those individuals who influence the ages.

In conclusion, he hazards a guess as to what constitutes statesmanship. The statesman must be "one who divines the long future, foresees the place of his class and nation in it, labors intelligently to prepare his countrymen for their fate, combines courage with discretion, etc." He must have brains and morals to a degree and must be justified by events.

With slight modifications no Marxist will quarrel with this definition. But we must emphasize our serious disagreement with the assertion that Bismark and Gladstone cannot qualify as statesmen. In dealing with these historical figures, Professor Beard abandons the method of seeking the economic foundation for men's acts he uses so frequently and so well and falls into the metaphysical method of viewing events and people as separate phenomena.

We will not hazard a guess as to what makes statesmen. But we will give our Communist definition: Statesmen are those outstanding figures in history that symbolize powerful class interests.

If Bismark, as a towering figure, passed in 1914, it is only because the Junker class, whose power he solidified, entered its decline at that time.

So long as the class he represents or did represent is in the ascendency the statesman is revered. When the power and prestige of that class is shattered before the onward sweep of economic forces, his tradition vanishes. His acts are no longer interpreted in the light of the vanquished class he represented, but from the viewpoint of the class that rose to power upon the ruins of his class.

Professor Beard emphasizes the fact that the liberalism of Gladstone does not influence the British liberals of today. Again he fails to use the dialectical method and falls into a metaphysical swamp. Gladstone cannot be understood separate from the class he served. Smug, complacent spokesman of the "workshop of the world," the so-called Sage of Hawarden was the apostle of textile capital—internationally peaceful, humanitarian in its outward appearance, while viciously exploiting its own wage slaves. Lloyd George represents the heavy industrialists—iron and steel—with their aggressive imperialism. Beard here emphasizes a party label, "liberalism," without understanding the fundamental economic difference between the old textile liberalism and the new liberalism of iron.

Were he a Marxist, instead of an imaginary opponent of Marx, he would find no difficulty analyzing all statesmen, past and present. He would also be able to predict some of the characteristics of statesmen of the future.

Marxism has a two-fold value for us. It not only enables us to explain history better than before, but it enables us to make history better than it was ever made before.

All the revolutionary leaders from Marx to Lenin have understood this fact and their followers today, because of their work, understand the dialectic connection between the productive forces in society and those who must make the history of this epoch.

It was not a reversion to sentimentalism that Frederick Engels, the grizzled veteran of many battles, at the grave of Marx in Highgate Cemetery, London, and Gregory Zinoviev at the tomb of Lenin, beside the Kremlin Wall, both declared that the movement of the working class would not be what it is today had it not been for them. Both Marx and Lenin made history out of conditions they found at hand—but the point is, they made it.

Three Leaders Of Men

and all remain written on the banner of the Russian Revolution and of the Communist International, which was born therefrom.

Revolution Lenin's Monument.

The Revolution marches, and with it the life work of Lenin. His genius, his determination and his courage have done much to bring it into being, but he himself would have been the last to say that any single personality could achieve what mass movements born of social and economic forces alone can generate. His function was to guide that which, new-born into a hostile world, might have perished but for his consummate ability to preserve and strengthen it; he did more. He set the spark to the combustible material that contained all the elements of revolution, and out of the conflagration he was able to discern the elements which, forged together, would shape the new society.

Lenin was greatest of all in his ability to interpret the needs and tendencies of the mass movement of which he felt himself but a part. He was an idealist whose goal was not Utopia, but Reality—he never aimed at the impossible; he never set himself against the inevitable laws of economics. Therefore his work lives and will grow great in the future, while the dreams of his two contemporaries, in their time great leaders of men, are forgotten or recounted as a legend.

The Labor Government in Deep Waters

By T. J. MURPHY

LONDON, March 22, 1924. (By Mail.)—Mr. Tom Shaw, the second international leader and minister of Labor in His Britanic Majesty's Government, is having bad luck. It seems to be of no avail that our labor leaders don't want strikes. The workers have apparently made up their minds that whether their leaders like it or not they are going to get a bit of their own back. Ever since 1921 they have had reduction after reduction in wages and have been exceedingly patient about them. They have been told that things are on the mend, and it is true that there are less unemployed than there were a few months ago. So now for getting back some of the goods that have been stolen from them. When the Loco' men challenged reductions with a strike and then the Dockers forced the pace and won concessions, a real tonic was administered to the whole movement and a wages offensive is in full swing. This time the workers are taking the initiative.

Exciting Events.

On Friday at midnight the 21st of March, 40,000 tram and bus men struck work. That is a terrific blow in London where transport is a key industry. The first effects of the strike even at this time of night were exciting. Hundreds of hotel workers and market workers had to walk from the center of the city away into the suburbs. Crowds of people who had counted on a last minute settlement were stranded, and rushed for the tubes. Here the congestion was so great that the police had to be called upon to regulate the traffic. If the tubes join in the strike then London is in a fix with a vengeance. As per usual the officials are trying to confine action to simply a section, but whether the tube workers can stand the extra traffic which will inevitably be thrust upon them, and blackleg traffic at that, remains to be seen. They are not in the Transport and General Workers Union which is conducting the strike under the leadership of Bevin, but are partly in the National Union of Railwaymen and partly in the Locomotive and Firemen. There is a working agreement between the latter union and the Transport Unions and it only requires the word from the officials and the strike can become general thruout London transport.

The Electrical Trades Union also threatened that any attempt to introduce blackleg labor will be met by the cutting off of electric power thruout London.

Labor Government.

The strike arises from the demand of the union for an increase of 8/- per week for tram drivers and conductors, made as far back as six months ago. The demands of the men have never been rejected on their merits. They have always met with postponement and equivocation. Only when the men decide to strike the employers call for arbitration and forget their own refusal to put into operation the findings of a previous court of inquiry in 1921. All the governments from that date have been warned as to what situation was developing, but none took any action until faced with the strike. There are, of course, quite a number of authorities involved, viz: The London Courty Council, a number of Local Councils and private companies. The private companies have refused to concede anything. The London County Council is willing to concede 5/- and some of the other Councils 2/-. The councils are asking for arbitration, but the companies refuse it and the unions don't want it. The government is in a dilemma. It has utterly failed before the strike to achieve anything which would avert a strike, and it certainly doesn't like the idea of the sympathetic strike extending. The bus drivers and conductors are striking with the tram men in sympathetic action as members of the same union and it doesn't take much in the way of incitement to extend that kind of thing once it has begun.

Mr. Shaw knows these things quite well, and has plunged for the Court of Inquiry. The fact that some of the authorities have expressed the willingness to make some concession points the way to the settlement. Shaw will aim to get the other bodies to accept the compromise and then persuade the union to accept less than it set out for.

Difficulties of Metal Workers.

The position of the Engineering and shipbuilding workers is more difficult. On February 19th, a thousand engineers in Southampton struck work, against official orders, for an advance of wages. Their rate was 47s. 6d. per week, one of the lowest amongst engineering workers in any of the leading towns. Their rate before the war was 40/6. If the cost of living determined the wages, they should be receiving today 72/6. On February 25th they were joined by the shipyard workers, raising the number on strike to 6,000. At the same time the Engineering and Shipbuilding Federation of Unions has a demand for a 10/- increase before the employers. The employers are trying to use the Southampton strike to stop negotiations on the national 10/- demand. The unions appear to protest, but all the leaders in turn have been down to Southampton to persuade the men to return to work and not to "spoil the National negotiations." The men regard the threat of a national lock-out as bluff and refuse to return to work. And so far they have proved quite correct. The employers should have carried out their threat yesterday, but again deferred action. The men want an additional 7s/6d on to the national demand and are intent on getting it from the local employers. And again there is likelihood of the Minister of Labor stepping in with a Court of Inquiry. nominee A. J. Cook stands an excellent chance of securing the post as Secretary in succession to Frank Hodges. (He has since been elected. Ed. note.) But it is impossible to tell yet whether this effort has struck deeper roots than the discontent arising out of the wages agreement. But it was through the actions of its leaders that the first offer of the employers were rejected and the government was challenged to proceed with the wages bill. And now it is a struggle between the politicians of the labor government and these leaders as to whether the miners' crisis will land them into a first class political crisis.

Government's Troubles.

But the government's difficulties are still greater with the miners. The decision of the miners to reject the offer of the mine owners and call on the government to proceed with the miners' minimum wage bill placed them in a tight situation. The miners had met in conference on the morning after the defeat of the labor government on parliamentary procedure. Ostensibly this defeat was on the question of appropriating time for the clearance of government work. Actually it was the maneuvering of the mine owners to prevent the introduction of the private members bill on the question of the miners' wages. This bill demanded a minimum wage on the 1914 basis plus extra, equal to the rise in the cost of living. By appropriating private members' time the bill would be defeated. The miners' conference recognized this and turned down the mine owners' offer with a view to forcing the government into a straight fight on the miners' question, with the government adopting the private members' bill as their own.

The labor government does not want to face this issue. It is argued that the miners question is a sectional question and not one which appeals to even all the workers, and therefore it would be fatal for the labor government to face certain defeat and have to appeal to the country. The Minister of Mines, Mr. Shinwell, one of the slippiest opportunists in the government, is accordingly striving for all he is worth to secure a settlement of the dispute by direct negotiation between the miners and the mine owners with the Minister of Labor as mediator. In this policy he is supported by the "New Leader" and Mr. F. Hodges who, now he is employed at the admirality, feels himself somewhat free to give his advice as an onlooker and appear as a bold partisan on behalf of the miner. It is interesting to find him a sudden convert to settlement outside parliament. It is not so many months ago, when the miners looked like taking to direct action by striking, that he told them to look to parliament. Now they have turned to parliament they have to look to direct negotiation. It is awkward but difficult to resist the idea that he opposes action of any kind which would involve him and his colleagues in any struggle.

Incensed by Delay Danger for Both.

There are big dangers ahead for the miners as well as the labor government. If the latter fails to get concessions, refuses to bring in a bill and fight on it, and brings about a situation where the Miners' Federation is divided and landed into making local settlements, its fate is sealed. Already some of the miners' leaders, Varley for example of Nottingham, of the better paid district, are in favor of accepting any concession however small it may be. The poorly paid districts of course are opposed to such a policy. And the question is whether the miners are going to be led into the trap of local settlement.

Again the government is proposing an inquiry. But if there is an industry wherein there is no need for an inquiry, wherein everything there is to know about it is known publicly, it is certainly the mining industry. The facts briefly are: 1) the miners are badly paid and everybody agrees they ought to have an increase. 2) The coalfields vary in their yielding capacity and in some coalfields the present terms have ceased to be an economic proposition. 3) Only national unification of the mining industry can overcome these difficulties. 4) The mine owners cannot do this voluntarily. To expect the mine owners who are prosperous to come to the rescue of those who are not making big profits and voluntarily hand over the spoils is too utopian. 5) Only Nationalisation or some form of compulsory state unification can overcome these difficulties. 6) The employers have not a case, considered from a national point of view, the production for the last twelve months having been near record breaking and the profits totalling £26,000,000, that is more than double pre-war profit.

The Role of Nationalization.

But the issue of nationalization is being avoided both by the government who doesn't want to make it a question upon which they would have to face a general election and by the miners who feel that they were misled when this was a burning question in 1921. This is even reflected in the Miners Minority movement which has been thriving on the crisis. Even this omits the question of nationalizing the mines. It demands: 1) That the governing principle of the New Agreement shall be the cost of living. 2) An immediate advance in wages equal to the increase in the cost of living as compared to 1914 (i. e. at present 79 per cent). 3) All increases or reductions in future shall be by the addition or reduction of the flat rate. 4) Six days work or six days pay, i. e. a guaranteed week for all. 5) All workers on night and afternoon shifts shall in future be paid 20 per cent above ordinary day wages for each shift. 6) Membership of the Federation to be a condition of employment in or about the collieries. 7) An instruction to all District conciliation Boards, to arrange a regrading of the workmen with a view to reducing the present number of varying standard rates to a maximum of three scales of payment. 8) This agreement to operate for one year, to be afterwards terminated by 14 days notice on either side.

May Be Political Crisis.

Upon this program the miners' minorities are developing thruout the coalfields and it may be that the salvation of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain depends upon the development of this movement. At the moment its

But housing is the one question upon which the government is scheming and hopes to make the big thing of its existence. It is in fact calculated by many that upon this question they will ultimately go to the country with Wheatley and MacDonald united in a campaign of indignation and rousing propaganda. But there is a gap between now and the time when they hope to challenge the parties. This they hope to fill with international negotiations as their contribution to the solution of the unemployed problem and the raising of "British prestige in the Councils of Nations." But evictions are developing on a big scale and making things urgent. Hence facilities have been given for the pushing of the Rents Amendment Bill which has now gone before a committee. This is a private bill to which Wheatley gave his blessing but which the government did not adopt as its own bill for fear of defeat. This proposed not only the reduction of rent but the continuation of control until 1928, with the provision that anyone wanting their house back or wishing to turn out a tenant must provide alternative accommodation. The Liberals and Tories have combined to defeat this measure in the committee stage of the bill. But the matter is urgent and there are already the threats of Maxton and others to challenge the evictions with mass action. So one more item is going to be watered out of the situation. The government will be compelled to introduce a measure within the next few days to stop evictions, but in order to get it thru quickly the question of rent reductions will be sacrificed.

Rough Seas.

The government is getting into rough waters as well as deep. While the plans for house building are being prepared and negotiations between the unions and the employers are going on, the building workers are pushing in demands for 2d per hour increase in wages. There is a deadlock on this issue already and the building workers are threatening a national strike if something tangible is not forthcoming during next week. They have already had six months of negotiation on the matter and patience doesn't last forever. Then the price of bricks is going up at the prospect of big contracts. In the last few weeks they have risen 5 shillings per thousand. The fifteen to twenty years building program with guaranteed employment for three years on end to the building workers and 9 shillings per week houses is looking a bit sick under these conditions. But then, they will persist in chasing this will of the wisp of "gradualism" and refuse to face the fact that a workers' government can never hope to carry out its programs of reconstruction so long as they leave the boss in possession of the instruments for carrying them out.

It is a rough passage they have entered, and meanwhile it is interesting to observe that the Communist Party has begun to grow and the circulation of its weekly paper has risen from 45,000 to 50,000 during the last six weeks.

THE NEEDLE TRADES SITUATION

By J. W. JOHNSTONE.

IN this month of May, conventions of three principal unions in the clothing industry will take place. On May 5th, the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union opens its biennial convention in Boston; on the 12th, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers meet in Philadelphia; while on the same date the Furriers are called to meet in Chicago. In these three unions, in one of the most advanced sections of the labor movement, will be fought out three phases of the battle for progress in the trade unions.

It is the Furriers' Union that presents the most extreme form of reaction in the needle trades. Altho the rank and file of the union, in large majority, are progressive and revolutionary, yet the administration of Kaufman, supported by the machine of the Jewish Daily Forward still keeps the Union committed to right wing policies and ruled by right wing elements. The methods by which this has been accomplished are well known. Thugs and gunmen have been called in to break up local union meetings to prevent action against Kaufman and his coherts. In the elections, all the left wing candidates were arbitrarily ruled off the ballot.

Notwithstanding the fact that, by this arbitrary rule of force, the reactionaries will control all "officially recognized" delegates, they are still so fearful of the militant rank and file that the Convention, instead of being held in New York, center of the union forces, is taken to Chicago, where there is but a small and conservative local. Even the reactionary delegates with the mandate won by exclusion of all rivals from the elections, must be carefully segregated from the influence of the rank and file.

In the Furriers we thus have the most extreme type of reaction in power. It rules by brute force, the exclusion of opposition from the elections, and by alliance with the reactionary forces in the other unions. It is bold and unashamed, and makes no pretenses of working class democracy. Ruling by such methods over a rank and file that is naturally revolutionary, this bureaucracy is headed directly for a smash-up. It is possible that their boasts of complete control of the Chicago Convention may be made good but the downfall of the Kaufman machine in the not distant future is guaranteed by the primitive nature of its methods of rule. It cannot last. The progressive forces must and will organize their rank and file support, which is in a vast majority, and take over the Furriers' Union.

Ladies' Garment Workers and Expulsion.

The I. L. G. W. U. has been, for the past year, a scene of battle between the left wing elements, led by the Trade Union Educational League and the right wing administration, led by the Forward—S. P. alliance. The left wing has been fighting for amalgamation of all needle trades unions, the right wing for craft separatism; the left for an all-inclusive Labor-Party, the right for an exclusive S. P.—bureaucratic collaboration; the left for the shop delegate system of union organization, the right for continuation of the present cumbersome local forms; the left for militant struggle against all reductions in wages, the right for compromise and collaboration.

When, a year ago, the left wing was sweeping into power in the principal local unions thruout the country, the reactionary general adminstration launched a war upon the left, in a desperate effort to stem the tide of progress. Expulsions, disfranchisements, and discriminations, were the principal weapons relied upon, altho even in the I. L. G. W. U. strong-arm men were occasionally brought in and at the famous Chicago protest meeting, shots were fired at Wm. Z. Foster. The I. L. G. W. U. officials became the principal exponents of the tactics of the Amsterdam International, expulsions and splits to destroy the left wing; and the Boston Convention on May 5th, will have this expulsion issue as the main question before it.

"Repudiate the expulsion policy" has been the slogan of the elections to this convention. The membership has rallied to this issue very decidedly. In spite of the fact that all members of the Trade Union Educational League have been removed from the ballots, and the most arbitrary obstacles set up against any effective protests being made, still the reports from all the large centers of the trade show that a majority of delegates are pledged to repudiate the repulsion policy, and to restore the right of free propaganda for amalgamation, the Labor-Party, the shop delegate system, etc. Altho opposition to the expulsion policy does not mean support of all left wing issues, yet every one recognizes that it is really all the progressive measures that are at stake, and not an abstract question of "rights."

The absurd charge of "dual unionism" against the T. U. E. L. has been completely exploded. How such a charge can still be made at the convention, after the expelled Chicago members have been placed in responsible posts in the strike now going on, and again proved that they are among the best fighters even while they are officially "outside" of the union, will be hard for the delegates to understand. The expulsion policy will be indefensible before this convention. That it will be repudiated, all the expelled members reinstated, and the I. L. G. W. U. brought back into the path of progress is a result to be expected. The majority of delegates so far elected as this is written give promise of a real battle for this result. Upon this issue there can be no compromise.

Amalgamation Is Burning Issue.

The question of uniting all needle trades unions into one industrial organization thru amalgamation will be a most vital issue at the Convention. Even tho the avowed amalgamationists have been deprived of their rights as delegates, still the facts of life itself will force amalgamation upon the attention of the delegates.

In Chicago the strike now going on shows again the necessity of amalgamation. The dressmakers are battling bravely alone, with the other branches of the needle industry expressing their sympathy. All recognize that a defeat for the dressmakers is a defeat for the entire industry. But loose alliances do not give the necessary strength to do battle with the well-organized employers.

Another fact that forces consideration of the proposal to amalgamate the unions, and forces the I. L. G. W. U. to take a leading part in this amalgamation, is the growing centralization taking place in the industry. The factories hitherto confined to making men's clothing are beginning to take over production of women's garments. The section system is being applied to cloak making. What may be expected soon is indicated by the fact that Hart, Schaffner & Marx, large producers of men's clothing, are now turning out 800 women's cloaks a day in Chicago. If there is to be any effective control of this change that is going in the industry, to protect the interests of the workers involved, it can only be done by uniting the two unions with jurisdiction over the two fields that are thus being united in the industry itself.

There is but one alternative to amalgamation to solve this question—that is to engage in a war of jurisdiction between the two unions. This would be destructive of all unionism in the needle trades. It is a method that cannot be defended even by the blackest reactionary. There is not one argument against amalgamation left. The I. L. G. W. U. at its Boston Convention will be called upon to enter into a movement for unity in the needle trades.

In the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, in common with all unions in America, the issues between right and left wings have become more acute. The line-up on policies, for class collaboration by the right wing and for class struggle by the left, is becoming clearer all the time. But this ideological struggle has not taken on the same destructive character of open warfare against the left wing and its rights in the A. C. W. such as occurs in the other unions. The attitude of the administration has, on the whole, assisted in preserving the A. C. W. from wholesale right wing disruption.

But distinct danger-signals have appeared also in the A. C. W. The administration group has been catering to the reactionary elements in New York City, a most dangerous course, for it thus invites them to begin emulation of the Sigman-Perlstein tactics of warfare, tactics that would be fatal to the A. C. W. as a militant union. This tendency to the right was shown in the appointment of Wolf, a reactionary, as manager of the N. Y. Joint Board. The election in Local 2, where the right wingers stole the election, while the administration looked the other way—if it did not assist—is another warning to the left wing to be on its guard.

Participation in the June 17th Convention for the formation of a Farmer-Labor Party on a broad national scale, inclusive of all class elements ready to unite upon a common program—this will be one of the major issues before the A. C. W. of A. Convention in Philadelphia. Notwithstanding the action of the Convention of 1922, which favored an all-inclusive class Farmer-Labor Party, the administration carried out only the letter of the resolution, but not its spirit. It did not play a responsible and active role in the great July 3rd Convention, at which was formed the Federated Farmer-Labor Party. Further dallying on the issue, now that the Farmer-Labor movement is approaching the critical months of a general election, should not be allowed. It will be a major task of the left wing in the A. C. W. Convention to fight for a whole-hearted instruction to throw the Amalgamated into the political battle in a united front with all class forces willing to cooperate in a mass Farmer-Labor Party. This means full endorsement of and participation in the June 17th Convention in St. Paul.

In the Journeymen Tailors' Union.

The general referendum taking place in the Journeymen Tailors' Union for general secretary-treasurer, show the same line-up between progress and reaction witnessed thruout the needle trades. There are numerous candidates, but the real struggle is between Max J. Sillinsky, backed by the left wing, and T. J. Sweeney, present incumbent, backed by the reactionaries. The issues are exceptionally clear.

Sillinsky has been endorsed by 35 local unions; in his letter of acceptance he states the program upon which he solicits the vote of the membership; this contains, in addition to the purely trade issues, amalgamation, the Labor-Party protection of the foreign-born; recognition of Soviet Russia, and organization of the unorganized.

Sweeney, on the other hand, is a follower of Gompers. He voted against amalgamation in the A. F. of L. Convention at Portland, altho his own union is in favor of amalgamation. He voted to unseat Bill Dunne, an act that aroused high resentment among the tailors. He has made a personal organ out of the official journal, to slander his opponents. He is calling for the support of every reactionary element.

The writer has never met Sillinsky, but has watched his record in a number of conventions and in the movement generally. Sillinsky had made a consistent record of voting and fighting for progressive measures even when they are decidedly unpopular. He was one of the few that voted for all the progressive measures in the Portland A. F. of L. Convention and against the expulsion of Dunne. He has no affiliations with any organization but the Tailors, but by his record he has won support of the left wing and of all progressive tailors. If all the elements actively support him, Sillinsky stands a good chance of election.

The next few weeks will be a period of intense interest in the needle trades. Prospects are good for a decided left wing advance, repudiation of the expulsion policy in the I. L. G. W. U., participation in the June 17th Convention by all the unions, particularly the American Garment Workers, endorsement of amalgamation by the I. L. G. W. U., adoption of the shop delegate principle of organization, election of Sillinsky in the Tailors' Union—all or any one of these will mark a great advance in the labor movement. In all unions the left wing will be fighting militantly for these, and for many other measures, particularly for measures against unemployment. Victory on all of them is quite possible if the whole left wing strength is thrown into a real fight for them, because they represent the pressing life-needs of the needle trades unions today. The left wing is fighting with history on its side. Let every militant needle trades worker do his part.

AT THE DOORS - -

By BORIS PILNIAK

(Concluded From Last Saturday)

The horses sent the silver dust flying; the sledge was creaking, the bells jingling. The house of Veralsky on the Sibirna Mountain looked as dark and gloomy as ever. Fedoroff stayed with the horses. Kamynin and Tanatar went into the house. Tanatar remained in the cold parlor, while Kamynin went into Olga Veralskaya's room. And when Kamynin came out of her room he stumbled upon something in the dark and noticed Tanatar crouching on the floor as if ready to jump like a black cat, and whispering (did Kamynin hear the whisper?):

"Miracles happen; miracles do happen. Don't play with secrets Olga. Don't."

That evening Comrade Tanatar drove madly thru the city, giving everybody a ride in his troika; Irina, the girls, tipsy Kamynin, tipsy Trubetzkoy, the various voyenospetzs.

Then came the masquerade ball at the Communist Club.

Olga Andreyevna Veralskaya had sewn up her comb very carefully so that no one might notice it was broken, but Olga Andreyevna did not come to the ball. The military orchestra thundered valses, Hungarian dances, mazurkas. The voyenospetzs, particularly those of the cavalry regiments had come with their spurs and swords and were the heroes of the occasion. The ladies were masked as Nights, Springs (in paper flowers) Birch Trees, Little Russian (with beads from the Christmas trees), Tyrol Peasants, Cucumbers, and Dominos. And because the baths of the city had not been heated and the perfumes had all been shipped to the villages by speculators, the air was thick with the smell of powder, tobacco, and the specific odor of the women's sweat. The voyenospetzs clicked their heels and danced, inclining their heads to one side. Between dances they went to the refreshment room to drink tea. Since no ladies were present there, all sorts of anecdotes were being recounted.

"Maria Ivanovna told me yesterday that she would be dressed as Night and her sister Claudia as Cucumber. Well, I met Maria Ivanovna tonight and noticed beside her a Cupid. I thought this was Claudia and said: 'Why are you not a Cucumber?' The Cupid burst out laughing and called me impertinent."

"That's nothing, but one fairy has a ribbon . . ."

The orchestra struck up—the Hiawatha. A girl dressed in a cheap suit was waiting anxiously for some dancer to come along and invite her. Her little sister was in the way. Small, thin, with red hands, with a pale little face, in a shabby dress and mended stockings, the little girl looked at everybody with a frank and friendly glance of her pure bright eyes, laughed sweetly, and spoke sweetly to her sister. But her sister answered reluctantly in monosyllables and looked back at her with anger. The little girl laughed and was happy. Then a postoffice employe invited the sister and they went to dance. Doctor Fedoroff watched the little girl closely.

She remained alone. She was sad and frightened, and she began to wander over the room, looking anxiously about her. The smile disappeared from her face. She looked fixedly ahead. Doctor Fedoroff probably did not notice that he said aloud:

"There is still time; it will come one day. Later. No. No."

Doctor Fedoroff came towards the little girl and extended his hands.

"Don't be sad, please, don't. Let us go and dance. Let us go and have some tea. Don't be sad. Come."

The little girl ran away from the stranger straight into the crowd of couples dancing the Hiawatha. She burst out crying bitterly, loudly. Doctor Fedoroff threw himself on the table where tickets and home-made candies were being sold, and also began to cry, hiding his wet face in his hands and in the ticket books.

Water was brought to Doctor Fedoroff. People gathered around him. The Hiawatha stopped. Tanatar was most attentive and tender. And as he was putting the doctor into the sledge, the little girl came out with her sister and the post-office employe. Nearly lifting the little girl by her hand, her sister repeated angrily:

"Idiot, idiot, cry-baby!"

When she saw Doctor Fedoroff, she whispered angrily to the post-office employe:

"That one, too—impertinent!"

IV.

On New Year's Eve the voyenospetzs of the division arranged a party in Kamynin's former country villa, now become Soviet property. The house, over a century old, had been heated several days in succession, but it was still cold and damp. And as this house had once been plundered no lamps were nowhere to be found, and torches had to be used instead. On the gallery, in the white hall, the orchestra was playing in the dark, without notes and very badly out of tune. Some people came in the morning in order to spend the day in the country, to go out skiing or take a walk. Others arrived direct for supper. There is a special category of girls whose sole occupation is amusement. Plenty of them were present that evening. A company of ski-runners gathered on the edge of the forest, around a little bright fir tree. They lighted two candles on it, danced around it and burned it up. The night came, deep and silent, bringing a myriad of stars and lighting up a myriad icicles which also shone like stars. Supper was served in the stripped parlor lighted by torches. The company in uniforms, fur coats and hats sang, ate and drank. The orchestra played loudly, but nobody danced. After supper everybody took to drinking again. A great surprise was then staged. The writer Kamynin, the former owner of the house, opened, with his own key, a secret cupboard with wine. Some of the wine had become sour, some of the cognac and vodka had lost its flavor, but everybody drank, shouted hurrah, sang "You'll be buried when you die" and "Gaudeamus." Tho half evaporated, there was still enough wine, cognac and vodka left to carry on a cavalry attack. Everybody was merry. Some girls got on the fireplace and from there onto the shouders of the voyenospetzs, who were supposed to represent fiery steeds. This was called a cavalry attack. The cavalcade rushed screaming thru the dark rooms. In the sitting room somebody started the game of Chemin de fer. One could already hear whispers and screams coming from the dark rooms. Far from the sitting room the orchestra went on playing. Tobacco smoke filled the sitting room, where new cavalry detachments were constantly forming. The torches were smoking. Kamynin found a book on the window. It was the New Testament. Standing near a torch, his legs spread wide apart, Kamynin opened it at random and read aloud:

"But he that is an hireling and not the shepherd whose own the sheep are, seeth the wolf coming and leaveth the sheep and fleeth, and the wolf catcheth them and scattereth the sheep; the hireling fleeth because he is an hireling and careth not for the sheep."

One of the young girls fell from the fireplace and screamed. Somebody said:

"Va-banque."

Tanatar came near Kamynin and said in a low voice:

"Read something for me."

The telephone rang piercingly in the deserted rooms of Olga Veralskaya (the yellow desert), and the voice of Samuel Tanatar was heard across the wire:

"Forgive me, Olga. Forgive me. I am so sorry, so lonely. Forgive me. Forgive me everything. I shall expiate my sins. We have not long to live. We are doomed. Forgive me. My ugliness here is perhaps but a yearning for other, more beautiful regions. I am speaking with the blood of my heart."

And Olga answered in a low voice:

"Yes, I forgive you. I do. I forgive you everything. Nothing has happened." Just as Tanatar was calling up Olga Veralskaya the whistle of Olga Nicolayevna blew at the foot of the mountain, and at that moment Andrey Andreyevitch Veralsky probably shouted thru the window of the Club: "Ilya, fetch the carriage." One of the girls fell from the fireplace and screamed. Somebody said: "Va-banque." Tanatar came near Kamynin and said in a low voice:

"Read something for me."

"All right. Something from Matthew:

"'32. Now learn a parable of the fig tree: when his branch is yet tender and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh:

"'33. So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things know that it is near, even at the doors.'"

Kamynin, completely drunk, finished and almost lost his balance. Tanatar looked at him fixedly.

"Shall I read for you now?"

"All right; read for me."

"I do not need the book; I know it by heart. This is also from Matthew: Let the dead bury the dead. Chapter VIII. Let the dead . . ."

Tanatar turned abruptly and left the room. The lavatory was spoiled and the men had to go to the back porch. Tanatar followed them. The moon was hanging low above the horizon. Dogs were barking in the village. Trubetzkoy put two fingers in his mouth and was sticking his head into the snow. Another voyenospetz was lying on the snow to cool off. Two others were still smoking. Tanatar walked down a couple of steps and stopped.

"The imbeciles have dirtied everything."

He took out the Nolan revolver. A low shot rang out, but Tanatar himself probably did not hear it.

The orchestra played funeral marches and the "Internationale." Only one woman followed the red coffin of Comrade Tanatar. It was his sad, thin, pale wife—his wife who knew everything.

Night. Darkness. Snow. Stars. Silence. On the edge of the forest, near the rigid pine trees, little fir trees stood wrapped in snow and bent to the ground. One of them had been burned down and was still smoking. Silence. Immobility. The stars shone brightly and there were myriads of them. One star fell down. Silence. The hours passed. Suddenly something began to move in the field, and a lone snowflake came whirling among the fir trees. Another followed, and they both vanished. In the North somebody was pulling a dark mitten over the stars. Snowflakes fell again—one, two, five. Two of them met, got entangled, whispered something to each other, merged in one and died. The forest answered the call of the snowflakes. It sent up a piercing cry, and the fir trees bent their heads in a stately minuet. The trees cracked and began to drop old branches to the ground. And again there was silence. And again the snowflakes came whirling—one, two, a hundred were born and died. The fir trees bent their heads in a new minuet. A shouting, a ringing, a howling was heard. The dark heavenly glove began to scatter grains over the earth. Snowflakes got entangled. They found the space too narrow and dashed across the fields. Myriads of them.

And the storm was on. The dead snowflakes, born by the snowstorm and flying for thousands of miles over field, forest, river and city, moaned, laughed, shouted, wept in their mortal agony.

This snowstorm had not been announced. It came from beyond the Volga and was going in the direction of Yeletz, Kursk, Sumy, Poltava.

Doctor Andrey Andreyevitch did not go to see his patients in the storm, and was reading Mayne Reid all day. Dressed in his fur coat, cap and boots, he came out for lunch at three. He ate shtchee,* made of sour cabbage and mutton. He looked silently at Olga and said gloomily:

"Life is hard nowadays, Olga. You have had a rest. You might be looking for something to do—teaching, perhaps. The holidays are over. You ought to work. You would not feel so lonesome, then. Have some mutton."

A word about Ivan Petrovitch Bekesh.

Ivan Petrovitch came to the writer Kamynin, spoke about the diary, and finished by saying that the price he had asked for it was far too low and ought therefore to be raised or the diary returned to him. Kamynin answered that he had bought the diary not for himself, but for Olga Andreyevna Veralskaya.

Olga Andreyevna Veralskaya met Kamynin on the following morning in the labor bureau. A young girl with sheepish black eyes and hips like the back of a sledge was being registered before them.

"What is your profession?" asked the woman clerk.

"I am a political emigrant," answered the girl. "Before 1917 I lived within the pale. My name is Sofia Pindrik."

"I see."

It was Kamynin's turn.

"Your profession?" asked the clerk.

"A writer."

And the woman clerk wrote down in the corresponding register: "Clerk."

Out of Our Own Strength

By Max Bedacht

May day!

Awakened by the rays of the spring sun nature bursts the bonds of winter and frees itself. This freedom is the fruit of nature's own inherent energy and power.

Man has ever recognized the greatness of that phenomenon. He has ever celebrated this awakening. He did not only welcome the new life that spring brought forth; he especially paid tribute to the forces that dare to break with the old and build the new, he paid tribute to the forces of revolution.

May day was celebrated by the barbarians in the woods of Brittany as well as by those in the valleys of the Danube and the Rhine; it was celebrated by the civilization and culture of ancient Rome.

May day suggested freedom after slavery, it suggested beauty after stark and barren ugliness.

Day of Exploited.

The exploited and oppressed have forever dreamt of freedom. But tho the dreams often made them forget their misery, they could not stop it. Every achievement that made life less of a burden for them had to be gained after hard struggles. The inexorable needs of life forced them into battles again and again. Their very lives they had to defend against the exploiters and oppressors. Often defeated the exploited gained strength even in defeat. The experience gained in defeat strengthened their sinews for the inevitable new battles.

Experience was the creator of a consciousness that all the exploited and oppressed have something in common; that this common interest must be defended in a common struggle because in unity there is greatest strength.

With the growth of this consciousness, (class consciousness), there also grew the self-confidence of the exploited masses. The blind struggle for existence of the exploited slowly developed into an organized and conscious struggle of the class of oppressed.

When these conscious warriors for the freedom of their class looked for a symbol of their aims and aspirations, for an expression of their hope and determination, they could do no better than select the celebration of May day as that symbol. May day, the time-gate thru which enshackled nature marches to free itself from the fetters of winter; May day that awakens nature to a consciousness of its own strength; May day that enthuses nature to action to break a dead past and build a beautiful future.

May day thus became the day of labor. Not a day of rest graciously granted to the slaves by the oppressors—no—a day taken by international labor as an expression of its revolt; a day denoting the beginning of a new era; a day denoting that the masses of the exploited and oppressed are slowly becoming dominated by the understanding that this new era must be built by the struggles of the exploited themselves; a day ringing out as a clarion call to the yet dormant forces of the working class the rousing battle cry:

ARISE YE PRISONERS OF STARVATION!

ARISE YE WRETCHED OF THE EARTH!

International Labor Day.

May day is international labor day. On that day the aims of the struggle of the international proletariat emblazon the banners of millions in demonstrations all over the world. On that day international labor demonstrates its determination to battle for those aims.

Not all the workers of the world are yet within the ranks of volunteers for the battles of labor. But like the spring sun awakens nature, so does the ever increasing experience of the masses of workers strengthen their forces. The latent energies of the working class are freed and the Modern Sampson tears down the pillar upon which rests the temple of capitalist society.

Capitalism has increased its power with its profit. It used this power with ever increasing fury against the organizations of labor. Forced to the wall the workers defend themselves and learn out of the experience of this struggle to perfect their organizations as well as their methods of defense. The insufficiency of antiquated weapons bring defeat in the actions of today but also teach methods that will lead to victory tomorrow.

The insatiable hunger for profit drives capitalism to new methods of exploitation and oppression. Finally that hunger dominates every manifestation of life of the capitalist order. Law becomes nothing but forms under which profit making is permissible and means by which profits are safeguarded. Order means a rule of conduct conducive to profit. Patriotism means a firm and unshakable belief in the sacred mission of the profiteers. And over this mad orgy of profit there is drawn as a convenient cover a political system called democracy, "the rule of the people." After every human being in this order has been made a slave of the god of profit, poisoned by the education of the profiteers, taught to fear the god of the profiteers, shackled by the laws of the profiteers, then the order lets him loose mesmerizing him with the cruel jest of his political sovereignty.

Capitalism Own Grave Digger.

But a system build on the strength of illusions can only last as long as the illusions hold out. And it is the fate of capitalism that its very mission is destined to kill the illusions upon which it has built its power. Democracy contains the poison which will eventually kill the illusions which alone uphold it. The dictatorship of the profiteers can function under the cloak of a democracy because the "sovereign" workers are ideologically the slaves of profiteering. The experience of the struggle for existence will gradually free the workers from these bonds. Political class consciousness will open the eyes of the exploited and oppressed to the laws of profiteering, to the gods of the profiteers, and to the state of the profiteers. Then the workers will begin to apply democracy, make use of their sovereign rights in the interest of their class. Capitalism will then discard the pretense of democracy and will cynically transform it into an out and out dictatorship.

May day 1924.

The international proletariat is again reviewing its forces in demonstrations all over the globe. Everywhere they pause long enough on this day to recapitulate the development of the past year to see how far the growth of class consciousness with the workers has advanced, to see how much nearer the grave capitalist order is this year than it was yesteryear.

This review in the United States reveals a progress in the struggle for freedom never before witnessed in that short span of time. A political revolt of the workers is brewing. The first signs of it are so powerful that its speedy development is a foregone conclusion. The expectations of that development are not based only on the objective conditions favoring it, but also and mainly on the subjective factors that interfere. May day 1924 can register the activity of organized forces within the labor movement of the United States that are no longer satisfied with interpreting the struggle of the exploited for freedom, but that are bent upon organizing, leading and directing it. These forces create with their energy and activity the brooding heat that will develop the embryo of a political consciousness of the working masses of America into political class and mass action. These forces are the Communists. They are nothing foreign to the country and its political and economical system; they are its product. In the Communists the consciousness of the strength of the working class is developed highest, in the Communists the principle that the freedom of the exploited and oppressed can only be the fruit of their own struggle finds its most conscious expression.

Communists Celebrate.

On May day the Communists in America raise the banner of the conscious struggle for the freedom of the working class, as it is raised by the revolutionary workers everywhere. On May day they call upon the working masses of the land to shake off the dead weight of hopelessness. Does not nature around us burst the bonds of slavery? Does it not triumphantly break the fetters of winter and bloom into a new beautiful future? It does! But it does it with its own strength. It accomplishes this great task with the forces within itself.

Out of the triumphs of spring the workers drink the new hope: Self reliance; self confidence. Strengthened by a belief in ourselves we workers will burst the shackles of an oppressive order and built a new, a beautiful future. We must build it ourselves, with our own energy, with our own strength.

That is what May day signifies to the working class. That is why we celebrate May day as international labor day.

Concerning Statesmen -

By H. M. Wicks

AMONG the many erroneous conceptions of Marxism, the notion that men are the unconscious and helpless pawns of history is perhaps the most persistent. This is due in part to the superficial thinking of professed revolutionists, who, especially of late, have distorted historical materialism into a sort of mechanistic conception of history where men are unconscious automatons, instead of the makers of history.

Since the average bourgeois historian obtains his knowledge of Marxism from the so-called popularizers who write in current yellow publications, it is not at all surprising to find Professor Charles A. Beard, unconsciously distorting Marxism in the April number of "The American Mercury."

Mr. Beard propounds the question "What Is a Statesman?" He prefaces his discussion of statesmen by comparing what he considers antithetical historical methods—those of Thomas Carlyle and Karl Marx.

After devoting a few sentences to the great man theory of Carlyle, Mr. Beard asserts: "The Marxians at the other end of the pole dismiss the statesman with a scoff as a mere automaton produced by a complex of economic forces".

In all the literature of Marxism there is nothing to even faintly suggest such a dogmatic formula. Not one recognized Marxist ever indulged in such fantastic delusions. Those who are responsible for this conception of Marxism are the vulgarizers of Marx who are too mentally lazy to familiarize themselves with the profound works of the greatest thinker of the past century.

Where is the Communist tyro who is not familiar with the famous quotation from Marx's "Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis Bonaparte":

"Man makes his own history, but he does not make it out of whole cloth; he does not make it out of conditions chosen by himself, but out of such as he finds close at hand."

Surely there is no justification in this quotation for the notion expressed by Professor Beard and the vulgarizers of Marx. But one swallow does not make a summer and one quotation is not sufficient to refute a misconception so widespread as this one.

Again and again, thruout all the writings of both Marx and Engels, we find illuminating passages that disprove the idea that men are automatons and that history is the result of blind, unconscious forces. In his famous introduction to "A Contribution to the Critique of Political Economy," Marx sets forth in brilliant strokes the fundamentals of his historical method. Briefly this method declares:

1. In carrying on production in a given stage of society men enter into certain social relations that are independent of their will.

2. These relations correspond to a definite stage of the development of these powers of production—in the ancient world slave owner and slave master; during the middle ages feudal baron and feudal serf with the gradual development of the early capitalist class; today the working class and the capitalist class with its varied divisions based upon the present technique of production.

3. The sum of these relations of production constitutes the economic structure of society—the real foundation—on which rise legal and political superstructures and to which correspond definite forms of social consciousness.

4. The mode of production in material life determines the general character of the social, political and spiritual processes of life.

5. It is not the consciousness of men that determines their existence, but, on the contrary, their social existence determines their consciousness.

6. At a certain stage of their development the productive forces of society come into conflict with the legal and political forces. These political forces then act as a fetter upon further development of productive forces. Then ensues a period of revolution when the superstructure gives way to new institutions that correspond to the newly developed economic forces.

7. In considering such transformation of the economic conditions of production, which can be determined with the precision of natural science, and the legal, political, religious, aesthetic or philosophic—in short ideological— forms in which men become conscious of this conflict and fight it out.

Thus, according to Marx, while political forces and the statesmen who carry out political policies cannot transcend the natural and artificial environment in which they function, still they are not automatons responding blindly to this environment. Certain problems arising out of changing economic conditions demand solution and men consciously solve these problems as they arise.

In the Communist Manifesto Marx and Engels declare: "The history of all hitherto existing society is a history of class struggle."

No class struggle can exist without the conscious participation of the individuals who make up the conflicting classes. So even an understanding of this passage from the Manifesto refutes the conception attributed to Marx by the learned professor.

The spectacle of Professor Beard assailing Marx with the vulgarities of the odious crew of Marx perverters whose most prominent members in this country are William English Walling, Frank Bohn, John Spargo and James O'Neal, is indeed, ironic, because he is one of the very few outstanding American historians who most consistently uses the Marxian method of interpreting history. His "Economic Interpretation of the Constitution" in particular contains passages that would be credit to any Marxist. We fear that Professor Beard has obtained his conception of Marxism from these clowns who distort

BIG STRIKE ALARMS PULLMAN BOSSES

Carmen's Vice President Tells of Fight to Civilize Pullman Company

By JOHN HOLMGREN.

Vice-President of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen.

The manufacturing department of the Pullman Company manufactures automobile bodies, passenger and freight cars, in addition to sleeping cars, and during the war and after got its share of the graft in manufacturing shells that never were fired, besides contributing its PAYtriotic assistance to winning the war by the manufacture of phonograph cabinets.

However, the company was credited with the purchase of many Liberty Bonds, which were graciously passed on to the employees, who later had to sell them to the shysters and sharks at a loss owing to the shutting down of the plant.

Since the gret Pullman strike in 1894, thirty years ago, this corporation has fought recognition and representation by its employees.

The operating department of the Pullman Company, by uniting 100 per cent in the Railway Employees Department of the American Federation of Labor did force the company to sign an agreement, bringing recognition and representation.

This brought about the elimination of piece-work and estab-

Unions Give $1,000.

More than $1,000 has been contributed by local unions during the last week to the striking ladies' garment workers for use in their long drawn-out fight against the bosses, Anton Johannsen announced, yesterday, for the Committee of Fifteen, in the Federation of Labor meeting, the full list of donations.

The sum given the striking dressmakers is now up in the thousands, including the earlier contributions. The Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Cloakmakers gave the largest single contributions so far, each donating $10,000 to the dress makers.

Girls Accompany Committee

A special committee of five is canvassing the city, attending every local union meeting, with two girls accompanying a committeeman to each meeting. The result of their search for funds during the first week of the drive listed by contributing locals, is

Bosses' Association Meets

The Dress Manufacturers Association held a meeting Friday night to discuss whether they should keep up the fight or not but they are keeping their decision dark.

It is reported, however, that the settlement made by Hymen Bros. with the union has had a serious influence on the unity of the association in opposing the demands the garment workers have made and struck for.

The Hymen settlement, strikers say, permits the boss to work the girls overtime on Saturdays during the busy season. Some of the girls claim that this is really a settlement of the 44-hour basis.

PULLMAN SCENE OF HUGE PUBLIC MASS MEETING AS CARMEN'S STRIKE GAINS

By KARL REEVE

The Pullman car builders start the fourth week of their strike today with every man assigned to well-organized picket duty, and confident that after the public mass meeting tonight in the "K. of P." hall, 11037 S. Michigan Ave., they will find organized labor receptive to the appeal for financial aid that has been launched for the coming week.

The gathering tonight is the first public meeting held under the auspices of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen at which the entire 20,000 workers in the entire Pullman plant, and the wives and daughters of these workers will have an opportunity to hear first hand the issues involved in the strike of 1,500 carbuilders.

Lillian Herstein, of the Teachers' Union, John Holmgren, vice-president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, and several other speakers prominent in trade union circles will speak at the meeting tonight. Thousands of copies of this issue of the DAILY WORKER are being bought by the strikers and sold to Pullman employes to advertise the meeting and the progress of the strike.

Strikers reported at Saturday's strike meeting that the latest attempt of the Pullman Company, in another fruitless effort to break the strike, has threatened its employes in the 103rd Street freight shop with dismissal unless they transfer to the struck 110th street shop. Martin Bacevius reported that his foreman told him to act as a strikebreaker in the departments on strike or else quit his job. Bacevius refused, but has not yet been dismissed.

Picketing Extended.

Automobile loads of riveters, reamers and heaters came into Pullman today from St. Louis, Mo., and Omaha, Neb. The picketing has been extended starting today to different parts of the city, such as railroad stations, where incoming workers are liable to congregate.

Several more of these out-of-town men have instructed David J. Bentall, attorney, to endeavor to secure by law the refund of the transportation money which the Pullman company induced them to pay out by means of false promises and misrepresentation.

The procurors of the anti-union Pullmen Company are scouring the country, telling the workers in other towns that there is no labor trouble at Pullman, and making them pay their own transportation and other expenses to Chicago.

But Men Not Paid.

Attorney Bentall told the DAILY WORKER that he has repeatedly been after the Pullman Company officials to refund the transportation money of the seven Detroit men who have put their cases in his hands.

"One when I called, a Mr. McLaren, of the Pullman Company, told me that the company had formulated no policy on this matter," said Bentall. "Later on I called again and talked to Munson, who said he was one of the superintendents of the employment office. Munson told me that the Pullman Company has decided to transfer the men, who ar enot low enough to scab, to other Pullman car shops where there is no strike. If the men refuse to go to other shops, Munson promised that the money would be refunded. I learn, however, that the

SO. DAK. TO SEND 100 TO F.-L. P. MEET

Plan to Go to June 17th Convention by Flivver

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 4.—Interest in the National Farmer-Labor Convention to be held here on June 17th, is rapidly increasing as the time for the meeting approaches, according to information given out from the office of the Arrangements Committee.

From all sections of the country, letters of endorsements and credentials are being received. Many state parties have written in signifying their intention of being represented at the convention. In other states, conventions are being called for the purpose of organizing Farmer-Labor Parties, and sending delegates to St. Paul on June 17th.

Spectacular Parade Planned.

The farmers and workers of South Dakota are planning a rather unique method of getting a large representation to the convention from their state. They plan on assembling at a central point near the Minnesota line, and there form an automobile parade across Minnesota, with their cars all dolled up with banners expressing their views of the economic problems confronting them. They expect in this way to bring at least one hundred delegates, many of whom will bring their camping equipment with them to save expense. Tom Ayres, Farmer-Labor candidate for United States Senator of South Dakota and a member of the National Arrangements Committee, is supervising the organization of the parade.

The Farmer-Labor Party of Colorado, which up until now has been affiliated with the old National Farmer-Labor group, headed by John Fitzpatrick and J. G. Brown of Chicago, writes in, stating that after due consideration by their organization, they have decided to send a full delegation to St. Paul on June 17th. They state: "Having due regard for the opinions of the National Farmer-Labor Party, to which we owe allegiance, we, nevertheless, see fit to attend in a body at the St. Paul convention."

C. P. P. A. Criticized.

There is a general view expressed in hundreds of letters being received by the committee that the Conference for Progressive Political Action, and their organ, "Labor," are seriously injuring the cause of the workers and farmers by refusing to break with the two old parties and assist in building a great mass Farmer-Labor Party. In many letters this takes the form of direct condemnation, accusing them of being the tools of the financial interests; in others the hope is expressed that they will realize the wonderful possibilities of building a new movement this year and unite with the successful Farmer-Labor parties of the Northwest in making

KLAN STAGES MIDNIGHT FOLLIES AFTER ROPING ONE HUNDRED SUCKERS

MARION, Ill., May 4.—A parade two miles long after midnight this morning concluded an initiation of 100 men and an equal number of women into the Ku Klux Klan, held a mile south of Herrin.

Glenn Young, Klan booze cleanup leader, and newly appointed head of the East St. Louis Klan, led a caravan of 30 automobiles from East St. Louis loaded with Klansmen and their families.

Flaming crosses were burned in the air following addresses by Young and Grand Titan C. D. McGhee.

Rally to the Left Wing Program! Says TUEL Call to Needle Trades Workers

On the occasion of the holding this month of the conventions of International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and the Furriers' Union, the National Committee of the Trade Union Educational League has issued a call to all needle trades' workers as follows:

TO THE NEEDLE TRADES WORKERS:

THE conventions now being held must be made the end of the period of retreat and disorganization marked by the past two years. The "open shop" drive of the clothing manufacturers revealed the weaknesses of our organizations. Now the proper lessons must be drawn and the forces of the organized garment workers be rallied in solidarity for a new drive forward, for new achievements.

During the two years past it has been demonstrated beyond doubt that the whole labor movement must break completely with the capitalist political parties, and form a party of its own in alliance with the exploited farmers.

We are now faced with a magnificent opportunity to realize this goal, in the great convention of farmer-labor parties, labor unions, and farmers' organizations called for St. Paul, June 17. We must break the connections of our unions with all bodies that still cling to the capitalist parties, and participate whole-heartedly in the June 17 convention.

Amalgamation of all the needle trades unions into one industrial organization has been doubly established as the only sound program for our organization. Federations and alliances have again proven their futility. Nothing but the organic unity, under one general office, with departments to represent the present divisions in the industry, will bring about the necessary solidarity in the needle trades.

Another crying need of our unions is the organization of the unorganized. This is closely bound up with amalgamation, as only with one united union can a wide-sweeping organization campaign be carried thru. But even while we are fighting for amalgamation much more can be done than has been in the past to bring the unorganized into the unions.

The shop delegate system has long been an issue before the needle trades. Almost every one recognizes that the present form of local unions without the basic unit of shop committees, is out of date. Nothing but the shop delegate system can draw the masses of the needle trades workers into that active participation in the entire life of the union that is so necessary. What has been lacking to establish this system is a uniform and comprehensive plan. Our conventions must work out such plans and begin to establish them in the life of our organizations.

During the past two years, in the struggle against the employers, and in the fight for the progressive measures above outlined, it has been proved that the militant rank and file, the class conscious workers, the left wing of the needle trades unions, is the only element that can be relied upon to fight for these vital interests of the membership at all times. The necessity for this left wing to establish its educational groups, with connections thruout the industry, for the common solution of our common problems by formulating programs to be presented to the unions, at the same time that the left wing continuously abides by the fundamental union discipline, this necessity has been demonstrated beyond all doubt. The attempt by reactionary officials to break up the left wing educational groups by expulsions, disfranchisements and discriminations must be defeated. The left wing contains the best fighters for the union, its program and activity are the only guarantee of progress and the reactionaires' war upon the T. U. E. L. and the left wing generally must be broken.

The problems of the needle trades workers are not confined to America; they are international in scope. An international organization is necessary, which will include the needle trades workers of all lands. Our needle trades unions should affiliate to the Copenhagen International, and there fight for the inclusion of all needle trades unions now excluded, especially the unions of Soviet Russia, and for the affiliation of the Needle Trades International with the Red International of Labor Unions. It is the duty of all the needle trades unions to endorse and support the efforts of the Red International of Labor Unions to form the International United Front of Labor.

Unemployment is a burning issue in the needle trades. The methods of class collaboration will not solve the problem. The industry must be made to support its workers, and the government which represents the capitalist system must also be made responsible for the unemployed. This can only be done by means of powerful organization of the workers, industrial and political. The control of the workers must be established over all unemployment insurance and relief.

These are the broad outstanding issues, in addition to the special trade problems of each section of the industry, coming before the needle trades conventions. All delegates who fight for these measures are fighting workers as a whole; the reactionaries who fight against them are fighting against the interests of the rank and file.

Rally to the left wing program!

On to June 17, St. Paul, and the Farmer-Labor Party!

Amalgamate all the needle trades unions!

Organize the unorganized!

Establish the shop delegate system!

Stop the expulsion policy against the left wing!

Affiliate with the Copenhagen Needle Trades International and the Red International of Labor Unions!

Relieve unemployment at the expense of the capitalists and under the control of the workers!

Establish solidarity and militant leadership thruout the garment industry!

The Trade Union Educational League, National Committee.

FARRELL TRIAL OPENS WITH DICE AGAINST WORKERS

Defense Fights Blankenstein Prosecutor

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MERCER, Pa., May 4.—The Farrell sedition trials of the six Workers Party members opened Friday. Judge McLaughry, who presided at the trial of Israel Blankenstein in Pittsburgh, is sitting for this case. Former Federal Attorney Myers of Pittsburgh, who prosecuted Blankenstein for the state, is assisting in the Farrell trial.

The defense has four attorneys, headed by I. E. Ferguson of Chicago.

The complete jury had just been selected by the time of adjournment Friday.

Blankenstein, also a member of the Workers Party, was given a sentence of three years, which he began to serve in January, 1922. On account of his good record, he may apply for release this summer.

The maximum sentence that may be given in sedition cases in this state is 10 years' imprisonment and $20,000 fine.

Newspapers are conspiring with Department of Justice agents to stir up hysteria to help the state convict the Farrell defendants. D. of J. men threaten deportation to the workers.

Strike Shuts Down Scab Restaurants; Pickets Arrested

Brisk picketing is going on at four restaurants in the north end of Chicago where the Amalgamated Food Workers are leading the fight for the eight hour day and the six day week.

The eating places which have gone dead because the bosses still hope to keep the 12-14 hour day and the seven day week are the Pemeroy, at 1120 Argyle Ave., the Elroy, at Lawrence Ave. and the "L" station; the Cornell at 1149 Wilson Ave. and the Elite at 1037 Wilson Ave.

Arrest of five pickets failed to bring any customers into the food emporiums. The pickets were promptly gotten out again by the union and went back to the line.

NAME OF "PULLMAN" SMEARED OVER COMPANY TOWN; WORKERS' HANDWRITING IS ON THE WALL

By ESTHER LOWELL.

Pullman, Illinois, is a company town. For two miles along Lake Calumet the red-brick company-built houses and buildings line the streets and inside the spiked iron paling the red-brick shops cluster about a central circular towering structure.

The Pullman Company used to own all the land for miles about and everything that was on it. But once there must have been a more or less hostile county administration, for the state's attorney made the company sell off some of its land, except the portion on which the shops were located. The law was that a company could not operate two businesses, an industry and landlord game, under one name. The Pullman Land Company was formed by the chief people of the Pullman Company, builders of steel cars, and part of the real estate was sold to employes of the plant. The company and its members are still big landlords in Pullman.

The Pullman name clings to almost every enterprise in the neighborhood. The Pullman Coal Company, Express, Bank, Bar etc. Formerly the Pullman Company ran every store, took care of its workers' needs in the Arcade of shops, but now little business men have come in to cater to the employes. There are the corner delicatessens.

Calumet Industrial Lake-Front.

Outside the iron spikes of the fence around the Pullman works on three sides, there is the sidewalk and the lawn parkway. The other side is a board fence along the rusty edge of Lake Calumet. From the rickety boat-house where the Pullman row boats are parked, the lake stretches a mile or less to an imposing industrial

Four-Sevenths Of Farm Income Goes To Debts

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, May 4.—The agricultural committee today laid before the house its formal report on the McNary-Haugen Farm Relief bill. Describing the threatening situation in agriculture, the report set forth:

1.—That half as many banks had failed betwen 1920 and 1923 as during the whole period from 1902 to 1923.

2.—That four-sevenths of the total farm income is taken to pay taxes and interest on mortgages and debts.

Cannot Afford to Hire.

3.—That more than 1,120,000 farmers and hired men deserted the farms in 1922 to seek industrial employment.

4.—That one-quarter of the farm owners in the corn and wheat states are bankrupt.

5.—Above all, that the purchasing value of farm products is less than half what it was before the war.

"Land For The Users"

The McNary-Haugen bill is of no permanent value to the poor, working farmers who are in a vast majority, say local members of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party. They see no hope for farmers' improvement save thru adoption of the principles "A Five-Year Moratorium" for all working farmers, as a plan for temporary alleviation and "The Land For The Users" for permanent results. To this end they are speeding up work for the formation of a class Farmer-Labor Party at the June 17th convention in St. Paul.

DAUGHERTY IN FIGHT TO HIDE PROOF OF GUILT

WASHINGTON, May 4.— Aroused over the latest comeback from former Attorney General Daugherty, the Senate Committee investigating his conduct of office, prepared to force a showdown on the issue Daugherty has raised.

The committee is planning to challenge the authority of Daugherty to stop examination of his private telegram and will ask Attorney General Stone to contest action on the injunction sought for this purpose by the former Attorney General against the Brookhart Committee, the Senate sergeant-at-arms and the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies.

May Set Precedent.

The committee decided today to take this action, not only because of the injunction against its investigation, but against all senatorial quizzes.

While the suit is directed technically at the production of telegrams, Daugherty challenges the power of the committee to investigate questions listed in the senate resolution, namely, his alleged failure to prosecute anti-trust cases and Albert B. Fall, Harry Sinclair and E. L. Doheny.

Members of the committee have been ordered to appear Friday, May 16, to show cause why injunctions should not be issued.

Dolsen Forbidden To Speak May Day At Oakland Meeting

OAKLAND, Cal., May 4.—In spite of police interference, which prevented James Dolsen from speaking, the May Day meeting here was a great success. The assemblage passed a resolution for the repeal of the criminal syndicalism law of this state and for the release of Matt Schmidt, Ford, Suhr, Mooney, Billings and 106 members of the I. W. W. now imprisoned in California jails.

The management of the hall in which the meeting was held claimed that the police had warned them not to allow James Dolsen to address the May Day crowd.

BIG STRIKE NOW ON AT PULLMAN AGAINST WAGE CUT--STAY AWAY

PULLMAN STRIKE HAS BACKING OF CARMEN'S UNION

Workers Everywhere Told Of Struggle

Pullman Company has not yet made good their promise."

Some Pullman Maneuvers.

The DAILY WORKER learns that the Pullman Company, trying to get itself out of a sad mess with as good grace as possible, is seeking to transfer the out-of-town men to other car shops, and then switch the men already in these jobs to strikebreaking duty. In this way they hoped to dodge their responsibility of refunding the transportation money and at the same time making use of their old employes as scabs. But the men in the other Pullman shops hape flatly refused to scab on the strikers of the 110th street shop.

Foremen Can't Get Men Back.

Riveting foremen were active Saturday in trying to round up strikers to return to work, but had no success. Strikers told the DAILY WORKER that the straw bosses of the Pullman Company have good reason to be loyal to the Pullman Company.

"The bosses and foremen get big bonuses for speeding up the men," said one striker. "My boss got a monthly bonus of $58.00 for sweating a lot of production out of the men during March. This is all a part of the damnable speed-up system. The fat bonus that goes to the best slave-driving foremen does not come from the benevolent Pullman Company but is taken out of the pay of the men themselves. The wages of the men are reduced and the men speeded up, and then the foreman gets a part of the money which should go to the workers."

Paid for Slave Driving.

Another striker said, "The amount of the foreman's bonus is determined by the amount of hours he is able to get the workers to put in as well as the quantity of work produced by the men. That's why the foremen are always driving the men to the limit of their endurance. That is why we have to work Sundays and holidays many times in all kinds of weather. We work until we drop, not with an overtime scale, but at the regular piece work scale, and the foreman gets about half of the extra overtime rate to which we are entitled."

Carmen Aid Strikers.

John Holmgren, the strike leader, showed the DAILY WORKER a letter he had received from Distirte No. '1 of his organization, the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen in St. Paul, which has jurisdiction over the car shops of twelve northwestern railroads. The letter said that the Hunt employment agency, of St. Paul, had called up the St. Paul headquarters of the Carmen's Union and had asked for workers to send to Pullman. The district officer of the union said that they would not supply men to act as strikebreakers. The Hunt Employment Agency declared that in asking for workers the Pullman Company had told them there was no labor trouble.

The carbuilders all over the country have been informed by their union to stay away from Pullman.

A resident of South Chicago, a riveter with 16 years' experience, told the strikers at their Saturday meeting that he worked for half a day until he learned that there was a strike. He said, "All the time I was in the shop, I was cutting out bad rivets that the inexperienced scabs had driven. On an incompleted car, I counted from four to six hundred bad rivets on each side of the car. In my opinion you men have already won your strike."

Read It in the Daily Worker.

This man said that many men who were working in the shops had found out about the strike by buying and reading the DAILY WORKER. He explained that the men were taken in a back gate so as to keep the men away from the pickets. Many of the men hired by the Pullman Company declare they heard of the strike vy the "picket cry" of the DAILY WORKER news agents, who call, "Read all about the Pullman strike in the DAILY WORKER."

HOLMGREN TELLS OF FIGHT TO CIVILIZE PULLMAN COMPANY

lished the eight hour day, time and one-half for over-time, increased wages and secured proper classification of employees, besides improving the working conditions 100 per cent.

The present strike of the riveters, buckers, heaters, fitters, reamers, vestibule and steel shop car building forces at Pullman was brought about by "Efficiency and Production Manager" Francis Gunn, who attempted to increase production by the simple process of cutting wages and telling the men to step harder on the gas. The fact is that Gunn had been let out by the Pullman Company some time ago for reasons that were not made public, but which the employes ascribe to the fact that "whenever Gunn comes around there is always trouble," due to his inefficiency as an efficiency shark.

The real causes leading to the suspension of work by the steel shop carmen can be ascribed to the operation of the Taylor system, a system of timing each operation with stop watches and gauging the price or rate of pay for the whole on the speed developed by the fastest men.

To develop more and more speed a system of bonus payment to the bosses is in operation, which gives them extra pay for pushing their men to the last ounce, making actual slave drivers of them.

Some of the younger men have tried to maintain the pace, but discovered that it always meant a reduction in wages, another scheme to secure production with absolutely no consideration for the life of the human being, profit being the main essential.

"Pullman Plan" a Fake Union.

To further enslave the employes, the management instituted what is termed the "Pullman Plan of Employee Representation," at the same time using every possible means to prevent any encroachment of bona fide labor unions, the active men being intimidated or discharged, while the notorious black list was swung as the big club and with some effect.

Under the provisions of the "company plan" President Carry placed his bosses, foremen, superintendents and vice presidents in equal numbers on the employes' committees, but permitted NO REPRESENTATION WHATEVER from the employes on the company committee, which was appointed by himself and responsible to only him. Its decisions were final.

President Carry of the Pullman Company acknowledges the right of the men to representation in accord with the law, but interprets this right to mean himself as the representative and final judge.

He says: "The act passed by Congress known as the 'Transportation Act, 1920,' provides that employers and employes shall exert every reasonable effort to adjust and settle their differences by conferences between themselves," and adds that the company plan has for its object the "settling promptly and fairly of all questions which arise as to wages, working conditions and such other matters as may be of importance to the welfare of the employes."

Bosses Supervise Meetings.

With the object of setting the employes' side of this controversy truthfully before the public, as well as the workers, the following facts are appended: By intensive pressure and loaded ballot boxes the straw bosses slipped over the adoption of the plan at a so-called election. Such meetings as are held in the shops are conducted under the direct supervision of the bosses, denying free expression of opinion by the employes.

With the object of creating interest in the company plan minor grievances were created and the employes induced to settle them thru the committee. On the question of wages, however, it was discovered that the company always adjusted the wage cuts on a sufficient percentage to permit a 50-50 split and still retain a juicy slice of the employes' earnings.

Wage Cuts Without Notice.

With the re-advent of "Efficiency Expert Gunn, this pretext was dispensed with and wage cuts ranging from 10 to 40 per cent put into effect without notice of any kind to the employes. The committee was sent to the management and informed by Gunn that "the cut was here to stay" and that if not accepted "they would have to go back to the days of the lash."

Numerous attempts to secure a fair hearing were made by the employes thru their committee before striking on April 14, and since that date. A communication was addressed to President Carry and a copy sent to Vice President Hungerford, requesting a conference, but the committee was advised over the telephone by Carry's secretary that "no reply was necessary."

Carry a Promise Breaker.

President Carry has failed to live up to his signed statement "to deal fairly and promptly" on differences which rise as to wages, working conditions and such other matters as may be of IMPORTANCE TO THE WELFARE OF THE EMPLOYES. The employes contend, and rightly so, that unjustly slashing their pay IS OF IMPORTANCE TO THEIR WELFARE. The company argued that living costs had gone down, basing this untruth doubtless on the slight reduction from the regular prices which the "company store" sells its goods for. This store handles practically everything, tho not always of the quality desired, but it pays back to the company a goodly share of the money paid so niggardly to its employes. Many of the employes live in company houses, hundreds of which are owned by Florence Pullman, whose husband is ex-Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, and may be remembered by many as the "gentleman farmer" who failed in securing the presidential nomination on the Republican ticket owing to certain "niggers-in-the-woodpile."

Big Departments Closing.

The wage cuts on the progressive schedule were so arranged that no two departments would be hit at the same time. This scheme had been a bear each year up to April, 1924. The limit of human endurance had been reached and the men revolted, their demand, then as now, being the restoration of their former schedule and adjustment of certain unfair conditions which officials have laughed off with contempt. Since April 14, when 500 men walked out, nearly 1,500 more have been added to the ranks, while entire departments have been compelled to lay off owing to the inability of the company to secure strike breakers who would stay under the rotten system in vogue.

Armed Guards—Peaceful Pickets.

Hundreds of police, plain clothes men and rifle squads have been in attendance; nearly ever street and intersection having its quota of armed guards. The picketing is proceeding peacefully and with success, hundreds of men being turned away after being advised of the strike.

Absolute misrepresentation of the condition existing in Pullman and lying promises of big pay brought many workers to this town, and in every instance the strikers have helped these men to the best of their ability and have placed at their disposal an attorney who is handling their demands for refunding of railroad fare and expenses incurred in coming to Pullman under false pretenses, being assured by the Pullman scab herders in outlying cities that "no labor trouble and no strike was in effect."

Workers Will Win Fight.

The fact that the company is still working on the same car started the week after April 14 and is now engaged in tearing it down owing to incompetent labor is an indication that the fight being made will be won by the strikers. Other departments are slated for a slash in pay should this strike be lost. Many are on the fence, ready to join; the entire plant in other departments being a restless, discontented mass.

On May 1 Florence Pullman boosted the rents in her hundreds of houses, which stunt goes very well with the wage slashes imposed upon the renters. If her husband expects to be nominated vice present by the Republican party this year much campaign money must be poured into the trough, and where is there a better scheme of raising money than cutting pay and raising rents, robbing the milk from workers' kids?

GUNS ASKED OF U. S. TO DOWN CUBAN REVOLT

Reactionary Junta Suppresses Papers

WASHINGTON, May 4.—The Cuban Government has asked the United States to sell it a large quantity of ammunition for use in quelling revolutionary disturbances in the island, it was learned at the State Department today.

Tho the amount the Cuban Government has asked for, was not revealed, it was indicated that it is prepared to spend about $400,000. Secretary of State Hughes has turned over the Cuban request to Secretary of War Meeks, to learn if it can be met. Weeks will take no action until Monday.

In making public the Cuban request, State Department officials expressed full confidence that the Zayas administration would be able to cope with the budding revolution in the islands.

All editions of the newspapers heraldo de Cuba and El Heraldo, were confiscated by police on the ground they contained exaggerated reports of the movement against the government of President Zayas.

It was reported the editor of Heraldo de Cuba will be deported as a "pernicious foreigner."

The government claimed the situation was "well in hand" and meagre reports reaching the capital indicated loyal troops were restoring order in the affected areas.

Troops still were mobilizing in the vicinity of Cienfuegos.

All indications lead to the belief that the present Cuban government can count on the full support of the Washington Coolidge administration. Recently there arose a serious disputes between a group of Cuban capitalist railway interests on one side and an American capitalist sugar shipping combine on the other. The latter, who are closely associated with the American Smelting and Refining Company and the United Fruit Company, appealed to Coolidge for help.

Colonel Tarafa was the leader of the Cuban capitalists. The American interests were dominated largely by the Boston financial clique, which always has the ready ear and the willing hand of Coolidge at its bequest. The administration settled the dispute by removing some of the most objectionable features of the Tarafa Railway Consolidation Bill and thus appeasing the sugar and shipping interests so close to the White House. Today, the administration is very anxious not to disturb this arrangement and considers every attack on the present Cuban government as an attack on the stability of this arrangement. Besides Colonel Tarafa also has some other American and even British capital behind him. The Washington government is anxious to avoid all further complications from this source at this time.

Chafe at Wall Street Tyranny.

An added reason for the readiness of the Wall Street government to save the present Cuban regime is to be found in the growing wave of unrest that is threatening to sweep the whole Latin and Central American region. Most of this difficulty arises from the fact that the various peoples and even certain competing capitalist interests are chafing under the yoke of the tyrannical governments set up by Washington in the Latin American countries. Thus the American-supported Fascist government in Peru, the Wall Street puppet governments in Venezuela and Bolivia, are in danger of being overthrown. The American cayitalists are anxious to stifle this protest movement and are therefore doing everything they possibly can to check unrest wherever it manifests itself in order to have the freest hand possible in their other international dealings. That accounts for their anxiety to liquidate the present Cuban revolt and to hasten the end of the rebellion in Honduras after their own agents manufactured the insurrection.

Spread The Strike!

This issue of the DAILY WORKER, with its special features about the Pullman strike, will reach thousands of workers in the big plant of the Pullman Company, at Pullman, Ill.

The slogan of this special drive, to all the workers still at their jobs in the Pullman shops, can only be, "SPREAD THE STRIKE."

* * * *

The strike must spread.

It must include all the workers. Not only the 15,000 in shops at Pullman, but also 5,000 more at the Pullman shops at Michigan City, Indiana.

* * * *

The few hundred workers on strike cannot win this battle for the many thousands against the entrenched Pullman Corporation. But the thousands, united, with one purpose, can win against the Pullman Co., and all the powers back of it. They can fight back the wage reductions that this big combination of dollars is seeking to impose upon its workers.

* * * *

The Pullman strike is a crucial one. Pullman, Ill., is a strategic point in the struggle of workers all over the country against wage reductions. The bosses have forced the issue at Pullman. The workers have taken up the challenge. If the bosses win at Pullman, Ill., then the campaign of wage reductions, aided by the growing industrial depression over the land, marches to victory over the nation. If the workers win at Pullman, Ill., as they must, then the bosses' efforts to slash wages receive an effective setback.

* * * *

It is well that there is but one union seeking to organize the men out on strike, and to win all those still at work for the organized labor movement.

The Brotherhood of Railway Carmen claims jurisdiction over the great majority of the thousands of workers in the Pullman shops. It is the union of all car workers.

The workers, therefore, need not be discouraged over the clashing of different unions. They can build their united, solid front in the ranks of the membership of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, a mighty army in the great transportation industry.

* * * *

The power of dollars is back of the Pullman Company. It is supported by the dollars of the railroad owners, the mine barons, the big bankers.

The power of great numbers is on the side of the strikers. These numbers must be enlisted in the union, organized, solidified. Scattered thousands are ineffective in any struggle. Only united numbers can turn back an assault and march on to triumph.

* * * *

Workers of the Pullman Shops!

Those of you who are not yet on strike!

Join the strike! Help spread the strike!

Build the united front of the thousands of workers fighting the wage reductions of the greedy Pullman Corporation.

The standard of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, tattered in many a hard-fought conflict against the enemies of labor, is flung to the breeze in another great industrial struggle, this time in your midst, Workers of Pullman!

Rally beneath its challenging folds.

Spread the Strike! March on to victory thru the irresistible power of your united numbers.

LYNCHING PLAN OF K. K. K.'S FOR MAY 1 SPEAKERS

Sheriffs Save Swabeck And Mass From Mob

BENTON, Ill., May 4.—The mayor of Christopher, Ill., and his Ku Klux friends nearly put a bloody blot on May Day in their town. They prevented the scheduled meeting in the park and stopped the meeting after it had adjourned to the Miners' Hall by arresting Barney Mass, organizer for the Y. W. L., and Arne Swabeck, organizer for the Workers Party, who were the chief speakers.

Ready to Lynch.

County sheriffs took Mass and Swabeck from the town of Christopher and brought them here to the county seat. The Ku Kluxers followed and when the officials' machine stuck in the mud the Ku Klux leader came up with a rope and a gun and demanded that Swabeck and Mass be turned over to him.

One of the sheriffs quickly seized the Kluxer's gun and turned it against the K. K.'s chest. The man turned about to find five other guns at his back. He gladly withdrew his request.

The sheriffs then hurried their prisoners on to town, where the men were kept under arrest all day. They were released at night when the state's attorney became convinced that they had not advocated the "overthrow of the government by force and violence."

Many coal miners had come into Christopher to celebrate May Day, but the mayor's police prevented them from entering the park.

Mayor Won't Hear Bolsheviks.

"We ain't goin' to allow any damned Bolshevik speeches or May Day celebration anywhere in Christopher," was the mayor's ultimatum.

Barney Mass opened the meeting in Miners' Hall with quotations from the United States Constitution, but the guarantees of free speech meant nothing to the Christopher righteous, and they insisted on the sheriffs' arresting Mass and Swabeck. One of the Ku Kluxers wanted to take Mass out to "beat the hell out of him," but the sheriffs objected and took the men off to this town. They were held al day to prevent their holding any more meetings and to save them from snipers watching the roads.

Zeigler and Johnstone City May Day meetings were without their speakers because of the Christopher disturbance.

GENERAL STRIKE IN ARGENTINE TIES UP COUNTRY

All Workers Join To Kill Pension Bill

BUENOS, AIRES, May 4.—Argentine's general strike in protest against the government's pension bill is effective thruout the country. Everything is tied up. Labor organizations, anarchists, socialists and Communists have effected a united front to oppose enforcement of the measure which became effective on May 2.

The bill would allow all workers to retire on a pension from a government fund after 25 years of service. But the joker in the measure is that the workers themselves must provide the money out of which the pension is to be paid. The workers are docked 5 per cent of their weekly wages. The docking is done by the boss. The workers have no objection to a pension bill provided the government and the capitalists pay for it. Even some of the employers are opposed to it because it gets them into conflict with their employes.

The explosion of a bomb in a railway coach caused much excitement in the capital.

The general strike in Mendoza, western terminus of the Trans-Argentine line and transfer point for the Trans-Andean railway to Chile, was reported to have forced closing of all business houses. Rosario, big cattle and grain shipping point near the mouth of the River Platte, also was tied up.

Many business houses in Buenos Aires were closed today and will not reopen until the outcome of the struggle is indicated.

It is understood legal advisors of the labor organizations are preparing to attack the pensions law as unconstitutional. Labor organizations, anarchists, socialists and Communists have effected a coalition to oppose enforcement of the measure, which became effective this morning. Extensive demonstrations against the law were held in Buenos Aires last night, big crowds marching down the Avenida de Mayo from the congressional buildings to the plaza fronting the financial district.

NEW YORK, May 4.—Study of occupational diseases for which workers receive compensation has been begun by a medical committee appointed by the industrial hygiene division, New York state labor department.

'STRIKE' WRITTEN OVER PULLMAN COMPANY TOW

Eager Youngsters A Big Battle

skyline.

The tallest building on the east horizon is the huge Armour gr elevator where the dust explosion curred less than a year ago. To t south are the low buildings of t new Ford plant and smoking stac of steel mills. To the north are t Hegewisch car shops where t workers are striking, on and off, mu of the time.

Pullman houses along the co pany's streets are almost all of kind. All red brick and rubbin shoulders with one another witho a break between them. Even th hotel is old-fashioned and somewh sprawling with its porches. It, to is red-brick and it is called th "Florence" after the daughter of o George M., who is now wife of e Governor Lowden. Florence ow most of the stock of the company an tries to finance her husband's poli cal adventures with what she ca skip from the wages of her employe

In one of the houses sold by th company a group of Ukrainians liv There is a jolly plump and rudd young woman who cooks deliciou meals for the men. She looks capabl for all the work there is to do, bu one guesses she has little enough tim to herself.

Lively Youngsters Sell Papers.

The house is full of childre whether they all live there or no Such alert and eager youngster They want a Young Worker to hel them form a Junior Section. The li tle boys are enthusiastically sellin the DAILY WORKER to the men a the Pullman plant. They tell thei buyers, "Don't be a scab!" and the run circles around the dicks who tr to keep them away from the gates a the men come out.

The little girls show us what they learn at school and tell about all the Esthers they know, "Larsen, Bergstrom, Hegstrom," and others with Scandinavian surnames. One talks about the fine concerts she has heard in Chicago and about the May Day program.

The boys run out to get their papers when it is nearly time for the evening whistle to blow.

Thousands of workers dash thru the gates. Each must show his badge as he leaves; going in, too. Many of them run to the waiting street cars. Others shuffle along less energetically. Some drag their weary bodies breaking under the terrific pace the company has developed for them. Many stop to buy the DAILY WORKER. Only a few scoff at it. Some have their eyes on the dream of a pension.

At the main gate a group of pickets are stationed. Rough and ready workingmen; most of them young still. A few friends from the inside stop to tell them how little work is going on inside.

"If you fellows can hold out, we'll all be out in a few days. Company'll have to close down."

"Can't get our men out now. They haven't been cut yet. Company's holding off. We were slated to get it next."

Scabs Get Theirs.

The pickets have to wait and watch closely for the scabs. Some slip out with the mass of the men; some wait until everyone else has left; just as they come in earliest in the morning, at five o'clock. But the pickets are on hand whatever the time. They warn the scabs. Usually the scabs take heed. If they don't at the first warning, the second is more convincing.

The sidewalk is painted with signs: "Are you men or are you fish?" "Strike on. Don't Scab."

But some of the men brought in can't read, and some are desperate from lack of work and lack of class consciousness. The pickets are rapidly educating them.

The detectives and police are busy, eyeing every one; patrolling the lawn.

The company is still cocky. It has had comparatively little "labor trouble" for long. It has been grinding the men more and more; speeded them up to a point of exquisite torture. It cannot push them further, but it has forgotten that they are men, after all, and not super-efficient machines. Even the most skillfully adjusted machines break down if their efficiency is over-estimated and they are pushed beyond their limit.

The men responded with a spontaneous walkout to the company's last effort to speed them still more. For years the Pullman Company has been able to give its workers a slashing wage cut and tell them to make up the difference by "wasting less time," speeding up, until the pace they have set has become the fastest in the country. The men always finally accepted before. This time the company was fooled.

Fortunately, this time the spontaneous demonstration of the men was capitalized into an organization. Something big may result. The company has had no upheaving disturbance for nearly thirty years. The '94 strike was one to remember. This may be, too, before it is thru.

Heard on the Pullman Strike Front

By ART SHIELDS.

"Say, Mister, let me see that strike paper?" called a woman's voice from a travel-stained auto parked on 111th street in front of the employment office of the Pullman Steel Car Company.

The DAILY WORKER reporter handed her his copy and she went on:

"When my man brought that paper home telling about the strike, I said, 'You'll just have to quit, Sam. No one in my family ever scabbed yet.'

Busted, But Won't Scab.

"You see, it was this way," she continued. "We've just come from Cleveland where he lost his job as a riveter when the plant shut down. We were busted and when we see the notice in the Tribune that Pullman wanted riveters, he got the job. The company never said there was a strike, but coming out that night he bought this paper and he surely won't scab.

"Now he's gone in there to get his money and to bawl out that employment manager for lying to him that way. My husband always talks loud anyhow. He's hard of hearing from the riveting."

"I bawled them out too," broke in a husky fellow that had joined the pickets on the line. "They never told me there was a strike either, when I hired out. That scab herder, Baxter, in Detroit, sent me here."

Baxter, a former Pullman freight foreman, shipped a lot of men from Detroit, but there are only two left out of fifty he sent. And Baxter had to beat it from Detroit when the gang began drifting back there with blood in their eyes to ask what the hell he meant by telling them there was no strike.

Not a Tame Bunch.

Riveters and reamers and buckers up are not scabs but neither are they a tame bunch. And the boys at Pullman are thoroly aroused at the swindle game the Pullman company has played on them by bring in hundreds of workers from Iowa, Michigan and Ohio with the lying assurance that there "is no strike."

* * *

"Lad," said an old Pullman veteran to the reporter: "This is SOME strike. It's the best wallop this company got since 1894. This forty per cent wage cut was one too many."

The old man chuckled as he read his DAILY WORKER.

Boycott On Tribune.

"That's telling it to them. Wish we had a paper like the DAILY WORKER in the big fight with 'Gene Debs against this company. The Tribune and the Inter-Ocean and the other papers were so rotten that the newsboys of Chicago wouldn't sell them. The Times was the only paper that was any good then. But it wasn't a union paper like this one."

The old man stepped off towards his home. He doesn't work any more. No, he isn't a pensioner. He got in wrong with the company and was laid off before his pension time came.

More about pensioners a little later. It was lunch hour then. A murmur of conversation from a knot of workers near by suddenly rose to a louder pitch:

"I say its a g — —d — — — shame to make that old boy work. He's got one leg in the grave."

"He almost fell off and got killed yesterday," said another.

They were talking about a pensioner—one of the beneficiaries of the boasted Pullman pension system, who had been compelled to come back to work during the strike.

Friends In Wall Street Only.

These are the means the Pullman Company is using to try to break the strike: Luring workers in from other towns by assurances that there is no strike and by making decrepit pensioners work. The boys from outside quit when they learn there is a strike and the old pensioners are just going thru the motions. George M. Pullman's successors have few friends today, outside of Wall Street.

COOLIDGE TO PLAN TO SCRAP NAVAL PACT

Want U. S. Navy To Lead British

WASHINGTON, May 4.—The possible necessity of a new naval construction program involving enormous expenditures today engaged the attention of members of the House naval affairs committee.

So far this session, the committee has reported construction bills authorizing the building of eight cruisers at $11,000,000 each and the reconditioning of six first line ships at a cost of over $18,000,000. But the report of Admiral R. E. Coontz that the navy was in many fundamental respects far below arms pact strength, has awakened the committee to the possible requirement of a thorogoing general construction program.

To Elevate Turrets.

As the first step in this, Representative Britten, ranking republican of the committee, yesterday introduced a bill authorizing $6,500,000 to elevate the turret guns of 13 battleships. As the next step, he prepared today a resolution providing for a complete investigation of the state of the navy by the committee.

Such an investigation, he said, would continue for several months and result in a report on just what the navy required to bring it back to par. This, he said, he had been informed, might require a construction program costing "a great deal of money."

Before preparing his plan for the gun elevation and general investigations, Britten, accompanied by Chairman Madden of the Appropriations committee, he conferred with President Coolidge. Britten said the President approved of the investigation outlined in Britten's resolution.

Sinclair Now Needs U. S. Recognition Of Russia For Oil Rights

PEKING, China, May 4.—If the United States does not recognize Soviet Russia within five years the Sinclair Oil Company may lose its right to exploit Sakhalin Island, according to the agreement signed.

Japanese military authorities are holding the island at present and have prevented the American engineer and the geologist from starting work for Sinclair. The agreement with Russia provides that half of the island must be prospected by August of this year and another quarter surveyed and well drilled within another year. An extension of time will be granted if the Soviets' lack of control in the island delays operations.

Conciliator Offers Democratic Wages To Ice Cream Men

A Federal commissioner of conciliation, Benjamin A. Marshman, has proposed a solution to the ice cream drivers who went on strike. Marshman's plan is to pay the lowest paid workers more at the expense of the better paid. That is, slice the wages of the top men to add to the wages of the under men.

The 350 strikers were to act on the proposal last night. Twenty-six manufacturers' plants are closed by the strike.

Fink Agent Throws Scare Into Chamber Of Commerce Men

CLEVELAND, May 4.—Private detective agencies specializing in labor espionage are picking Cleveland business men as easy marks.

Twenty-five thousand paid labor agitators and 611 radical labor journals are inciting the working men of America to red revolution, according to S. F. Fannon, head inquisitor for the Sherman Service, an industrial espionage agency.

Fannon, who came down from Boston to throw a scare into the Cleveland Chamber of commerce, yesterday, alleged that the only way for business men to stop this terrible menace is to contribute heavily to "industrial agencies" which will educate the workers into open shop contentment. Employers who fail to do, this waste 25c out of every dollar paid for wages, Fannon declared as he passed the hat.

SO. DAK. PLANS TO SEND 100 TO ST. PAUL MEETING

Many Going To Big Convention By Flivver

the June 17th convention a great demonstration against capitalist domination. This later view is well expressed by Frank E. Johnesse, chairman of the Progressive Party of Idaho, who says, "We are with you heart and soul in the cause. Idaho will be there with a full delegation. We sincerely trust that the sixteen railroad organizations will decide to endorse our platform and candidates, and come out for its support. With these organizations in line we feel optimistic enough to believe that we stand a very good show of electing our candidate for president this fall." J. W. Houchin, chairman of the Farmer-Labor Party of Oklahoma, expresses a similar sentiment when he says, "We will certainly have delegates to your convention. The C. P. P. A. leaders have done themselves no good by their attack on your convention."

New State Parties.

The circulation of the call for the June 17th convention, as well as the "Help Build a Mass Farmer-Labor Party" leaflet circulated by the arrangements committee, has started a national agitation for the building of state and city Farmer-Labor parties. Letters announcing the calling of state conventions for the purpose of building state parties and sending delegates to the St. Paul gathering have been received from Illinois, New York, California, Rhode Island, Ohio and Oklahoma.

Credentials are now being received daily from local unions, co-operatives, and farmer groups. Altho the last of the calls will not be in the mails until the end of this week, and the convention still being six weeks away, thirty-six credentials have been received in the office of the national committee. The states represented by these credentitals are Illinois, Iowa, Louisiana, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New York, Rhode Island, Texas and Wisconsin.

Robbers Trim Union Treasurer.

ST. LOUIS, May 4.— George F. Dielenhein, treasurer, Carpenters' Local No. 73, was robbed by highwaymen while enroute home from union meeting this week and relieved of $740. All of the money except $45 belonged to the union. The sluggers left no clew.

THE POWER COLUMN

Renewed Subscription Activity Marks Half-Way Mark in Campaign

Militants Are Pushing Ahead For Leadership.

The first big organized campaign to secure subscription for THE DAILY WORKER is half over. If it is true that history for American labor is being made in this drive (and it is true) then the end of the first part of the drive marks at least a semi-historic period. In the history of the American labor movement have been written the names, the loyal and able comrades who have made it their business to make the DAILY WORKER grow.

Look over the names that appear on the Honor Roll in this Power Column. Many of the names have appeared in this list of merit before. Most of them will appear again. Look back in your old copies of THE DAILY WORKER boosters slacken up. Subscriptions have been coming They are the ones who have seized the tremendous opportunity which THE DAILY WORKER offers to all true militants,—the opportunity to make converts to the left labor movement by putting THE DAILY WORKER into the hands of the American toilers, by securing subscriptions so that the education and information which THE DAILY WORKER has to offer is brought into their lives every day.

* * * *

May Day made us miss our regular Power Column which was scheduled to appear last Friday. But it didn't make the work of THE DAILY WORKER boosters slacken up. Subscription have been coming into THE DAILY WORKER office so fast since May Day that there hasn't been time to compile the Honor Roll up to date. The week prior to May Day was no slouch week, either. Cities which have been lagging have reached out and stepped up a few notches in the race for the top. Cities which have already proved their prowess have added new achievements to their records.

Superior, Wisc., after a steady climb to the top was the only one of the leaders to fail to keep up the good pace. A scoreless week resulted in its being forced to share first place with Ambridge, Pa., which moved up from eight position. Miles City, Mont. and Warren, Ohio are waging a bitter struggle between themselves with Warren having a little the best of the argument for the week, but still a few points in the rear. In the meantime Toledo, Ohio is steadily and surely closing the distance between itself and the leaders and is threatening to win not only the prize for cities of its class but also to top the entire list.

Within the limits of many cities private campaigns are being conducted to determine the champion DAILY WORKER booster of the bailiwick. In Toledo, Comrade Tarvitt has posted in the headquarters which serves DAILY WORKER and the Workers Party, the Toledo Honor Roll which bears the names of those in Toledo who have brought honor to themselves in service to the DAILY WORKER. Each sub counts a marker for the booster who secures it. Red stars are scored for single subs and red flags for subs in greater number. Comrade Reynolds of Detroit is planning a similar arrangement. It is no mean honor to be placed on the list of those who make the DAILY WORKER grow, as those who are wise in the labor movement are coming to realize more and more forcefully.

Give These Boosters The Once Over.

Comrade Scarville comes across with thirteen news wallops at capitalism adding to his already enviable record. Comrade Bimba outshadows Babe Ruth with eleven new subs during the past few days and comes near swiping the individual leadership from Comrade Reynolds. Read the names and if yours isn't among them, jerk yourself loose and put yourself on record as a real militant.

Fifteen Bucks Yearly Might Feed Brute In War Days; Not Now

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BROOKFIELD, Mass., May 4. — Unless their wage is raised to $25 a year the 18 firemen of Brookfield will strike on May 5. They maintain that the present salary of $15 a year may be adequate in some places but they can prove it will not support a married man with family in this city.

Too many bosses is another grievance put forward by the eighteen privates, who object to the eight fire marshals. The latter get all the glory and carry all the horns, while the irate eighteen do all the work.

Want Dutch Farmers to Come.

AUBURN, Wash.—Colonies of farmers from Holland to develop western Washington are approved by the Central Labor Union of Auburn. The labor body has notified Dutch representatives here that it is anxious to cooperate in getting desirable immigrants to settle in the vicinity. The representatives are invited to meet the union and nearby farm granges to present their plans for putting Dutch farm families on the land.

Actors' Union In California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—The coming Actors' Equity strike has spread to San Francisco, with the announcement of Thomas Wilkes, manager of the Alcazar as well as of other theaters along the coast, that he is opposed to the closed shop demand of the Equity Assn., and that he has cancelled all engagements with Equity players. California is settling down to a probable absence of "road shows" from May 31 on.

French Lose Russian Business

MOSCOW, May 4.— (Rosta News Agency)—A license given some time ago to a big French firm for the import into Russia of 50,000 kilogrammes of dyestuffs, has now been cancelled, while the right to import the same quantity of dye stuffs has been granted to a German concern. The papers remark that this action is "one of the results of the policy of the French Government."

LABOR ASSEMBLY HEARS FACTS OF PULLMAN STRIKE

Delegates Invited To Assist Workers

"Strike in Pullman," the issue which electrified the Chicago Trades Assembly in 1894, was again raised at the Chicago Federation of Labor meeting yesterday when John Holmgren, geenral vice president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, told the delegates of the present strike situation in the Pullman car shops.

"The corporation that was responsible for the first injunction against workingmen is trying similar tactics again," Holmgren began, and related how the spontaneous strike of 500 men on April 14 has grown to a strike of several thousand men today and will continue to grow thru the efforts of the men out.

Production Stopped.

Holmgren said that the ordinary production of the Pullman works was four passenger cars per day. Not one steel underframe has been made since April 14, Holmgren stated, because these foundation builders are striking and the others have nothing to build on.

Thru the work of the pickets, Holmgren said, not more than five gangs were in the steel car shops on Saturday afternoon.

"First give them a demonstration of what solidarity means," is Holmgren's slogan for the strike now on. He did not try to push organization work too quickly, he told the federation, because there are 16 different nationalities involved in the strike. He wanted to keep them together against the boss first to prove what solidarity wil do for workers and then show them how the union carries on the organization begun informally.

Tells Delegates to Come.

"We'd be more than glad to have the presence of any of you who can take the time to come," Holmgren told the delegates. "Just come to the strike headquarters at Stancik's Hall, on 115th street."

RUMHOUNDS COULD LIVE CHEAPLY IN MAINE IN GOOD OLD DAYS

PLAISTOW, N. H.—What it cost to live in the good old days is recorded in a price list copied from an old ledger kept in 1822 by Samuel Adams in his store at Castine, Me., a copy of which is in the possession of Warrenzo K. Seaver of Plaistow. The Adams ledger records the payment of $100 for the annual salary of Adams' son-in-law, a clerk in his store. Another item is a receipt from the Quincy house, Boston, dated June, 1824, for three and one-half days' board and lodging, $4.30. At the Adams shipyard at Castine a score of men were each paid a dollar a day for 12 hours' work. The master shipbuilder received $1.25 a day.

Commodity prices listed from this ledger include: Turkey, 4½c per lb.; beef, 2¾c per lb.; chicken, 5c per lb.; silver thimble, 4c; goose, 23c; one quart New England rum, 9c; men's shoes, $1 per pair; one-half cord hardwood, 83c; butter, 9c; bushel of potatoes, 9c; silk, 50c per yard; cheese, 7c per lb.

DAWES PLAN TO MAKE GERMANY VASSAL STATE

Communists Denounce Wall Street Control

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER
(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

BERLIN.—Germany is to become an economic colony of the Entente in much the same manner in which the "republics" of Central America are financial colonies of Wall street, according to the plan doped out by Gen. Charles G. Dawes and his committee of experts, who have been determining these months what Germany can and should pay in the way of reparations. And, just as in Central America, it is the native worker who, in the last analysis, is footing the bill, so, too, the workers of Germany will pay for the damages caused by the old imperial regime.

Workers Will Pay.

To understand what the probable adoption of the Dawes committee report by the German government means, it is of the utmost importance that one recall the recent joint session of the industrialists and employers' federations of Germany at Berlin, on March 27. Their public meeting was preceded by a secret session, at which, it now leaks out, the chairman, Dr. Kurt Sorge of the Krupp concern, made the following statement:

"In principle the fulfillment policy of Wirth was correct. But Wirth's home policy was wrong. We, too, must stand for the fulfillment policy, but only under certain conditions. These condtions are the following: The political influence of the workers' trade unions must disappear entirely. The federal government must under no conditons deal henceforth with the unions. The eight-hour day must be struck off the statute books. Collective bargaining on the part of different unions must be prevented and the government's right to arbitrate in labor disputes diminished.

"All undertakings of the state, especially the federal railways, must be turned over to private capital. German industry is ready to make sacrifices only then, if these conditions are absolutely accepted. It can turn its attention to foreign questions only if it is certain that the domestic policy is absolutely clear."

Privately Owned Railroads.

The Dawes report fills in beautifully with this plan. First and foremost, the long cherished dream of the industrialists will come true and the railways will go over into private ownership. It matters relatively little that a majority of the stock is to be national property—the main thing from the industrialists' point of view is that a big step is taken in the direction of wiping out such beginnings of socialization as have existed.

Secondly, the Dawes committee in no sense intimate that the French troops of occupation are to be withdrawn from the Rhine and Ruhr valleys. They are to be left there, whereas the management of industry is to be turned back to the German owners. The German workers are exceedingly apprehensive that this merely means that the industrial overlords will have the French army on hand as a convenient instrument for stopping "disorders" in case the German workers are unwilling to give up the eight-hour day and the principles of collective bargaining.

Germany Mortgaged.

Thirdly, Germany is to be weighted down with an enormous load of obligations in the way of reparation payments. These obligations are to be met partly by indirect taxation, and partly by a first mortgage of 10 per cent to be placed upon German industrialists, like the industrial barons of other countries, have always managed to throw a large part of their burdens upon those who work for them, by holding them down to starvation wages and by increasing their working hours, and there is no reason to hope that they will change their tactics this time. On the contrary, their pronouncement of March 27, quoted above leads one to infer the very opposite.

Socialists For Dawes.

The reception of the Dawes report by the working class press is interesting. The "Rote Fahne," organ of the Communist party, calls it "the war plan of German industry," and insists that it will mean the enslavement of the working class. The "Vorwaerts," organ of the Socialists party, contends that the acceptance of the Dawes proposals by Germany would mean the invoking the lesser of two evils, the bigger evil being a continuation of the Ruhr fight. While expressing the fear that the demands upon Germany may be greater than she can meet, the "Vorwaerts" regards as hopeful the fact that the economic unity of Germany is to be re-established, so that all of Germany, and not merely the Rhine-Ruhr region, is to carry the burden.

Negroes Killed in Storm.

More than a dozen homes were wrecked. The flimsy character of the huts in which these poverty-stricken colored workers lived caused them to collapse readily.

HUGE ST. PAUL CONVENTION WITH THOUSANDS OF DELEGATES SEEN BY ORGAN OF ILLINOIS MINERS

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 4.—The Illinois Miner, official organ of District 12, United Mine Workers, predicts a successful convention of between 5,000 and 10,000 delegates at St. Paul on June 17, where the national Farmer-Labor movement will meet to name presidential and vice-presidential candidates.

"The prospects for launching a successful Farmer-Labor party at the June 17 convention at St. Paul grows brighter," says the Illinois Miner in a page one editorial.

"Despite the warnings of the heads of various labor internationals, the prospects are that between five and ten thousand delegates will attend.

Actors' Lockout Nears.

NEW YORK.—The union-breaking organization of theatrical managers is split wide open, while the Actors' Equity Association, American Federation of Labor, is united to the last member. These are the lines of battle drawn up for the lockout in American theatres, June 1.

ILLINOIS STATE FARMER-LABOR CONVENTION CALLED FOR MAY 18TH

By ARNE SWABECK.
District Organizer, Workers Party, District No. 8.

Following the example of the state of Illinois, the Illinois workers and farmers are now moving forward towards independent political action. A convention composed of farmer-labor groups will be held in Peoria, Ill., May 18th, and a call issued in the name of the Provisional Committee composed of well known labor representatives all over the state has gone out to local unions, farmers' organizations and other working class bodies, as well as political groups in the state of Illinois. All have been invited without qualifications or conditions to participate in this convention. Those who refuse to take part no matter for what reason will have to take the responsibility for any continued disunity of the forces of the farmers and workers.

Such unity of all the forces of the farmers and workers is sorely needed, as the masses by their lack of political unity have been powerless in the face of the united forces of the employing class.

Throughout the state, the basic manufacturing industries are operated on the "Open Shop" Plan with injunctions being used against any attempt to organize the workers. Injunctions have become an everyday occurrence against labor unions striking to better their conditions.

While Governor Small in an effort to line up the labor vote has dangled the bait of anti-injunction legislation before the workers, yet in view of his past record, it immedately becomes clear that this is only lip service against the injunction and as long as the old Capitalist Parties are used by men professing to be friendly to the workers, it is the capitalistic class which will dictate to and lay down the program for these men to follow. Governor Small has always been a warm supporter of capitalism, and its effort to crush the resisitance of the workers, and to support him means to support the existing capitalist regime.

During Governor Small's administration the republican and democratic politicians united to defeat the Woman's eight hour law. During his regime the Lunden-Thompson combination in Chicago, created the Dailey Commission for no other purpose than to persecute and help destroy the existing labor unions, while simultaneously strike breakers were given police protection on construction jobs. Some labor leaders in spite of his effort to crush the workers are openly out boosting for Small. Others, masquerading as progressives are doing everything in their power to nullify the formation of a real workers movement. As a result of this situation the employers are in control and are using every agency of the government to enrich themselves. The old parties are both alike in everything but name. They are "Tea Pot Domers" both in Springfield and in Washington.

The gang in Springfield have stolen millions of dollars out of the state treasury. The gang in Washington have sold out to the oil crooks, aircraft company's bootleggers and any one else who has the money. Today it is necessary to make a new deal. The issue of supreme importance is for the workers and farmers to take up an aggressive struggle against the corrupt capitalist government, not only at the polls in the coming November elections, but a continuous struggle for the improvement of their conditions and for the final doing away with exploitation and to eliminate poverty.

The Convention in Peoria on May 18th, has been called for the purpose of swinging the State of Illinois into line for the National United Farmer-Labor Campaign at the elections in November, 1924. This convention will elect representatives for the June 17 Convention at St. Paul, at which a National Platform will be adopted and Presidential Candidates named. The Peoria convention will also nominate a ticket for the coming state elections and organize for a monster campaign on a Class Farmer-Labor basis. The Workers' Party throughout the state of Illinois is lending its full strength to make the convention a success. Every branch of the labor movement should be urged to send delegates to the Peoria convention. Workers Party members and militant workers in general should support this convention call in their organizations and see that delegates are sent, no mater how much strength the reactionary elements may have.

The millitants are the only elements fighting for a real united farmer-labor movement and they are also the ones who can put it across.

SOVIET MAY DAY GREETINGS SENT AMALGAMATED

Lauds American Union For R. A. I. C.

NEW YORK, May 4.—The Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America is praised for its services to Soviet Russia in a May Day message received from B. Bograchow, President of the All-Russian Clothing Syndicate. Bograchow was formerly a member of the union in Baltimore and has since risen to the leadership of the Russian Clothing industry. The All-Russian Clothing Syndicate is the state enterprise in which the RAIC (Russian-American Industrial Corporation) has invested, some 5,000 American workers having already loaned money to Russia in this way. The RAIC paid its first dividend last December.

Bograchov, in his message to the Amalgamated, reviews the events subsequent to the November revolution in Russia when the workers seized the factories. After sketching the work of the union and the industry during the course of the civil war he shows how with the end of the attacks from foreign powers and the inauguration of the NEP (New Economic Policy) the clothing industry undertook its own reconstruction on a solid economic foundation in accordance with the available technical and financial resource and market conditions. Then referring directly to the assistance rendered by the American union, he says,

U. S. Immigrants' Work.

"The influence of the Amalgamated on the development of the clothing industry in Russia has been felt from the very moment the Russian needleworkers began to organize the industry. The first inspiration to conduct the clothing industry in Russia along American lines came from an immigrant group of Amalgamated members. Those comrades imbued with the spirit of the Amalgamated and trained in the Amalgamated methods of struggle, now applied their American experiences to the problem of building up the Russian clothing industry."

The Russian tailors, according to Bograchov, will never forget the aid rendered them by the Amalgamated when it shipped a boatload of machinery for the new clothing industry.

25 Per Cent Production Gain.

Bograchov reports that the clothing industry in Russia is now making very satisfactory headway and is assured of a splendid future. He pointed out that the Syndicate expected to pay a higher dividend in the near future, which will, of course, be reflected in a payment to the shareholders of the RAIC. The Clothing Syndicate now operates some 34 factories with 18,000 workers. Its total output of goods for the current year will reach over 3,000,000 pieces, an increase of 25 per cent over last year.

"Higher Learning" Of 34 Methodist Students Stopped

DALLAS, Texas, May 4.— Thirty four students of the Southern Methodist University who figured in the "wilderness dance" at Savage Lake or helped publish "The Dinkey," campus scandal sheet, were dismissed today by the faculty.

Nine of the students including four editors of "The Dinkey," were expelled, 25 others who contributed to the outlaw publication or participated in the drunken lake revel were indefinitely suspended.

In addition the faculty discipline committee placed 22 students on probation for the remainder of their scholastic careers.

PAINTERS' STRIKE ON SECOND MONTH IN LOS ANGELES

80 Per Cent Of Bosses Granted Demands

(Special to The Daily Worker)

LOS ANGELES, May 4.—The painters and paperhangers of Los Angeles are entering the second month of their strike for an increase in wages. Their only demand is $9 a day while all over the country the painters are getting $10, $11 and $12 dollars a day.

About 80 per cent of the employers granted the demand. Seven hundred men are working already under the new wage scale. Nearly 500 are registering regularly and receive their strike benefits. Many of the strikers left for the eastern cities where wages and conditions are better and the cost of living is much lower. Many more are withdrawing their small savings and applying for clearance cards to leave the city.

Too Fair To Bosses.

This strike was ordered by a referendum vote of the members to take place in August of last year. The employers then claimed that they cannot afford to pay a higher wage as their work was figured according to the $8 wage scale. It was the desire for over zealous fairness to the employers that postponed the strike until April the first. The employers were given notice nine months in advance to arrange their business affairs accordingly.

Playing fair with the employers is very often unfair to organized labor. The painters are now confronted with the over zealous unfairness of the same employers who pleaded their fairness. Only 80 per cent of the employers granted the demand. The remaining 20 per cent nearly all of them the big concerns, are stubborn in their insistance on non-union conditions. They are exerting their efforts to enlist the co-operation of the smaller builder and contractor for a prolonged fight against the union.

Untrained Scabs Prove Costly.

The stubborn employers are suffering heavy losses through their unskilled strike breakers. The real mechanic is too independent to be a scab. The bosses have therefore to borrow help from each other, but they can not go far with such help. It is only to frighten the strikers by making them believe that the work is going on as usual.

Dissatisfaction is rapidly destroying the bosses' unity. A break in their ranks already started over the tactics and manner of handling the strike situation. Very important developments are expected in the near future.

Miners "Stabilize" Industry By Quitting Closed Down Camps

By Barney Mass.

BENTON, Ill., May 4.—"Am watching the noon train," is the remark to be heard in the mining camps here. Particularly is this the case with the young. The old home town seems deserted and presents a different sight than the case was when the mines were working five to six days per week. Few miners left either go fishing and indulge in other pursuits to kill time and make their position somewhat bearable. When asked what he will do in the large city, the miner replies: "Hell, who can stand it here, would rather be dead than trudge along as I have been doing it for the past two months."

The miner's home has been split up, members of the family leaving for different parts of the country, to try and secure other employment in order to live. Many will never come back. We find new faces appear when the whistle blows for work.

On the other hand we find the mine superintendents and bosses becoming real estate dealers, or opening other kinds of business, when the whistle no longer blows. They are informed in advance and have ample time to make arrangements prior to closing of the mine. The reactionary union officials continue to wear the seats of their pants, sitting in their offices. They are helping Lewis to "stabilize the industry,' at the expense of the miner.

Mourns the Hand That Fed Him.

WASHINGTON, May 4. — When Boss Murphy of Tammany Hall died, Senator Copeland of New York arose in the senate and announced the fact, describing the boss as a man of high character, generous and fine impulses, and his passing as a loss to his city, the state and the nation.

Iron Workers Demand Increase of Wages; Strike Authorized

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, May 4.—A May Day strike continued until the employers meet their demands has been authorized by an almost unanimous vote of the International Association of Bridge Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers, local No. 40, New York. The union, with about 2500 workers affected, has requested the Iron league of New York, and the Building Trades Employers' Association, to grant a raise from $10.50 a day to $12. Helpers getting $7 are asking $8. The union demands have been ignored.

A union shop agreement is desired by the men. They are satisfied to work the present eight hours a day. Union officials claim practically a 100 per cent organization in New York.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL WORKERS FIRED TO "Y. M." MUSIC

Entertainments Hand In Hand With Layoffs

By D. K. Mintilogli.

Not long ago I was employed in a railroad shop of the Illinois Central R. R. Co. There we had two Y. M. C. A. secretaries who gave us all kinds of entertainments every noon hour. One day they had on the program, lessons on the Bible; then music, volleyball, and so on—all these to make the boys forget their miseries, they said.

One Monday I remember the Y. M. C. A. secretary came around a little sooner than usual, announcing to us that he would have some nice music for the noon of that day and wishing that we all participate.

Music First.

Too bright looking Italian girls came, one with a violin and the other with an accordion and started to play. All of a sudden the poisonoed air of the shop was filled with the sweet melody of the music. The poor, unconscious workers who had formed a circle around the musicians were over-enthusiastic; one could see them smiling and keeping time. Others hailed, others handclapped and others danced.

But the time came that they had to go to work again. The music stopped, and a tall gray-headed man jumped on a carpenter's bench—he was the president of the scab union.

"Boys," he said "give me your attention one minute. I have something to announce to you." All kept quiet.

Then Lay Offs.

"On account of it being necessary," he continued, "for the company to retrench expenses, there will be a 30 percent reduction of the present operating forces, and those who shall remain will have to work five days a week in order to avoid further layoffs."

The workers' happy and smiling faces turned so pale that you thought they had escaped from some cemetery. Only a few class-conscious workers, who were there, became happier than before. One pale worker of the mass asked them:

"You see we'll be laid off and its terrible. I am in debt, and I don't know if I can get a job."

"Let it come," one of our group answered, smiling.

"You don't care eh! You seem so happy!"

"I certainly am!"

"Why?"

Makes Them Wake Up.

"Because conditions like these will make you wake up and see the injustice that's done to you by the employing class. You never will wake up by our agitation, but you will wake up when these rich beggars force you."

In a few seconds the whistle blew and all of us resumed our work, waiting with agony for the hour when we would be thrown out on the streets. Thanks to our modern society, which offers to us everything (including music free), except bread, homes, and clothing.

Says Working Class Quit Church Because Of Wealthy Trustees

NEW YORK, May 4.—"The working class have been lost by the churches," Dr. William N. Guthrie, Episcopalian, admitted in a sermon in New York. "Bourgeois trustees" he gave as the cause. The present danger is that the "intellectual classes" will also desert the church, he says. Guthrie proposes religious dances as a feature to hold the interest of congregations. He is in the midst of a bitter controversy with Bishop Wm. T. Manning for holding such dances in his church, St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie.

Threatened May Day Rent Strike Suffers Delay

The threatened May Day "rent strike" against the greedy northwest side landlords has been delayed until the new leases are exhibited. The proposed mass meeting of tenants has also been deferred until next week, when the loose organization of groups interested will make up their plan.

Some action against the rent-robbers is essential. Because they are spared disturbance of their happy-hog-heaven for the day, does not mean they should not be attacked. They have feasted on the tenant's lack of organization too long.

Renting Workers Always Hit.

Most of the families affected by rent-raises are workers' families. They have no alternative but acceptance of the landlords' ultimatum; pay the increase, or get out; and if they move, it can only be to a less desirable flat or to an equally expensive one.

Lessees of rooming-houses are shifting about more than ever at this time of the year, with disastrous results to their roomers. One landlady gave her roomers only a day's notice to move and when one of them could not respond at once because of his work, he returned to find all hs belongings gone with the rest of the household furnishings.

The case of the room-renter is even more desperate than that of the flat-renter, tho it is the worker in both instances who is abused by the piggish profit-seekers who own the dwellings.

Miners Protest The Passage of Johnson Strikebreaking Bill

MINERSVILLE, Pa., May 4.—Several hundred miners of this city and vicinity gathered together in the Miner's hall to wage a protest against the Johnson bill recently passed by congress and senate.

Comrade A. Jakira, District Organizer Workers' Party, addressed the gathering in English and Russian.

Comrade Bimbo, of the Laizve, spoke at length in Lithuanian. He pointed out the significance of the Johnson bill to the American Labor movement and urged that the miners register their protest against the passage of such strike-breaking laws.

He concluded his speech by pointing out the role the DAILY WORKER is playing in the class struggle of this country and urged the miners to subscribe to it and to support it in every way possible. Nine new subs were secured.

The meeting adopted a strong resolution against the Johnson bill and pledged itself to do everything possible to have the bill annulled.

Scab Coal Mine Will Only Hire Submissive Slaves

FAIRMONT, W. Va., May 4.—Miners seeking work at the plant of the Consolidation Coal Co., the largest operator in Northern West Virginia, report that 27 mines of this company have been shut down and will remain idle from three to five years. While the company says they will place all the "good" men in the mines which operate, the particular miners making this report, militants who formerly worked for another company, were unable to get employment. These 27 mines probably employed at the least 5000 men so that the probability of replacing them in other mines is rather slim. The mines in the vicinity of Clarksburg are said to be practically all shut down indefinitely, the companies claiming the high freight rates make it impossible for them to operate on the union scale.

High Rural Death Rate In U. S. Due To Farm Bankruptcy

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, May 4.—Health conditions are worse, especially among children, in the country districts of America than in the cities, according to the annual report of scientists of the Rockefeller Foundation.

"While the general death rate in the United States has steadily fallen, the decline has been relatively greater for urban than for rural populations," the report states. "Maternity care and infant hygiene are sadly neglected. . . . Hookworm disease, and to a considerable extent malaria and typhoid fever, are rural problems. . . . Typhoid is often spread by flies, polluted wells, insanitary dairies and undiscovered carriers. Other communicable diseases are disseminated thru the schools. The sanitation of farmhouses and premises is defective."

That the nation-wide bankruptcy among farmers and the rapid increase of tenantry prevents the rural population from improving rural sanitation, the report does not state. Ignorance it puts forward as the chief cause.

BUFFALO LABOR JOINS MOVEMENT FOR MASS PARTY

Central Body Aiding In State Convention

NEW YORK, May 4.—Reports are coming in daily to the office of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party to the effect that the up state cities of New York are active on behalf of the Farmer-Labor Party. The entire union list has been circularized and a large delegation representing local unions, fraternal organizations and farmer granges is expected. The latest report from Buffalo states that the Buffalo Central Labor Council decided to send a delegate to the state convention for the formation of a Labor Party in New York, which is to be held at Schenectady on Sunday, May 18th. All unions in New York City have received credentials and letters and are ungently requested to take this matter up at their next meeting and see to it that their local elects a delegate immediately.

Money is needed to carry on the campaign and to organize the work in order that the state convention may be a success. All organizations are requested to immediately make donations and send same to the Executive Secretary of the Federated Farmer-Labor Party, W. J. Kelly, at 81 East Tenth Street.

Craft Policy Aids Scab Publishers In Smashing Printers

SPRINGFIELD, O., May 4.— The failure of the crafts' policy of Gompers' unionism is clearly shown in the case of the printing trades employed by the Crowell Publishing Company. This is the concern that publishes the "Women's Home Companion," the "American Magazine," and "Farm and Fireside." It is second only to the Curtis Publishing Company of "Saturday Evening Post" notoriety in the class of magazine publishers.

The pressmen of the company struck a couple of years ago, demanding decent wages. Printers and electrotypers did not join them, and the strike was lost.

Six month ago the printers were practically locked out and at present 40 men are doing the work formerly done by the 22 printers. In spite of the extra expense the company continues to employ scabs in its effort to destroy all unionism in the shop.

Electrotypers Get Agreement

Just a few months ago the electrotypers also felt their grievances severely enough to threaten a strike, but because of previous trouble the company signed a 2-year agreement.

"The former union pressmen are scattered; but after six months of strike, with no hope of settlement, the locked-out printers are beginning to realize that Gompers has been leading them up a blind alley to the slaughter pen," our correspondent writes.

"Springfield is largely industrial, and should be a strong union town. The printing trade should have a powerful union, but now it amounts to nothing. Machinists, molders, and the building trades should be well organized. But the rule of action is each for himself and the devil take the hindmost; and Sammy is helping the devil all he can."

Reports like this only emphasize the points the Workers Party is trying to drive into the minds of the workers who have so long followed the benighted Sammy: amalgamate crafts unions into industrial groups and unite for political action in a class Farmer-Labor Party.

Coppersmiths Aid Starving German Workers With $50

At their last meeting, the Chicago coppersmiths of local 51, showed their solidarity with the starving workers of Germany, by donating $50 to help open soup kitchens in Germany.

About a month ago the local elected and sent two delegates to the Conference of the Friends of Workers' Germany. At the last meeting these delegates made their report, and gave a true picture of the conditions under which the German workers exist at the present time, and into which they had been brought by their own money lords and diplomats, as well as by international diplomats and bankers.

They pointed out that the starvation in Germany is not due to natural causes, as the Russian famine was, for instance, but diplomatic and political, which is shown by the fact that only one class of people, the working class, is affected by the German famine. Therefore, by aiding the starving German workers we are helping our own brothers.

The pledge list was passed around and in no time about $25 was collected, altho there were hardly twenty-five members present. A motion was then unanimously carried that additional $25 be donated from the local's treasury, for the same purpose.

FILIPINOS FAIL TO RECOGNIZE CLASS WAR WITH WOOD

Protest General's Lies Too Respectfully

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MANILA, May 2.—One of the largest mass meetings that have ever been held in Manila took place Monday at the Grand Opera House to protest against the uncalled for and unjustified assertions of Governor General Wood against the Filipinos contained in the cablegram to the Secretary of War which he had published. The meeting was organized and participated in by the majority and minority parties of the Phillipines, labor unions, professions, representative of Filipino capital and other bodies. This protest is general throughout the entire archipelago. Resolutions of protest are continually pouring into the office of the Philipppine Independence oCmmssion at Manila from all corners of the Philippines.

At the Manila mass meeting the following resolution was adopted:

Resolution.

"We, residents of Manila, gathered in a mass meeting at Manila April 27, 1924, in defense of the Filipino people and their just aspirations and urged by deep sense of patriotic duty hereby make known solemnly and publicly our formal sincere and energetic protest against the declarations contained in the cablegram of Governor General Wood to the secretary of war. We consider that these declarations deeply wound our sentiments as a people; that they are unfounded; they constitute an offense to the good name, character and dignity of the Filipino race and nation; that they are inspired by prejudice inherent; plan for political and economic domination and imperialistic tendencies; that they are in open and direct contradiction with respect to law and to the spirit of peace, order, and progress of which the Filipino people have always given proof and which Governor General Wood himself in previous official reports forwarded to the Secretary of War could not help but admit and recognize; that they absolutely lack foundation either in light of statistical data or facts; finally, declarations of this character, made solely for the purpose of preventing the Filipino people from obtaining the independence to which they have a right, only serve to create in the minds of the Filipinos suspicion and doubt as to the real intention and purpose of America in the Philippines and to destroy thus the friendly relations existing between Americans and Filipinos which the two people are under equal obligation to promote and preserve permanently in this country In making this protest we do so without any feeling of hatred or sentiment of hostility or animadversion toward the high official who has provoked it and without in the least diminishing the respect and loyalty to American soverignty. We make it solely for the love of truth and in the interest of justice and above all in defense of what we believe to be ours by right, thus reafirming once more one sole natinoal creed: "The immediate, complete and absolute independence of the Filipino people."

NEED CO-ORDINATION AND SYSTEM IN ACTIVITIES OF THE WORKERS PARTY

By ABRAHAM MARKOFF.

In an article published in the DAILY WORKER, April 21st, Comrade Bimba stated certain reasons why we fail to gain more members, even tho our mass meetings are successful. The whole article is a splendid analysis of our activities and I advise every member to read it.

Comrade Bimba referred to our mass meetings held in big halls. He claims that there is very little co-ordination between the organizational work in the Party and its educational work or propaganda. This same reason, in my opinion, may be applied to our open air meetings. We are now approaching the open air campaign; it is therefore in order to discuss this question.

The open air work, as conducted heretofore, has brought verey little result, and in many cases has done much harm. The reason is the chaotic manner in which this work was carried on. There was never a control over the speakers. Each one had to decide for himself what to say and how, and often a speaker, unconsciously would deliver a speech which was as far from Communism as we are from Mars. Very few of the speakers spoke of the Workers Party and its activities, and still less did I hear speakers ask the workers to join the ranks of the Workers Party.

There are several fundamental points which our speakers must bear in mind.

1. The worker, when he comes to our meetings is tired physically and mentally, having spent the day in the shop or factory. Therefore his mind is only capable of perceiving that which does not require much thinking; his mind is not trained to think quickly and logically. Hence the necessity for the speaker to construct his speech systematically, logically, and full of constructive criticism and practical suggestions. 2. That the audience expects the speaker to tell them what to do. For a speaker to get up on the platform, describe the injustice of the present system, work up the indignation of the audience, and leave them with the question—What shall be done?—is wasting time and energy. It is absolutely essential to join the ranks of the Workers Party, the only party which is fighting for the abolition of the capitalist system.

To carry out the above suggestions successfully, the speakers must not be isolated from one another—they should come together from time to time to discuss various topics, which are to be the subjects at the open air meetings. The speakers will gain a great deal from such discussions. The plan described above was employed by the old Russian Social Democratic Party for many years with great success.

The practical application of this plan must be given to a propaganda commitee which should control the open air work. This committee is to call meetings of the speakers to bring in various suggestions as to the topics for discussion, and practical suggestions. Such a committee should consist of comrades well informed theoretically, and of those who are familiar with public speaking.

With a little effort on our part we can carry out the plan and the results will be gratifying

Young Workers Boom Organization Work In Milwaukee, Wis.

With one branch of the Y. W. L. and three Junior groups organized during the last five weeks, and several more branches in the process of formation, the movement in Milwaukee promises to develop into one of the strongest in the country. The party and league have been co-operating very closely, to the mutual benefit of both.

Last Saturday and Sunday saw the successful culmination of a month's intensive preparations for the showing of "Polikushka," and for a Y. W. L. entertainment and dance. The Milwaukee comrades, realizing the value of good music, called in the Chicago Young Workers' League orchestra, to help them in these week-end affairs. Comrade Evelyn Mack was especially useful, in that she played the organ accompaniment for "Polikushka," evoking the enthusiastic praise of her audience. The orchestra rendered several musical selections between pictures, and was well received.

On Sunday afternoon, the Milwaukee Y. W. L. gave a banquet in honor of the comrades from Chicago. This was followed by an entertainment and an organizational talk by Comrade Paul Cline. In the evening, the dance was a tremendous success. A fine crowd of young people came out, and the large hall was packed. It is certain that these affairs will result in a great many new members being taken in.

RUSS WORKERS ADVANCING SAYS TRACHTENBERG

Communist Victories Affect World's Workers

OMAHA, Nebr., May 4.—Alexander Trachtenberg spoke before a highly appreciative audience at Omaha last Monday evening on "What I Saw in Russia and Germany." The meeting was held under the auspices of the local organization of the Workers Party.

Trachtenberg spoke in detail of his experiences in Russia and thruout central Europe, from where he just recently returned. He told of the tremendous forward strides of Communist Russia on the economic front, while the workers of Germany are sinking deeper into despair.

"The victories of Russia on the military front were of vital importance to the revolutionary cause," said Trachtenberg, "but the achievements on the economic front are of even greater importance, for upon them depends the success or failure of the workers and farmers administration of society. Even after the counter-revolutionary bands had been decisively defeated and the foreign invaders driven from Russia, even then the capitalist world powers did not recognize the Workers' and Peasants' Government of Russia."

At the close of the lecture, chairman David Coutts made an appeal for the working men and women of Omaha to get into the Workers' Party and help the cause of the world revolution thru affiliation with the Communist movement.

Pardon Attorney Blind To Politicals, Could See Bootleggers Easily

(By The Federated Press)

WASHINGTON, May 4.—Thru six weary years the American Civil Liberties Union and the various amnesty committees strove with Pardon Attorney Finch, in the department of Justice, for the pressing upon the administrations—Wilson and Harding-Coolidge—of the facts with regard to the political prisoners. Finch always was "working" on the cases, but they moved with glacial slowness. At the end of five years he had not seen the trial record of evidence in the Sacramento I. W. W. cases, and borrowed it from the amnesty advocates.

Finch has just testified before the Brookhart committee of the Senate that his approval has been given to the commutation of sentence of every one of the numerous bootleggers who have been freed by Daugherty. In the case of Philip Grossman of Chicago, he recommended clemency three times, altho the man never served a day in jail. Both G. O. P. senators, with Fred Upham, treasurer of the national committee, and Atty. General Brundage of Illionis, asked that Grossman be let go. Coolidge freed him.

General Strike Against War.

NEW YORK.—A general strike to prevent war is advocated by Ekaterina P. Karavelova, wife of the late prime minister of Bulgaria, and a delegate to the Washington congress, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. The menace of war in Europe is rapidly increasing, she told the Federated Press.

CANNON'S SPEECH ENTHUSES TRADE UNION MILITANTS

Food Workers Strike For Shorter Day

James P. Cannon, member of the executive committee of the Workers' Party delivered an unusual lecture in the North-West Hall at the regular monthly meeting of the local T. U. E. L.

In his splendid talk on "May Day and the American Labor Movement," the speaker "took stock" of the past accomplishments of American Labor as he felt ought be done on this day, and in a most inspiring manner pointed out the new progressive spirit of American Labor since the Russian Revolution—the source of inspiration and hope for all workers.

Sketching but very briefly the historical background of this day of Labor and stressing the significance of May Day to American workers, the lecture was enthusiastically greeted by the militants who are attending these monthly meetings in ever increasing numbers.

World Labor Activities.

Earl Browder, editor of the Labor Herald, gave his monthly resume of Labor's activities and growing power in India, France and especially in England where 200,000 workers are on strike. This interesting summary, now an established feature of the monthly T. U. E. L. meetings is receiving increasing popularity.

Michael Halter, delegate for the Food Trades, reported the proposed strike of the Food Trades. The union hall, he reported, is crowded with food workers stirred by the coming struggle to secure an 8-hour day and 6-day week. The employers willing to grant the last demand, are holding out on the first, despite the unprecedented support of the large numbers of Greek workers predominating in the food trades who are for the first time responding to organization.

Fakers Fear "Fosterism".

Niels Kjar, for the building trades, reported the difficulties being presented to the progressives by the reactionary leaders who insist on censoring all literature sold in the hall that might smack of Fosterism."

Delegate Davidson for the Needle Trades, expressed confidence of victory for the militants in the coming Needle Trades Convention.

The large number of the Young Workers' League members attending the meeting added a youthful touch and enthusiasm to the meeting.

Merchants Bank Building Strike Slap At Landis

Further break-down of the Landis award was shown in the strike at the Illinois Merchants' Bank building where bricklayers, pipe coverers, elevator constructors and ornamental iron workers refused to continue working when union electricians went on strike.

The electricians struck to force the Western Union Telegraph company to install electrical tickers, messenger call boxes and watches with union men.

Thomas Donnelly, scab publisher and chairman of the Citizens' Committee complains bitterly about the walk-out of the other craftsmen, whining that the Landis Award anti-strike clause reads that union men of one trade shall not quit because non-union men are employed in another trade alongside them. Solidarity always gets the goat of the scab herders.

COAL BARONS CLOSE MINES TO BREAK UNION

But Lewis Thinks Bosses Alright

(By The Federated Press)

The open shop manufacturer' combine of the United States is on strike against the United Mine Workers. Huge coal reserves accumulated ostensibly against a miners' strike are being used to tide industry over with the expectation that tens of thousands of miners can be starved into accepting the open shop coupled with a 25 per cent wage cut. The operators are hoping that the threat of prolonged idleness will be enough to cause union morale in many districts to crumble.

"The perpetuation of the 1922-1924 wage scale in the Central Competitive field," writes the editor of Black Diamond, the employers' trade journal, will ultimately have the same effect on union mines as a strike would have had in the event that there had been no such agreement as that reached at Jacksonville. The effect, had the miners' union and the operators failed to agree on a continuance of the old scale, would have been to force a suspension at union mines and at the same time to permit nonunion miners to operate."

Violate Agreement.

Thus operators expect the agreement to force a suspension at union mines, because orders will go to nonunion mines working on a lower wage scale. In the meantime the reserves in the bins of industrial consumers will make possible a period of artificial depression in which to exert pressure to bring certain union fields into the open shop column.

Coal reserves held by industrial consumers April 1 totaled 72,192,000 tons. On the basis of March consumption this would meet requirements for 52 days. According to Mark Kuehn, chairman coal committee National Association of Purchasing agents, until these reserves are reduced considerably there is every reason to believe that the coal market will remain depressed. This is supported by economists of the U. S. geological survey who find that as long as reserves total more than 40,000,000 tons buyers can dictate prices.

Miners Idle.

In central Illinois mines are operating on a basis of about 25 percent of normal production and approximately half the mines are reported closed. Indiana as a whole is producing at about the same rate. Southern Illinois is operating at about one-third of normal. Western Kentucky and the entire southwest fields are closed by strikes.

"Even in the nonunion fields" says the report of the geological survey, "only a few districts reported increased production and in those cases the improvement was small and of little consequence."

Bosses Play Golf.

The only cheerful news comes from Carlinville, Ill., where Standard Oil has reopened one of its two mines which have been closed for about 6 months. The mine is reported on a union basis with minor changes in working conditions.

But the men who live in comfort by selling what miners produce are reported by Chicago Journal of Commerce to be "passing most of their time playing golf or fishing because their mines are idle and there is no demand for such coal as is offered."

Amalgamation In Australia.

SYDNEY, New South Wales.—The Leather Trades Union, Sailmakers' Union and the Saddlery Trades Union have amalgamted into one union. The name of the reconstructed union has not yet been decided.

An Indefensible Policy

Important problems come before the convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union meeting in Boston today.

We feel that the most important of these is the question of liquidating the indefensible policy of the Sigman administration this past year of expelling militants in the organization, because of their membership in the Trade Union Educational League.

This disrupting Sigman policy was spawned by the machine that draws its inspiration from the New York Jewish Daily (Socialist) Forward. It lives because of the aid given it by this same Forward organization.

What are the crimes of the militants? Let us list a few of them:

That they urged amalgamation as against craft separatism.

That they sought an all-inclusive Farmer-Labor Party as opposed to a Socialist-labor bureaucracy controlled Third Party.

That they demanded the shop delegate system of labor organization as opposed to the outworn local union system.

That they pressed for a militant struggle against all reductions in wages as opposed to compromise and collaboration with the bosses.

These are all "crimes" that every member of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, claiming to stand for the welfare of the organization, should claim as his own. Every member of the union should look upon it as a proud duty to fight for these measures urged by the militants. And that seems to have been the way that the militants looked upon the whole problem.

We do not have to ask the membership of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union to liquidate the indefensible expulsion policy. They have already shown themselves already in favor of doing that very thing. It is now the duty of the delegates to the Boston Convention to interpret correctly and carry out the desires of the rank and file.

It is said that a majority of the delegates to this convention have been elected pledged to the repudiation of the expulsion policy. It remains for these delegates to stand loyal to that pledge, true to the task entrusted to them. They should not allow themselves to be misled by carefully provoked hysteria or cleverly aroused prejudices.

All the charges against the Trade Union Educational League, including the silly theory that it is a dual union, have been repeatedly punctured. Only the officialdom, from Sigman and his satellites, up to Gompers, cling to this absurd claim.

Let the delegates to the Boston Convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union repudiate this indefensible policy of expulsions, and they will make for real unity within the whole labor movement.

The brilliant struggle of the Pullman strikers will make the big bosses in other industries think twice before they try to impose wage reductions upon their workers.

Edwin Denby, ousted secretary of the navy, is still welcome at the White House. "Cautious Cal" no doubt expects Eddie to deliver a few Michigan votes his way, if they can be Newberryed in that direction.

William Howard Taft, the obese head of the U. S. supreme court, complains that newspapers do not hire lawyers to report court doings. No doubt "Bill the Fat" would enjoy picking either of the injunction judges, "Dennie" Sullivan or "Charley" Foell, to do the court reporting for the DAILY WORKER. Well, all we want to say to Judge Taft is, he's got another guess coming.

"Stay away from the old party primaries!" is a cry that is being heeded by the workers and farmers everywhere thruout the nation. Less than one-sixth of the qualified voters of Ohio went to the polls in the recent primaries of the Wall Street primaries in that state. Among the five-sixths are big possibilities for the growing Farmer-Labor Party movement.

Ex-Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis was in his element before the Daugherty investigating committee in Washington. He was strong in his denunciation of the West Madison street bootleggers. But no mention is made of the big thieves of the Union League Club, where Landis got his orders while on the federal court bench. Landis yells so loudly over the little crooks that it helps the big crooks cover up their tracks.

Clubbing the Cubans

American arms are being rushed to Cuba to help maintain the status quo in the Caribbean satrapy of Wall Street. As usual, the pretense behind which the imperialistic ventures of our ruling class hide is one of abstract justice or some other ethereal vagary of the thinnest order.

The Cuban incident brings to the fore a problem which is assuming serious proportions for the workers and poor farmers of this country. There is one outstanding feature of American capitalist expansionist policy. And that is that those governments of other countries which tend to assure the maximum safety to American investments are the governments which the Washington government will support with money and military strength. Today this imperialist dictum is tantamount to a declaration from our financial overlords that the Latin American peoples are to have only those governments which are satisfactory to the banking and manufacturing interests of the United States.

The Yankee imperialist government is for a revolution in a country only when the revolution promises more profits and higher interest rates to the capitalists. Thus Theodore Roosevelt manufactured the Panama revolution against Colombia. Republicanism goes by the board when the dollar demands it. The American capitalist republic has to its discredit the record of having destroyed more republics than any other country in the world. The first republic in the Orient, the Philippine Republic, and the Republic of San Domingo were both crushed by the military and naval guns of the republican army of capitalist America. In Peru, the American ambassador, Poindexter, is serving as the agent plenipotentiary of the National City Bank, and Washington power and Wall Street money are the sole prop keeping up the Peruvian Fascist government which is threatened by the wrath of the masses.

In Honduras it was American capitalist intrigue that was responsible for the revoluttion. In Mexico the Washington capitalist bureaucrats were compelled to help Obregon, not because they loved him or hated de la Huerta, but because they feared that the business outlook would be much worse for their masters if Obregon was overthrown. Obviously the Latin American countries have become the natural hinterland for American capitalist manouevers and exploitation.

Herein lies a source of many dangers to the American workers and farmers. In time the Latin American masses will revolt against their being pawns in the hands of the Yankee capitalists. The Cubans will get sick and tired of revolutions being made to order and crushed in their country by the agents of Wall Street. Bolivia may soon want to have a government of its own choice. Unless the American working men and poor farmers get together with their brethren in the Latin-American countries to fight the common enemy that is oppressing and exploiting them, the proletariat and dispossessed agrarian masses of all the American countries will be thrown into a mortal combat in behalf of their masters—a war in which hundreds of thousands of wage workers and peasants will be slaughtered.

One of the Millions

Helene Jessmer was the beautiful daughter of a California bakery owner. But she cut loose from her dreary surroundings, joined the Follies, met the young millionaire, Phillip Morgan Plant, crashed into a tree with him in an auto accident, and was disfigured. Because she had a rich parasite at her side, in the smash-up, Miss Jessmer is now able to go back to the California bakery with $100,000 in settlement of her $500,000 suit. And the average reader of the daily newspapers, faced with his own struggle for a daily existence, will chime in with, "lucky girl."

But there are millions of young girls, children, by the grace of the United States Supreme Court, many beautiful children of the working class who are being sent into the mills and factories of the nation, there to have the bloom of their youth torn from them, more slowly perhaps, but just as ruthlessly, as thru the most terrible automobile wreck.

To be sure there are millionaires near as the roses die in the cheeks of the young factory workers. But they are usually heavy paunched, thick jowled, aged profiteers, who have their property rights protected in the courts, where the $500,000 damage suit of a girl worker for the loss of her youth and beauty would be thrown into the street. Yet it wouldn't be a bad thing for these children of the factories to take the case of Helene Jessmer as a precedent and place a similar price upon their youth. Congress and the courts, the tools of the bosses, have rejected them. Perhaps the children, spurned on by the luck of Miss Jessmer, with her millionaire, might try for a little luck against their own millionaire disfigurers. The deadly grind of the factory takes a toll of child life much greater than the more spectacular auto spills of young millionaires with their chorus girl companions. It should also pay the penalty

COMMUNIST PARTY OF INDIA CHALLENGES COLONIAL POLICY OF PRESENT BRITISH GOVERNMENT

The Communist Party of India sends the following challenge to the Independent Labor Party of England, of which Premier Ramsay MacDonald is a member, to keep its pledges to fight for the liberation of subject people. The challenge recites the tyrannical persecution of labor in India today under the present government and calls on the Independent Labor Party convention at York, England, to take action. The statement is given in full by the DAILY WORKER.

I. L. P. On Internationalism.

Fellow Workers:—One year ago, in the London conference of the Independent Labor Party, a resolution on Internationalism and Imperialism was adopted, which defined the attitudes of your party, as follows:

The I. L. P., as an integral part of the International movement for the world-wide spreading of Socialism, recognizes:

1. That the interests of the workers thruout the world are one.
2. That the International Socialist Commonwealth can only be secured by a world organization of free peoples, co-operating in the production and distribution of the world's goods.
3. That towards this end, the I. L. P. works for the most effective action of the International Socialist Movement to prevent war, abolish conscription and militarism, and liberate subject peoples.
4. That the I. L. P. opposes the exploitation of economically backward peoples by the more advanced, and declare for a relationship with the less-developed races to prepare them as speedily as possible for self-government.
5. That as a method to attain these ends, the I. L. P. takes its part in the struggle of the workers to win freedom from the economic tyranny imposed by the capitalist class and capitalist state. It holds that the best way of effecting a peaceful change to Socialism is by the organization of the workers politically to capture the state power, and industrially to take over the control and management of the industrial machinery.
6. The I. L. P. recognize that circumstances may arise when a government or reactionary class might attempt to suppress liberty or thwart the national will, and it holds that to defeat such attempts, democracy must use to the utmost extent its political and industrial power.

Demand Freedom of India.

In view of the fact that in India today, a reactionary government and class is attempting to suppress the liberty and to thwart the national will of the people as expressed thru peaceful constitutional action, by certifying measures rejected by the elected representatives in the so-called National Legislatures; by shooting down unarmed men and women who assemble together to demonstrate peacefully against social, economic and political suppression; and by wholesale arrests without charge or evidence, of respectable citizens accused of conspiring against the authority of the State, the Communist Party of India calls upon the Annual Conference of the Independent Labor Party to uphold and give force to its resolution of the conference of 1923, by taking energetic action against those acts on the part of irresponsible authority. In view of your position as the supreme governing power in Great Britain today, we call upon you to use the utmost extent of your political and industrial power to put an end to these intolerable conditions prevailing in British India.

Preservation In India.

The Communist Party of India calls the attention of the delegates to the annual conference of the I. L. P. in particular, to the flagrant attempt now being made on the part of the Indian government to suppress the right of political organization for economic ends on the part of the Indian working-class, by damning it in the eyes of the law as "conspiracy to overthrow the sovereignity of His Majesty, the King-Emperor," and by seeking to make such action on the part of the Indian working-class punishable under Section 121 and 121A of the Indian Penal Code by death or life-imprisonment.

The Communist Party of India desires to emphasize the fact that the real object behind this attempt to crush the legitimate right of Indian labor to organize itself for political and economic end is threefold:

Plot Against British Labor.

1. To prevent the emancipation of the Indian masses thru their own political and economic action to achieve improvement in their present miserable condition, and to bind them perpetually to the chains of Imperial and native exploitation.
2. To maintain the present isolation of the Indian people from the world International movement of labor towards full social, economic and political emancipation from capitalist slavery.
3. To prejudice the organization of a working-class party in India by damning it in the eyes of the law as "Bolshevik conspiracy and propaganda," thereby at the same time prejudicing the negotiations now proceeding between the British Labor government and the Russian Soviet government to re-establish normal and friendly relations.

Sedition Tried at Cawnpore.

The Communist Party of India emphatically repudiates the unfounded and unprovable allegations brought against it by the government of India as the basis of the trial now proceeding at Cawnpore against some of its members, and calls upon the Independent Labor Party and the Labor government, as well as upon the British proletariat, to vindicate the full constitutional right for Communist, Socialist and working-class parties to exist and to function in India, maintaining their appropriate international connections, as in all other parts of the British Empire, and thruout the world.

Convention Must Act.

To this end, the Communist Party of India calls upon the delegates of the York Conference of the I. L. P. to protest against the present attempts being made by a reactionary government and class to suppress the liberty of Indian citizens and to thwart the Indian national will, and in consonance with the resolution passed in your London Conference of 1923, to recommend:

1. That the government ban on Socialist, Communist and working-class organization and propaganda be lifted.
2. And that those now suffering from government prosecution and persecution for their activities in behalf of the Indian working-class be permitted henceforth full freedom of action, both in and outside of British India, in their efforts to organize a political party of the Indian workers and peasants for social, economic and political emancipation.

In behalf of the Communist Party of India.

Government Coal Control Debate Topic Of Schools

The question of government ownership and operation of the coal mines will be debated by Cathedral High school of Indianapolis and Harrison Technical High of this city. The two schools will hold their verbal clash Friday evening, May 9, at 8 o'clock in the Harrison Auditorium, 24th St. and Marshall Boulevard. The subject is stated. "Resolved, that the federal government shall own and operate the coal mines."

New Soviet Film Shows Russian Toilers Forging Rapidly Ahead

A new film of Soviet Russia and Germany recently arrived in America, will be released for the first time in New York City, on May 9th Friday evening, at 8:30 at the Central opera house, 205 E. Sixty-seventh st., by the International Workers' Aid.

The technical part of the photoplay, the photograph, titling and dramatic value is superior to any of the other films which have been shown here of Soviet Russia.

Russia is shown in this film busily engaged putting its house in order. Building up the industries, improving its agricultural methods, with scenes of the International Agricultural Exposition which was recently held in Moscow, Russia, in the years 1923-24 were busy and historic years for Russia, and this film deals with every phase of its social and economic life.

Germany, on the other hand, is in a turmoil. The film shows great anti-government demonstrations in which hundreds of thousands take part, people rioting in the streets over a rise in the price of bread. The German government suspending even their pittance of a charity dole which enabled a family of four to buy one loaf of bread—this sounds like a setting for a real blow-up.

The picture is called "A Tale of Two Republics" because it deals with two most interesting countries in the world, Russia and Germany.

Every worker should make an effort to see this picture. The film is so well arranged that it clarifies the issues as no amount of newspaper reports could portray; especially does it affect the false reports of the capitalist press.

'Keep Up The Work,' War Prisoner Urges

To the DAILY WORKER: Yours of the 10th at hand; have also been receiving your unusually interesting DAILY WORKER. Keep up the good beginning as you are filling a gap in journalism that there is great need of in every city in the world. I know that you are not running that paper to make money or you would print less truth and some capitalist propaganda in place of labor facts. You know there is a very bad disease raging in California at the present time; the hoof and mouth disease of cattle which can be taken by human beings as well; that is a good reason to boycott all California products. And a further reason if you happen to work for wages in some of the labor hating laws of this state of Sunshine, Slavery and Earthquakes, namely, the C. S. law. Every worker ought to boycott this state until it gives labor a right to organize.

I suppose you wonder how we stand pat under the circumstances; there is no other way for a man that understands the economic reason for our incarceration.

THE VIEWS OF OUR READERS ON LIFE, LABOR, INDUSTRY, POLITICS

Bill Got Him Going.

The DAILY WORKER:—Nothing I have read for a long time so tickled my intellectual funnybone as the article by William F. Dunne, telling the ex-Reverend-Socialist, Norman Thomas, where to get off at. He certainly knocked the Dr. for a row of empty pulpits.

For a man of his intelligence to charge the Communists with favoring a dictatorship in the unions, shows to what length saffron-hued socialists will go to vent their spleen against the Workers Party.

The DAILY WORKER is certainly a fine working-class paper and is raising the devil with the master class. I wish you success.—Nicholas Fineberg, Jonesburg, Ia.

May Day in Chicago.

To the DAILY WORKER:

A reporter for Farmer-Labor Voice attended the United Front May Day Conference and Concert, held at the North Side Turner Hall, Chicago, on the evening of May, and these were his impressions. He found a large and very enthusiastic crowd of workers in attendance. But Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, was not there. Nor were any of his official representatives heard from, during the lively meeting which followed.

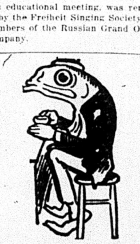
But William F. Dunne was present, as the principal speaker—the same "Bill" Dunne who was expelled from Gompers' last A. F. of L. convention because of his alleged too "radical" ideas with regard to the workers' rank in society. And "Bill" Dunne paid his respects to "Sammy" Gompers—from the progressive point of view. Incidentally, he indicated that Mr. Gompers and his Federation were about the only things of a Labor character—and he didn't give them credit for much of a character under that classification—now unaware of the real significance of May 1st as International Labor Day. Dunne voiced opinion that chief among the arguments for setting May 1st as Labor Day, was the vernal quality of that season, as contra-distinguished from the autumnal "has been" character of the old September date. Just as the month of May is the preparatory season for bringing forth the first fruits and flowers of Nature, so is that season symbolical of Labor's efforts to produce its fruits of victory. Today, even more than in times past, does this poetic allusion seem appropriate. And these fruits of the Labor struggle will soon now be brought forth, prophesized speaker Dunne. "If we progressives have the sense, and the courage, and the spirit of self-sacrifice that is necessary."

In opening this meeting, Chairman Abern (former Secretary of The Young Workers) told of the Russian workers' victorious celebration of May Day in their country. And he expressed belief that with this glorious example before the eyes of the world's workers, a hope for international solidarity of the working-class is fully justified.

Editor Schactman, of The Young Worker, was of the opinion that only a class Farmer-Labor Party can lay the permanent foundation for workers' control and abolition of child wage-slavery in this country.

A. Bittelman, of the Workers' Party, also addressed the meeting; and other good speakers representing the Jewish, Russian, Italian and Polish language groups of progressive workers' organizations.

A fine concert, in connection with this educational meeting, was rendered by the Freiheit Singing Society and members of the Russian Grand Opera Company.



The Poor Fish says: The Pullman workers ought to let Florence Pullman Lowden cut their wages because it'll cost her husband a lot of money to get the nomination for vice president.

AS WE SEE IT

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

"Hell must go" is the slogan of Dr. Percy Stickney Grant. And it is going fast according to the doctor, who is making it quite hot for that institution even tho he believes the public is growing cold towards it. We commend the activities of Dr. Grant in disposing of the infernal regions, hoping that after he dethrones Old Nick he will join Bishop William Montgomery Brown in "Banishing the Gods from the skies and capitalism from the earth."

Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, denounces as false the charge that he turned over to a friend the salmon fisheries of Alaska. Now, what else could you expect? All the crooks do that. Did not Hoover deny aiding the counter-revolutionaries of Russia against the Soviet government and of giving them one million dollars out of the relief funds granted by congress for the feeding of the famine stricken people of Russia. But documentary evidence recently unearthed in Washington proved the charges true and convicts Hoover of being a liar as well as a political crook. Hoover in rebuttal says that special interests prevent legislation to save food fish. It's a neat comeback. Unfortunately for Hoover he has been caught lying so often that nobody would believe him even if by some accident he did happen to tell the truth.

You may remember that when Ludendorf took part in the burlesque tap room revolution of the Bavarian Fascisti he threw himself flat on the ground when somebody's pistol went off accidentally. History almost repeats itself. There was a reactionary meeting advertised in Berlin recently at which Ludendorf was billed as the principal speaker. The General issued a provocative manifesto calling on his followers to fight all foreign and domestic foes particularly the Communists. The latter came in large numbers to the meeting ready to give him an opportunity to fight or eat his words. The General prudently, if not gallantly, stayed away. The Communists cleaned up his followers and peace once more reigned in Berlin.

Peace conferences come and peace conferences go but under capitalism preparations for the next war always go on. Secretary of State Hughes gloried in the success of the Washington Conference which resulted in a Naval agreement between the United States, Britain and Japan on the basis of a 5-5-3 program. We are now informed, however, by our "large navy" enthusiasts that this country is outgunned by even Japan and is in quite a serious condition. Lord Balfour, the tricky, British diplomat fooled the hick American statesmen and got away with the gravy. In speed, gun elevation and protective armoring the floating fortresses of America's potential enemies are far ahead of the United States' ships. The workers are deluded into the belief that we can have peace if only the capitalists can sit down together and take strong injections of applied Christianity. The Communists insist that we can have no peace until we get rid of capitalism and the capitalists and abolish the profit system that is the cause of all modern wars.

Andre Tardieu, a Clemenceau henchman, was addressing a large crowd in one of the Paris suburbs, when a Communist candidate for election appeared. The workers immediately called on the Communist to come to the platform and address them. He politely informed Tardieu that he would like to comply with the demands of the workers. The bourgeois boor, instead of acceding to the workers' request kicked savagely at the Communist, whereupon the workers seized Tardieu and brought their boots vigorously in contact with the fleshiest part of his anatomy, throwing him from the platform. While the scrimmage was on, Andre Marty, noted Communist rebel, sprang to the platform and addressed the crowd while the workers were mopping up the bourgeois hooligans who raised the rumpus.

Mrs. William Jennings Bryan is a paralytic, but she has faith in the Lord. So far, God has not cured her, but that does not faze her any. When she generates enough faith in God the cure will be affected, she believes. Even if she should never be cured that will not alter her devotion or weaken her faith. She will take all the blame for God's failure to cure her on her own shoulders. She attends the services of a roaming evangelist, who claims to have healed hundreds of people, performing miracles that equal those claimed by the Catholic Church. Mr. Bryan, she says is a firm believer in health thru faith and the "great commoner" is expected to spend some weeks under the ministrations of the evangelist before he goes to the Democratic convention, where he might be defiled by contact with the Catholic "wets" of Tammany Hall, who in turn believe, if they take their religion seriously—that Bryan, being a non-Catholic, is an imp of the devil and will go to hell no matter how many Darwinian monkeys he annihilates this side of the "dark ocean."

U. S. AIDED ANTI-SOVIET WAR

Communists Score Big Victory In Germany

BOLSHEVIKS WIN 60 SEATS IN ELECTION

GermanLefts Quadruple Power In Reichstag

(Special to The Daily Worker)

BERLIN, May 5.—Defeat of some of the features of the Morgan-Dawes plan is seen as the result of the German elections Sunday in which Communists and anti-Dawes nationalists made gains and the coalition forces lost many seats.

While the Marx-Stresemann government has a majority of seats it will be unable to muster the two-thirds vote to put thru the railroad amendment necessary to the transferring of the government transportation system to private interests.

An Anti-Labor Coalition.

There is even doubt whether the other proposals can be put thru. The various parties in the coalition government are at variance with each other over details. They are united by their fear of the proletariat rather than by a common program.

The latest tabulations give Communists 60 seats, tripling their power since the last election; Socialists 98, a loss of nearly half their seats; nationalists 80.

Socialist Losses.

For the Marx-Stresemann coalition the returns give Reichstag seats as follows: Folkspuloi, 35; democrats, 30; centrists, 61; folkists, 33; Hanoveraner, 4, and the undecided Bavarian folks, 20.

The losses of the socialists were just as marked as the gains of the Communists.

Communist Growth Terrifying.

"Terrifying growth of the Communists," as the Marx-Stresemann government calls it, is the outstanding feature of the Sunday elections now being tabulated.

Sixty Reichstag seats were won by the revolutionary party in spite of Fascisti repression in the industrial districts. The Communist victories—on a revolutionary campaign—portend a tremendous revolutionary sentiment among the workers.

Big Socialist Losses.

While the Communist strength jumped from three to sixty, the Socialist party fell from 150 to 84, the latter figure representing Social Democrats and Independents.

Communist growth came from the industrial workers largely and is looked on gloomily by commercial leaders of Germany and by diplomatic representatives of France, America and other nations supporting the Dawes plan.

It is feared by the Entente representatives that the financial stability that is needed to put thru the steady collections from Germany that the Dawes' plan calls for, will be marred by the unrestful condition indicated by the Communist growth.

Communist Enthusiasm.

Communist enthusiasm election day brought disquiet to these conservatives. In Berlin, where Frau Ruth Fischer and Emil Eichhorn, were elected with other Communists, the revolutionists came in force to the polling places to prevent election frauds, they announced.

In many industrial towns of Saxony, the Communists were practically in control.

The Marx coalition government is on a frailer foundation than before. Its 260 seats are distributed among Socialists, Democrats, Catholics and People's party, with many points of difference between them, united only by their weakness, fear and hatred of the Communists.

On the other hand the opposition, consisting of 180 votes, is at swords' points between itself. The Communists have nothing in common with the reactionary nationalists or the Fascisti. But the Communists are a disciplined block with a definite revolutionary program and have the backing of Communist parties of the world in their official proposals.

PULLMAN STRIKE SPREADS!

GARMENT CONVENTION GREETS STRIKERS BUT SIGMAN ATTACKS EXPELLED LEFT WING MILITANTS

(Special to the Daily Worker)

BOSTON, May 5.—With a burst of applause the delegates to the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union assembling in convention today sent a telegram of cheer and greetings to the Chicago strikers.

The telegram of greetings followed a parade thru the streets of Boston. The police allowed the paraders to carry no slogans but when the march ended Mayor James Curley presented the keys of the city to the delegates whom he wants to line up for Al Smith.

Sigman Attacks Militants.

In contrast to the spirit of solidarity shown by the delegates, President Sigman, in his opening speech, launched into a bitter attack on the left wingers, characterizing their actions as treason and thanking God for the wisdom of the general executive board, which sustained their expulsion.

The issue of the expelled militants has swamped every other issue before the convention. Every one is talking about it. Over forty delegates have been contested, the international's machine planning to retain power by disfranchising duly elected

28 STRIKERS TAKE A LOOK AT "DENNIE" TODAY

Victory Indicated By Split In Association

Twenty-eight garment strikers walked into Judge "Dennie" Sullivan's courtroom this morning to see what the old fellow had to say about their right to walk the streets.

The strikers are facing the injunction judge with confidence. Fresh in their mind is the fact that one of the leaders in the bosses' association and one of the first bosses to get an injunction had to sign a union agreement the other day.

Strikers say that Hymen's former associates in the Chicago Dressmakers' Manufacturers' organization will have to give up their open shop ideas if they want to get ready for the summer rush.

Some of the strikers have been carrying on useful educational work among their fellow workers against the overtime evil.

They are pointing out that unemployment prevails in the garment industry and that as long as a single worker is out of a job overtime is treason to the working class.

As strikers return to work in settled shops they are more and more refusing to work overtime.

MINNESOTA MEN PULLING STRONG FOR JUNE 17TH

Farmer-Laborites Say June Meet Is Right

By NORMAN TALLENTIRE.

(Special to The Daily Worker)

HIBBING, Min., May 5.—Two hundred enthusiastic Farmer-Laborites, representing all sections of the Eighth congressional district of Minnesota, met in Masonic Hall, North Hibbing, yesterday and unanimously indorsed the June 17 convention to be held in St. Paul.

The action followed a statement by William Mahoney, chairman of the Minnesota Farmer-Labor Federation, showing the relative merits of the June and July conventions. Mahoney clearly stated the objections of certain Minnesota representatives to the June convention.

Nevertheless the delegates were firm in their support of June 17, and the opinion was freely expressed that in this instance the men of Washington were wrong and the judgment of the Farmer-Labor movement in Minnesota was correct.

It was reported to the meeting that the Benton county convention has also indorsed June 17 in its session yesterday afternoon.

Striking Coal Miners Compel Bosses To Sign New Wage Scale

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 5.—Forty thousand coal miners in the southwest on strike since April 1st, returned to their jobs today under a wage agreement reached by a joint committee of operators and miners, Saturday night.

AMALGAMATED FOOD WORKERS' STRIKE GAINS

Call Big Mass Meeting For Wednesday Night

Amalgamated Food Workers are confident of victory in their fight to organize the Greek restaurants of Chicago and smash the 12 to 14-hour day and the seven-hour week.

Two restaurants have already signed the union terms, said Organizer John Stewart of the Amalgamated. They are the "Vivian," at 2346 Lawrence avenue, and the "Cosy Lunch," at 2426 Lincoln avenue.

The strike is expected to spread this morning to four more restaurants, and Stewart believes that the movement started May Day will shortly change the entire face of the Greek restaurant industry, which has been entirely unorganized until now.

Daily Worker Girls Picket.

Active picketing is going on in the four struck restaurants in the north end of Chicago—the Pomeroy, at 1120 Argyle street; the Elroy, at Lawrence avenue and the "L"; the Carvell's, 1149 Wilson avenue, and the Elite, 1037 Wilson avenue.

The Greek Federation of the Workers Party has been assisting in the picketing, supplying pickets from visitors from out of town who were here at a party conference.

Girl pickets from the office of the DAILY WORKER took active strike work on also. The DAILY WORKER picket front is now running from Pullman on the South Side to the struck restaurants on the North.

Mass Meetings Tomorrow.

Six arrests of pickets have been made to date. The last one, Monday, was of John Colvas. All demand jury trials when arraigned in the Sheffield avenue station.

Tomorrow night a big mass meeting of strikers will be held at the union headquarters at 214 N. State st., at which many of the thousands of unorganized workers in Greek restaurants will be present.

LONDON, May 5.—King George has signed the 12-mile treaty agreement with the United States, and Great Britain is ready to exchange ratifications, it was learned today.

WELDERS AND BENCHMEN IN NEW REVOLT

Workers Do Not Fear Lockout Threats

Welders and bench-finishers walked out of the Pullman plant in a unit yesterday and joined the strike of the riveters, buckers, reamers and heaters.

Some of the inside finishers have been laid off and they declare that there has been almost no work for the past two weeks.

Plan General Lockout.

The officials of the Pullman Company are seriously concerned about stopping the spread of the strike, and, according to the report of one of the general foremen to pickets, the officials have practically decided that a general lockout and shutdown is the only way for them to smash the union and get their men back.

The foreman said that the strike was 100 per cent effective, and not a car had left the plant. He told pickets that the company officials considered a two weeks' lockout would bring all the men back at the reduced wages.

Would Help the Strike.

The strikers on the picket line retorted that a general lockout of the men, if actually called by the officials, would help their strike more than hinder it; that it was only a question of time until the wages of the men in other departments would have been cut and forced them into active battle.

Max Shachtman, editor of the Young Worker, spoke so well at the strike meeting yesterday morning that he was invited to come again. He pleaded for the men to organize in the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, urged mass picketing, told of the speed-up effects of the sweatshops of New York's garment industry, and emphasized that the men are in the battle and must keep their picket line strong.

He said a sentry is shot if he is found asleep, but a picket commits suicide as far as the strike is concerned, if he sleeps on the job.

Johannsen and Clay Speak.

The DAILY WORKER was mentioned as one of the things the strikers could rely on in their fight against the Pullman Company, when Anton Johannsen of the Chicago Federation of Labor spoke to the meeting. John Clay, of the Teamsters' Union, also addressed the men.

Misled workers from Milwaukee, Pittsburgh, Indianapolis and other towns attended the strike meeting and joined the picket line. They told the strikers that nothing is doing inside. They said the only work that is going on is the boring out of rivets put in by unskilled scabs.

Pickets More Active.

The pickets were more active than ever yesterday, and in addition to patrolling about the Pullman works met the trains coming in and warned prospective workers of the strike. A new delegation of workers was scheduled

COME TO ST. PAUL

By ALEXANDER HOWAT

The most important convention ever held in this country, and the one in which the workers have the greatest opportunity to mobilize their strength, and to demonstrate their real power, will meet in the city of St. Paul on June 17. The convention to which I refer will be composed of men and women representing all that is real in the great movement of farmers and workers for the formation of a nation-wide farmer-labor party. The convention will be an expression of the masses who are dissatisfied with both of the two old political parties, the masses whose eyes have been opened by a long succession of political and economic events crowned by the most recent terrific exposures of the crooked work of the highest government officials of both the Republican and the Democratic parties. The recent exposures have aroused the people of toil as they have never been aroused before. Now more than ever before they can understand that there is no hope for the toilers who produce the nation's wealth as long as the great financial interests of the country own and control both of the two old parties. Now they can more readily understand that which has been true for many years—that the big financial interests control both of the dominant political parties.

I believe that we should unite, in this coming convention at St. Paul on June 17, all of the forces of the farmer-labor movement. Let us no longer be slaves to the scheming politicians who represent the enemies of our kind. The convention of farmers and workers on June 17 is the golden opportunity for the workers of the city and the toilers of the farm to asert themselves independently of the class which exploits them

Years of experience have clearly shown that the two old parties, alternating in power, but serving the same masters, are keeping the working class in poverty and misery. We are denied our rights of American citizens. There is no justice for the poor under the present system. The courts are used against the workers and in the interest of the employing class. The power of the government has always been used to assist the rich against the poor, and it will continue so to be used as long as the employing class sits secure in political power. It is to be hoped that labor from all parts of the nation will rally to the cause with delegations which truly represent them in this most important gathering. The convention bids fair to go down in history as marking the beginning of a new day for the men and women who earn their living by the sweat of their brow.

The great Farmer-Labor Party, uniting all of the serious elemnets of the farmer-labor movement now existing in this country—the great party which we hope will come out of this convention—will stand for those principles upon which many had fondly thought this American republic was originally founded, tho their eyes have been widely opened in recent times in that respect

The call for the St. Paul convention flames as a beacon light, streaming its golden rays down the otherwise darkened pathway of the future. Let it be the brilliant light on the road that leads to final emancipation of the workers of this entire nation. Let us all join hands and make this convention of the farmers and workers on June 17 a grand and glorious success.

OIL AND STEEL MOST POWERFUL ELEMENTS IN FINANCIAL SUPERSTATE SAYS FRENCH WOMAN AT PEACE MEET

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WASHINGTON, May 4.—International financiers were roundly denounced as the real causes of wars by speakers at the congress of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom which was devoted to a discussion of the economic aspects of the new international order.

Oil and steel groups are the most powerful elements in the financial superstate which controls the political movements of all nations, Mme Marguerite Dumont of France told the congress. Madam Dumont said that the "superstate of oil is already starting friction between the United States and England" and that the struggle between France and Germany for the Ruhr is really a battle of two international industrial groups for control of its steel.

The recent revolution in Mexico was laid by Mme. Dumont at the doors of the Royal Dutch Shell and Standard Oil Companies.

Frau Yella Hertaka of Austria urged that the small tradesmen of the world be reorganized into co-operative bodies to combat the crushing power of the great international financiers.

Immediate steps to dissolve "the unholy alliance between cannon and capital" was urged by Miss Emily Balch, representing the American section of the congress.

NEW FACTS SHOW SUPPORT TO KOLCHAK AND FAILURE IN DRIVE FOR YUDENITCH

The DAILY WORKER is today publishing additional correspondence from Washington showing how the United States not only aided the anti-Soviet War thru supporting the Yudenitch armies in Western Europe, but how the government also gave aid to the Kolchak attack on the Soviets in the Far East.

These startling facts have found no place in the daily capitalist press. It is the kind of news that the employers' sheets refuse to print. These are the facts that show the United States did not enter the world war to "make the world safe for democracy" but that the sole object of the Washington-Wall Street alliance during and after the war was to make the United States the strongest imperialist power on the face of the earth. A HOOVER ATTACK THAT FAILED

WASHINGTON, May 5.—"You'd have been the biggest American in Europe, if this thing had gone over; it was just your hard luck that stopped the success of Yudenitch and the fall of the Reds. If you had won, nothing would have been too good for you."

This was the view of Capt. James V. Martin's aid to Yudenitch, expressed to him in Helsingfors by Thornwell Haynes, American special commissioner, according to Capt. Martin, who commanded the Shipping Board vessel "Lake Fray" when she delivered motor trucks, gasoline, machine oil, and food supplies to Yudenitch in Reval, early in September, 1919. For the delivery of these motor trucks and this food, Yudenitch decorated Martin with the cross of the Order of St. Stanislaus.

Captain Martin has consented to tell the readers of The DAILY WORKER, in an exclusive interview, further details of the participation of the American Relief Administration, under Herbert Hoover, and the United States Shipping Board, and the big business coterie that surrounded Woodrow Wilson during and after the war, in the Yudenitch attack upon

UNITED STATES SOLD BIG LOT OF RIFLES AND AMUNITION TO NOTORIOUS ANTI-SOVIET KOLCHAK

By LAURENCE TODD

(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, May 5.—Sale of 198,833 rifles and 13,594,026 rounds of ammunition by the American government to Admiral Kolchak under a contract dated July 30, 1919, "for delivery in Siberia," was disclosed in an official report by Secretary of War Weeks to the Senate, in answer to a resolution asking for precedents for his sale of war supplies to Mexico.

Not only does Weeks cite the precedent of the sale of rifles and ammunition to Kolchak, but he offers in evidence a letter from Acting Secretary of State Frank L. Polk, to Secretary of War Newton D. Baker, dated July 11,1919, to prove that President Wilson knew all about the deal and gave his sanction. Wilson required, however, that no official recognition of Kolchak should go with the act of supplying him with arms on easy credit.

The Senate resolution of March 20, 1924, asked Weeks for details of the sale of arms to Mexico, and also for copies of all questions he had secured from the law officers of the Government to justify his action; also "a complete and detailed list of all precedents concerning the transfer to foreign governments, or factions, for money, of arms and munitions of the United States."

Wilson Sanctioned Delivery.

Weeks replied that he never requested the formal opinion of the law officer of his department in regard to the Mexican sale, and as to precedents he submitted a list wihch comprised only three incidents—a loan of 5,000,000 rounds of ammunition, during the Cuban rebellion of 1906 to the firm of Hartley, "under telegraphic instructions from President Roosevelt;" the sale of rifles and artillery by Austria to the Confederate States of America in 1861, and the following:

"July 11 and July 25, 1919, sale under contract dated July 30, 1919, to Russia (Kolchak Government) of 198,833 rifles and 13,594,026 rounds of ammunition, for delivery in Siberia."

Attached as an exhibit was this letter:

"State Department, Washington,
July 11, 1919.

"My dear Mr. Secretary:

On June 27, 1919, I asked the Mission at Paris whether I could assure you and any others concerned, that the announcement to support Kolchak meant that we could work on a credit basis with 10 per cent initial cash payment in putting supplies at the disposal of the Omsk Government."

"Mr. McCormick telegraphed me July 2, 1912, that he had shown my telegram to the President, who saw no objection to our dealing openly with representatives of the Omsk Government, nor to the proposed financial arrangements, provided that in both cases there is no formal or diplomatic recognition of the Omsk Government.

"I should be very glad if you will let me know what arrangements, if any, you may come to in regard to furnishing supplies to the government of Admiral Kolchak thru Mr. Znamensky or any other representative of that government now in this country. I think if we are going to do anything at all it must be soon.

"I am enclosing copy of my telegram and Mr. McCormick's reply.

I am, my dear Mr. Baker,
Very sincerely yours,
(Signed) Frank L. Polk.

"Enclosures: Telegram to the Mission, dated June 27, 1919; telegram from the Mission dated July 1; and telegram from the George Washington, at sea, dated July 2, 1919."

Anxious to Aid Bandits.

The McCormick who was at President Wilson's elbow was Vance McCormick of Pennsylvania, national committeeman and friend of Mitchell Palmer.

In the list of legal opinions dealing with sale of war supplies is one dated July, 1919, holding that arms and munitions acquired prior to the entry of the United States into the war could be sold to others than the Allied governments. This would appear to have been produced in sympathy with the warning from the State Department's acting chief—"I think if we are going to do anything at all it must be soon."

A list of offers of purchase of American was supplies is also given, with this report. It shows that the Russian contract called for delivery of 260,000 rifles—"Russian 7.62," but that only the number quoted above were delivered. The purchase price was $5,552,399. A separate sale of 100 denating fuses, for $290, to "Russia" is recorded for Sept. 25, 1919. No indication is given as to whether these were supplied for the blowing up of railway bridges and stations during the retreat of the Whites in Siberia.

PRESIDENT OF CUBA TRIES TO GO INTO BATTLE

Government Anxious For Peace With Rebels

(Special to The Daily Worker)

HAVANA, Cuba, May 5.—For the first time in the history of Cuba's internal troubles and revolutions a president has gone to a front of actual fighting. President Zayas has arrived at Cienfuegos to investigate personally the insurrection. It is said that the government is very anxious to make peace with the rebels and is ready to grant amnesty to all rebel forces.

Because of the president's order suspending the two leading papers of Havana, El Sol, a morning paper, and El Heraldo, another very influential daily, it is hard to get accurate news. Most of the news sent to the United States so far has passed thru the hands of such agents of the Zayas government as, for example, the high officials of the United Railways of Havana.

Meanwhile fighting is proceeding with intensity in several sections of the mountainous country. Federico Laredo Bru, a veteran of the Cuban war of independence, is one of the leaders of the rebels. Aldo Baroni, director of the newspaper El Heraldo, which has recently been very outspoken in its opposition to the Zayas administration and has been waging a strong propaganda campaign in behalf of an independent Latin-American movement as against American aggression, has just been ordered expelled from the country as "a pernicious person."

The government is counting on the American stock of ammunition and arms to crush the revolt, if the rebels refuse to surrender. Despite its repeated statements that the outbreak is insignificant and not widespread, the authorities fear its possible developments.

A proclamation just issued by the National Association of Veterans that "the definite hour of action and of sacrifice has come," is especially disquieting to the government.

LORD BALFOUR TELLS AMERICAN CAPITALISTS TO FOLLOW BRITISH EXAMPLE IN REDUCING LABOR COSTS

By LELAND OLDS.
(Federated Press Industrial Editor).

Reduction of American labor costs as the price of success in meeting foreign competition or else three to four years of industrial depression is Sir Arthur Balfour's diagnosis of the industrial situation in the United States in an interview given to a leading business journal. Balfour pointed out that the high protectivve tariff was impairing America's ability to sell its products in world trade.

"We have nothing to fear from American competition," he said, "except in certain specialized lines such as automobiles. Your cost of production is too high. You have too many luxuries and you pay your labor as much per day as we do per week."

He declared that the apparent prosperity of American industry would not last, adding, "You are filling the demands of your local markets which, since the war, have been dormant. Your prosperity may continue for some time—say 18 months, but not much longer."

Balfour thinks it will take several years of depression to teach America the remedy. In England, he said, they experienced just such a trade paralysis and are just beginning to wake up to the fact that the only remedy is to cut labor costs.

This is a clear forecast of what labor has to expect from the capitalist fight for world markets. Successive reductions in British wages have brought many primary producers to a level scarcely 50 per cent above pre-war while the cost of living ranges about 80 per cent above that level. In other words, the pre-war standard of living of the British working class has been seriously impaired.

This impairment of the wage earner's living standard in the interest of a commercial empire is nothing new to British history. Frank Vanderlip, former president of the National City Bank, in his book, "What Happened to Europe," describes the stunted population of English manufacturing centers as due to the "red ink overdraft" which British industry has made on its physique of her citizens in order to compete for foreign markets.

Balfour expects this fatal policy to move across the Atlantic to the United States where previously the sacrifice of working class well-being has been in the interest of building domestic industrial capacity to a point where foreign markets became a necessity. And as Balfour is president of the Associated British chambers as well as manager of one of England's foremost tool steel works, his analysis merits consideration.

Negroes Are Told They Must Fight For Their Rights

(By The Federated Press)

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 5.—"You do not pull together and fight for your rights," Congressman L. C. Dyer, author of the anti-lynching bill, told a mass meeting of Negroes in Brooklyn, called to protest against curtailment of their constitutional rights. Though statistics show lynchings are on the decline because they are bad advertising for the South, "we have no accurate accounts of lynchings," Walter F. White, secretary, National Assn. for Advancement of Colored People, maintained. About $500 was raised at the meeting for the association.

Negroes Step Over Bar.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 5.—The Ararat Temple of the Shrine attempted to draw the color line at its annual carnival last week. Such a stunt is specially raw since the carnival was located at 15th and Paseo streets, in the heart of the Black Belt, and the residents complain that the noise prevents them from sleeping.

The Negroes, after peacefully protesting and tendering payment, grew impatient, brushed aside the attendants and went in free. They were so sore that they refused to leave till after midnight, and the management did not dare to try to eject them or close.

Mines In Bad Shape.

BILLINGS, Mont., May 5.—Montana and North Dakota coal mines are in bad shape with no demand for coal, according to District President Joseph Bosone of the miners' union. In North Dakota only a few small open shop mines employing two to five men each are in operation.

STRIKING MINERS APPEAL TO FEED, CLOTHE FAMILIES

22 Months' Fight Has Made Need Great

OHLEY, W. Va., May 5.—Contributions of clothing and canned foods are sorely needed here to help the striking miners who have been out against the coal operators for 22 months. Most of the men have large families of children of all ages and are virtually enslaved by the company because of their debts.

An appeal has been sent out by the Eastern Committee in the name of the United Mine Workers of America, Local Union No. 1425, for aid and donations of clothing, shoes, and canned goods. All contributions should be sent directly and immediately to Mr. Bell, Ohley, W. Va., who will see to their equitable distribution among the needy miners' families.

These miners are striking for decent conditions. The coal operators attempt to control every movement of their lives and every move of their families. The men have been struggling for nearly two years against uncountable odds and their need is desperate.

Packed Hall Greets May Day Speakers In Warren, Ohio

By MRS. TYYNE KUUTTILA.

WARREN, Ohio, May 5. — This year's May Day celebration turned out to be one of the largest mass meetings held here for a long time. The hall was packed with people.

The program was very good, including speeches, poems, songs, and a play named "The Red General." The main speakers of the evening were Max Lerner of Cleveland and John Karhu of Warren, who spoke in the Finnish language.

The Finnish orchestra of the Workers Party branch here, furnished the music for the evening and after the meeting, played for the dance. Many May Day buttons were sold.

Pullman Strike Spreads

to arrive on the 5 p. m train from Davenport, Iowa, and the pickets planned to meet the men as they came in.

One of the strikers visited 84 business men in Pullman and Roseland before 10 a. m. yesterday morning to sell them the DAILY WORKER and inform them of the mass meeting which was held last night. He, and other strikers, encouraged all the business men of the town to come out to the meeting and get the facts of the strike and the causes.

John Holmgren, general vice-president of the carmen's union, said that the Chicago Federation had promised support to the strikers, offered speakers and introductions to local unions to help secure financial aid.

A couple of drunken plain clothes men were seen by the DAILY WORKER reporter as they reeled up to a two-seated Ford, Illinois license 80-113, and tax tag 65 from Bolton, Ill., remove two bottles of whisky, drink, and then stagger down the street toward Calumet Lake. One of the employment managers saw the men and remarked to pickets standing near:

"Gee whiz, those fellows are drunk!"

Pickets were alarmed and thought that the drunken dicks might start firing indiscriminately.

The cops that slugged Sam Green of the Young Workers League were again at their station by the employment office, and tried to discourage the strikers from picketing there. They crabbed to the men about the account of their dirty beating up and arresting of Green when he had finished selling his papers.

Green, Spynow Tried May 8.

Sam Green, arrested for "disorderly conduct" in front of the employment gate last week, demanded a jury trial, and his case will come up on May 8 with that of Nick Spynow, in the Municipal Court, Branch 38, 8855 Exchange Avenue. Green gave the DAILY WORKER further details of his arrest. "I had been selling papers in front of the employment gate at 110th street," said Green, "and was calling, 'Read all about the Pullman strike in the DAILY WORKER.' Several machine loads of workers had driven up from St. Louis and from Cleveland, Ohio, and O'Leary, the employment manager, came out and gave them the glad hand.

Green Tells of Slugging.

"When the men heard me call out about the strike they bought papers, and finding out for the first time there was a strike on, refused to accompany O'Leary into the plant. I sold these men my last papers, and was standing talking to John Harvey of the Young Workers League. Emil Mertz, plain clothes slugger No. 2077, and Frank O'Keefe, No. 3547, had been sitting in their flivver watching the employment gate. They seemed angered that the DAILY WORKER had turned the out-of-town workers away. The men swooped down on me and one of them slugged me three times over the head. 'I'll teach you to make fun of me,' he yelled. The men grabbed me, pulled me down the street, and took me up toward 115th street. When I demanded to know what they wanted and demanded that they show their badges, they slugged me over the head again."

Green's bail, set at $50, was supplied by John Stancik, 205 East 115th street.

Cowing Gets Fooled.

General Foreman John Cowings has been the most unscrupulous and the most active in trying to break the strike. Cowings has whispered all sorts of rumors and threats to the men, but they have refused to have anything to do with him. It was Cowings who sent out word to the reamers that they must come back to work and break the strike. He has several times sent word to the men to meet him for a conference, and has tried to induce them to accept the wage cut.

Asks Scabs to Perjure Selves.

Cowings' worst trick was "put over" Saturday. Cowings came out and talked to three of the strikers. One of them was cleaning his nails with a penknife. Cowings went back into the shop and spread the story that this striker had drawn a knife and attempted to stab him. Cowings tried to impress on three scabs that they had witnessed this act. They declared they had not. Cowings then told them they would either act as witnesses or lose their scab jobs. When the scabs refused to perjure themselves, Cowings that night fired them. Thus does the Pullman Company bribe its men with fat bonuses to do the dirty work.

Scab Goes on Strike.

One scab, who admitted to the DAILY WORKER reporter that he had been nothing but a bum, a gangster and a cutthroat gunman for many years past, declared to the DAILY WORKER that he is out on a strike of his own. "The Pullman Company promised to pay me 85 cents an hour," said this man, "but when they paid me off I only received 65 cents an hour. My arrangement with the company was that I was not to do any actual riveting, but was to make a lot of noise so that the men outside the plant would lose heart. I would not do their dirty work for less than they promised me, and quit."

Strike Aid for Pickets.

Plans have been made by John Holmgren, the strike leader, to visit some of the favorable unions during the coming week, and appeal to them for financial aid to the strikers. Some of the painters and carpenters' locals will be among the first visited. "Strike aid will be given on the basis of picketing," Holmgren told the DAILY WORKER. "Every striker has promised to picket the shops and railroad stations, and each one has been assigned a definite time and place to do the picketing. We are planning to pay some of the urgent expenses of these pickets and expect substantial financial aid from organized labor in Chicago."

Union organizations which have been following the progress of the Pullman strike in the DAILY WORKER are urged to write the DAILY WORKER stating when they can receive a delegation of the strikers to take up the matter of financial aid.

N. Y. WOMEN WILL PARADE; DEMAND HOUSING RELIEF

Want City To Build Houses For Workers

(Special to The Daily Worker)

NEW YORK CITY, May 5.—Under the direction of the United Council of Workingclass Women, New York workers' wives will march on the City Hall, May 17th, in a demonstration parade, demanding that the city build houses and rent them to workers at cost. The marchers will assemble at Rutgers Square at 1:30 p. m. on May 17th and move in formation from there to the City Hall.

Over fifty affiliated organizations are supporting the demonstration planned by the United Council of Workingwomen and it is expected that the march will be memorable in the number of participants.

Preliminary Meetings Planned.

Open air meetings preparatory to the great demonstration, are to be held by the Council, as follows:

Wednesday, May 7—Upper East Side and West Side.

Friday, May 9—Coney Island and Negro Section in West Harlem.

Saturday, May 10—Harlem, Yorkville, Williamsburgh and Brownsville.

Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, May 13, 14, 15, 16—Lower East Side.

Speakers will address the residents from trucks at various points enroute and literature will be distributed. The aim of the Council of Workingclass Women and their parade will be explained to the women and a call for aid issued.

The United Council sent out a resolution on housing and the demonstration to various labor organizations of New York. The council asked endorsement of the resolution and whatever contributions can be made to help out the work. The resolution is:

Resolution Sent for Approval.

"Whereas, the rent laws passed in 1920 and the recent extension of these laws have afforded no relief from the intolerable situation in which the workers find themselves, and

"Whereas, the tax exemption did not relieve the great mass of workers who cannot pay $20 a room in the newly-built tax exempt houses, and

"Whereas, the workers are still compelled to live in unsanitary and dangerous fire-traps,

"Therefore, be it RESOLVED that we endorse the demand of the United Council of Workingclass Women for CITY BUILT HOUSES TO BE RENTED TO WORKERS AT COST, and

Be it further resolved, that we heartily support the DEMONSTRATION arranged by the United Council of Workingclass Women to be held on Saturday afternoon, May 17th, 1924 in PROTEST to the miserable conditions that endanger the morale, health and very life of the workers."

This is to be signed by the name of the organization, date of meeting, place of meeting, number of members, and approved by the secretary.

Contributions should be sent to Kate Gitlow, secretary, United Council of Workingclass Women, 125 Fourth Avenue, New York City. Information can be obtained at this office between 2 and 4 every day except Saturday and Sunday.

Rent-Hog Bombed; Doubled Rent And Leased To Negroes

More drastic action than a strike threat was taken against a greedy South Side landlord Sunday morning, when two of his buildings were bombed. Alexander Rosen, owner of more than 15 apartment buildings on the South Side, confesses that he recently bought three Groveland Park buildings and doubled the rents.

The irate white tenants raised a cry, but Rosen told them to get out, and he had his agents seek Negro tenants from their crowded district. White neighbors protested.

The DAILY WORKER has already pointed out how the white landlords started exploiting the Negroes and how some bourgeois Negro landlords have gone even the whites one better in exploiting the people of their Race. The situation has come that well-to-do Negro tenants prefer renting from white landlords, who soak them not quite such exorbitant rents as Negro exploiters.

Northwest side tenants are continuing their protests in the Renters' Court, under Judge Samuel Trude. South Side tenants seem to need a similar protective league themselves.

More Facts About War On Russia

Russia.

Tells of "Gigantic Conspiracy."

"It happens," Martin began, "that I am the only licensed aviator in the United States who is also a licensed maritime navigating officer. I shall review for you in a separate interview the gigantic conspiracy under which the pioneer airmen of the United States were shut out of participation in the aircraft building program when the United States went into the war. It is sufficient just now to say that big financial groups drove me out of the country, and stopped my work in France and England after those governments had welcomed my help. I was tired and harrassed, and I came home and took command of a Shipping Board vessel, the Lake Fray, and sailed to Hamburg with one of the first cargoes of flour to reach Germany after the armistice. Then I went down to Bordeaux, and was loading a cargo of shells to be returned home, when there came a cable from Amshibo, the code name for the Shipping Board, London office, telling me that I was to unload and go into the service of the American Relief Administration, the ARA, carrying supplies from there to Reval.

"This astonished and dismayed me, because just at that time I had assurances from Mr. Tumulty, secretary to President Wilson, that a special investigation of my aircraft fraud charges was about to be started. So I protested, pointing out that there were twelve Board vessels in Bordeaux harbor equally well prepared to go to Reval. It cost $63,000 just to unload the Lake Frey. But the orders stood, and I obeyed, when my request for a transfer was denied.

On "Hoover's" Orders.

"From Hoover's office in Paris, came the order, brought down by messenger, and confirmed by telegraph, that I should load the remaining supplies at St. Nazaire and Bassens, and I did so. The telegrams and letters were signed 'Hoover.' When further orders arrived, that I take with me Gen. Ernest Wahl and certain other agents of the Russian Northwestern Army, which was the Yudenitch force, as well as Maj. Morse and three noncommissioned officers of the American air force, I felt that the carrying of the Russian soldiers was a violation of international maritime laws, and I appealed to the London office of the Shipping Board for confirmation. I took these precautions in order to make sure that I was following the policy of the administration.

"My orders from Hoover's Paris office were not merely confirmed by the London office of the Shipping Board; they were amplified. I was instructed to 'extend unusual courtesies' to Gen. Wahl of the Russian general staff and certain other representatives of the Northwestern army. Moreover, I was to accept any instructions from Hoover.

"And so, with the goods aboard, and bills of lading sent down by courier from Paris duly signed, I sailed from Bassens in August, and at the end of that month reached Reval. My Russian guests were treated as well as was possible, considering the fact that mine was not a passenger vessel. Gen. Wahl importuned me to hasten the voyage in order that the motor trucks might be put into service as quickly as possible. Yudenitch could not move until he had them.

U. S. Trained Yudenitch Men.

"The status of Maj. Morse and his subordinates seemed to be that they were on leave, and were loaned to the ARA. They wore their uniforms, and were accepted as army officers. When they reached Reval they took charge of the delivery of the motor trucks and supplies to Yudenitch, working with Gen. Ianoff and Gen. Wahl. The Americans then trained a lot of Yudenitch's men in the operation and repair of the machines, and in fact, constituted themselves as experts in the motor service of the Yudenitch army until it started into Russia.

"All thru this stage of the affair I had listened to Wahl's requests and urgings of speed. I had taken extra marine hazards in changing my sailing course so as to arrive sooner than was first expected. I thought I knew the meaning of the order that I show these Russians special courtesies. For this help I was decorated. I have telegrams from Yudenitch and Ianoff, in Russian and in English, showing that they appreciated my attitude.

British Labor Blocks Plot.

"But another part of the inter-Allied conspiracy to overthrow the Soviet government in Russia had in the meanwhile gone wrong. British airplanes and tanks were to have been furnished by Winston Churchill, and the outcry by British labor had prevented his doing this. So it was proposed to me that I take a commission to go down to Danzig and buy a lot of German planes and guns, and bring them up to Reval. The money to pay for them was to be sent from England to the Anskilda Bank in Stockholm, and by them transferred to a Berlin bank.

"I had to deliver food supplies in Danzig anyhow, and this looked like a good chance to serve the policy of my government. But I wanted to be sure of the policy. I saw Gen. Goff of the British army, who was known in the Baltic region at that time as the spokesman for Allied and American policy toward Russia and Germany. A Russian colonel came to me with detailed specifications of their needs, and plans for meeting them. There was then held a conference at which were present Yudenitch, Ianoff, the minister of finance and Gen. Goff. The latter was to get the consent of the British government for the purchase of these war supplies in Germany.

Orders to Aid Yudenitch.

"Captain Miller, representing the ARA in Reval, confirmed to me the favorable policy of the American government toward Yudenitch, as had Wahl and Goff. Besides, I had had specific orders to deliver my original cargo to the Russian Northwestern army. I communicated with Thornwell Haynes in Helsingfors, and he said: 'Obviously, your latest orders were to aid this movement.'

"I decided to make the attempt to bring planes to Yudenitch. But I reserved the right, in my correspondence with Ianoff, to cease my activities at any moment that I had information of a reversal of the attitude of my government. Gen. Goff's naval fleet commander gave me special permission to go thru to Danzig, and I went.

"Everything moved on schedule, as far as making the purchases was concerned, but the money failed to arrive. We learned afterward that some of the English banks intrigued to prevent the transmission of the money from the London bank where it had been placed. I do not know who deposited it there—whether any government provided it or whether private persons found the money. In any case, it did not come, and at last, in desperation, I sailed back to Reval and reported the fact.

Yudenitch Officers Tear Hair.

"Yudenitch's officers tore their hair, when they got into conference. Cables were sent to England. Then it was assured that the cash, $5,000,000, would be forwarded, and again I sailed to Danzig, but was held there. Von der Goltz, the German commander whose force was to have assisted Yudenitch, had suddenly marched against the Letts, and set up a Latvian government of his own. The British issued an order of blockade. Yudenitch was forced to move toward Petrograd with such equipment as he had. He got nearly into Petrograd before the Red army stopped him, and then his troops dissolved.

"I sailed to Finland later, and then was ordered to Riga. I got in thru the shallow northern passage, and was under shell fire in the battle across the river there between the Letts and Bermont, the associate of Von der Goltz. Then I proceeded to London.

"After I had started to secure the airplanes for Yudenitch, a report hostile to me was sent in by one Leach, who was a sort of spy for the ARA. They proposed to relieve me of my command, and Leach quoted in one report a statement by Gen. Wahl that it would be unsafe for me to return in command of my ship to testify at any trial of myself.

"When I got to London they locked up my crew for a week as tho they were criminals, and after I had been removed from command, I was summoned before a special board consisting of Capt. Blake and Capt. Scott, Capt. Haynes, chairman, and Anderson, attorney for the Shipping Board, with representatives of the American embassy, naval and military attaches and lawyers for the army. Just as we were getting under way with the inquiry, a messenger from War Minister Winston Churchill arrived, to ask me to meet Churchill at the House of Commons that afternoon. Pemberton Billings, M. P., was Churchill's intermediary.

Churchill the "Brains."

"That message acted like a damper on the proceedings. They adjourned until next morning. I had a long talk with Churchill, who questioned me as to conditions in the Baltic countries since the fate of the Yudenitch expedition had been sealed. He was clearly the brains of the whole venture, and he wanted to know why it had failed.

"Next morning I went back to my investigation, but the officers were not there. I hunted up one after another, but each denied any responsibility for the business. They were not interested. It had all been a mistake.

"And that was as far as I got.

War on Russia.

"Did the American government make war on the Soviet Russian government? That is a legal point. Certainly they sent aid to the enemies of the Soviets. And the Finnish army, which waited on the border to move into Russia as soon as Yudenitch had taken Petrograd, stayed out because Yudenitch did not conquer the ground directly in front of them and ask them to come in as his guests, to 'restore order.' If Yudenitch had been able to capture that narrow belt of ground, he would have had 160,000 well-equipped Finns at his disposal, and Finland would have been upheld at Paris and in London in the claim that she had not made war on Russia, but had merely responded to an invitation from the Russian government of Yudenitch and Kolchak and Denikin.

"If that English bank had sent the money, I would have delivered that cargo of airplanes in time. Yudenitch would probably have taken Petrograd. I don't believe I would have been called before a board in London."

delegates. With a large proportion of the delegates coming from local unions demanding reinstatement, the international is likely to fail.

Democratic Politicians.

There was some resentment among the delegates at the way President Sigman, turned over the convention platform to a Democratic politician.

Mayor Curley's speech was like a Democratic rally. His friends who sat in the audience boosted him for governor, and Curley in return boosted Governor Al Smith of New York for president.

Then President Sigman announced that Al Smith would address the convention.

"REINSTATEMENT" THE ISSUE

(By The Federated Press)

BOSTON, May 5. — Expulsion of members of the Trade Union Educational league from the union locals by officials of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' union is one of the controversial issues before delegates to the biennial convention of the union in session in Boston. A labor party and alliance with the conference for progressive political action convention in Cleveland; adoption of a union label; release of political prisoners; action against injunctions, the Ku Klux Klan, the Fascism are other matters before the convention. Revision of the union's constitution has been recommended by the executive board.

No Dual Unionism.

Charges of dual unionism are denied by the expelled members and others who point to their long and active membership in the union and their election to joint boards by the rank and file as proof of their loyalty and value to the I. L. G. W. They charge the officials with conservatism and fear of a militant program for amalgamation, a class labor party, and workers' control thru the shop delegate plan. Their expulsion was brought about by autocratic methods of the international officials in defiance of the rank and file, they claim.

N. Y., Phila., Chicago.

New York local 22, 1, and 9, Philadelphia cloak joint board and local 15, and Chicago locals and joint board are listed in the executive board's report as important units controlled or partly controlled by league members before the expulsions. Of the New York local 22 board of 24 members, 19 were expelled last September. Two Chicago board members were put out in August, and later 11 members who led in the protest against that action. When Philadelphia locals 2 and 15 refused to obey the expulsion order, both locals were outlawed by the international officials who formed new locals.

The union officials, who maintained last summer that no real bullets were fired at William Z. Foster at the Chicago protest-expulsion meeting of garment workers, have modified that stand in their biennial report. They say the shooting is "among the great unsolved mysteries of the age." Federated Press and Chicago police reports stated that bullet holes were visible in the Carmen's hall ceiling.

As a substitute for the amalgamation program of the T. U. E. L. a federation of five needle trades unions was started by the I. L. G. W. and Amalgamated Clothing workers last September. The I. L. G. W. officials report to the convention that "nothing practical has been accomplished."

HENRY FORD'S CANDIDATE, CALVIN COOLIDGE, THANKS THREE BANKERS FOR GRABBING GERMANY FOR MORGAN

WASHINGTON, May 5. — President Coolidge today expressed the thanks of the American government and nation to the three private experts who represented the U. S. in the fromulation of the Dawes plan for a settlement of the reparations question.

After visiting Secretary of State Hughes and Secretary of the Treasury, Mellon, the American experts, Gen. Charles G. Dawes, Owen D. Young and Henry M. Robinson, called on President Coolidge at the White House.

Asked as to the possibility of his entering politics to seek the Republican nomination for vice-president or be a permanent chairman of the Republican National Convention, Dawes replied:

"I am not in politics and I have no intention of entering politics.

PARK BABIES WHILE THEY PICKET SCHOOL

Women Knit Furiously As Line Grows

By BETTY CONNOLLY CARPENTER
For the Federated Press.

HAVERHILL, Mass.—The mothers of Haverhill are carrying on an active picketing campaign to close the Currier public school. For the past three years the parents in this school district claimed that the building is antiquated, unsafe and unsanitary.

During the past few weeks the women have maintained a picket line. In the morning when the school was opened they were at the entrance with their children whom they were keeping out of school. The picket line first had only a few women. Daily it grew. Some come with their knitting. Others come with baby carriages and park them while they take their turn in the picket line.

Women Carry Banners.

Each woman has a banner. On some are the words "Currier School Unsafe." Others read, "Don't Send Your Children Here, School Unsafe"; "Unsanitary School." The women picket in the morning, at noon and after school. When the children come out of the building the pickets send a note home to the parents with each child. The note tells of the conditions and asks for support in the fight to close the school.

The protest was so well planned and executed that each day hundreds of people gather in the vicinity of the school and see the conditon of the building and the unkempt grounds. Almost daily the police are called upon to keep the people from picketing, but in this they are unsuccessful. The truant officer called upon the parents and threatened them with arrest if they did not send their children to school. But the mothers were faithful in spite of threats. Many of them told him, "We would rather be in jail than have our children in this school."

A Firetrap.

The Currier school was built 52 years ago at the edge of a large swamp which is now filled and on which are built hundreds of tenement houses. The land as well as the swamp was the property of one of Haverhill's leading citizens, who donated the land for the school and sold or owns the balance as landlord of the tenements that sprang up around the school. Its rickety old stairs, narrow, with a turn half way up, and placed in dark corners of the building, make it a firetrap. Twenty years ago fire escapes were put on the outside of the building, but these have pulled away so far from the building that they have been torn down.

In the girls' toilet room in the basement is a stove upon which the noonday lunches are cooked. The ventilation is in keeping with the building itself. Old and unsanitary appliances in the toilet rooms are a constant menace to the children.

Feeling has run so high that the authorities have stationed a policeman to see that no damage is done to the school building. The city solicitor has promised to confer with the school board to see whether the council or the board has the right to close the building.

Meanwhile a hundred or more mothers picket and knit while their attorney tries to get action.

Christians Having Hard Time To Make Nazarene's Ideas Stand

(By The Federated Press)

NEW YORK, May 5.—Presidential veto of the immigration bill, allowing only 2 per cent on the basis of the 1890 census, is demanded in a letter to Coolidge by the executive committee, Fellowship of Reconciliation, New York. The bill "is a violation of the principle of brotherhood, and is both disingenuous and mischieveous," says Bishop Paul Jones, who signs the letter.

"Even more strongly we deplore the indignity cast on Japan by the special provisions directed agaainst her," the letter adds. The Fellowship of Reconciliation is described as "a group of people who believe that we can and should apply to concrete situations the principles taught by Jesus Christ."

PULLMAN STRIKER ON PICKET DUTY SELLS THE DAILY WORKER

NATIONWIDE MOVEMENT LED BY CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION ON TO GET SCALP OF "GREAT DEFECTIVE"

By LUDWELL DENNY
(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

NEW YORK, May 5.—Investigation of "the lawless and propaganda activities" of the bureau of investigation, United States department of justice, and material reduction in its pending appropriation, is demanded of the Senate appropriations committee in a resolution passed by the Civil Liberties union's seventh annual dinner in New York.

"Burns must go" is the slogan of a nation-wide movement being started by the Liberties union to oust the present chief, bureau of investigation.

Harry F. Ward, chairman of the union, told the meeting that the following demands would be made upon President Coolidge and Attorney General Stone:

That Burns explain his open confession before the senate committee that he is out to suppress the civil liberties of American citizens; that Burns' successor shall be in no way connected with a private detective agency; that the bureau of investigation confine its activities to matters covered by federal statutes; if the plan goes through of making a radical Who's Who, that it be open to public inspection.

Dens of Thieves.

"Private detectives agencies in the U. S. are in effect criminal organization but have had the power and wealth to prevent government action," Ward said, adding that now Burns, the head of the biggest of these organizations is chief of the government bureau and has imported criminal methods into the government. "There is no legal warrant for federal officers to stir up state officials to take action in matters which are not covered by federal statutes," he said in reference to the Michigan and California cases. "A country cannot maintain a spy system and remain free; a government which has to protect itself by espionage has begun to decline and its end is in sight," Ward concluded.

et tre Gompers.

An alleged "interlocking directorate of radical hunters, with Burns in the middle, Easley of the Security League and Civic Federation on the right hand, and Samuel Gompers on the left hand" was described by Robert W. Dunn, asociate director. He described the National Civic Federation as prominent capitalist, "dollar-a-year espionage men," practicing voluntary spying by supplying names of radicals to the department of justice. R. M. Whitney, American Defense Society, has access to department of justice records, a privilege not acorded to government investigators in the oil probe, Dunn asserted. Dunn read Burns' correspondence, recently published by The Federated Press, the DAILY WORKER and Industrial Solidarity, showing that Burns is using his official position to coordinate the anti-labor activities of the department of justice and the Burns Detective agency of which he is still the active head.

Rifled Friends' Satchels

Some of the people who are going to be most active in ousting Burns are Republicans from whom he took money without giving any return, said A. A. Berle, attorney for the Virgin Islands committee. Berle claimed to be a Republican who had worked with Burns.

Appropriations of $2,250,000 for the bureau of investigation, department of justice, for 1923 and the same amount requested for 1924 are "over twice as great as during the war and over four times as great as as before it, the great increases being based largely on the need of combatting radicals," states the resolution sent to the senate committee. Radical activities "are not such as to demand attention of the government, as proved clearly by the bureau's failure to find any basis for prosecutions," the resolution says.

The defeated joker in the administration's immigration bill, permitting deportation of citizens for alleged radicalism, was inserted in the bill by the National Security League, Director Roger N. Baldwin told the Liberties Union meeting.

"That Old Devil Sea" Made Trouble For Harry Thaw's Sister

NEW YORK, May 5.—Countess Margaret Thaw De Perigny, sister of Harry K. Thaw, was named co-respondent in an action for divorce filed by Mrs. Madeline Helen Nordica in Brooklyn, it became known today.

Mrs. Nordica asks an absolute divorce from her husband, Emmanuel Victor Mordica, of Newark, N. J., alleging indiscretions with the countess while they were aboard the Homeric on a voyage to Paris.

Countess De Perigny gave Mordica presents, including an automobile and $4,000 in cash, Mrs. Mordica alleges.

BURSUM PENSION BILL IS KILLED BY COOLIDGE

Expected To Knife The Soldiers' Bonus

WASHINGTON, May 5.— Calvin Coolidge vetoed the Bursum pension bill, basing his disapproval on the ground of expense. The bill represented an expenditure of approximately $55,000,000 and granted increased pensions to veterans, widows, dependent children and nurses of the Civil, Mexican, 1812, Spanish, Philippine and Boxer wars. It is rumored here that the Wall street manager in the White House will treat the soldiers' bonus bill in the same manner.

The President in his veto message said substantially it was regrettable that heroes who fight wars should not be satisfied with the glory gained. However, he cannot tolerate any more tampering with the sacred fires of patriotism, which are liable to be quenched with squirts of oil and bribes to war veterans for doing their plain duty.

Coolidge feels that if the craze to compensate soldiers for fighting for the capitalists increases, and if this compensation comes out of the pockets of those who have money, as it must, the prospects for the future look none too bright for those who make millions on wars. Think of the cost of a pension bill for the wives and dependents of the millions who were mobilized in the late war!

The veto will lose Coolidge some votes, but Wall street has set a dead line beyond which he is not allowed to pass even at the risk of breaking his political neck.

In a burst of moral indignation, Coolidge said in his message: "I am for economy. I am against every unnecessary payment of the money of the taxpayers. * * * The cost of commodities is diminishing. Under such conditions the cost of government should not be increasing. The desire to do justice to pensioners must be attended by some solicitude to do justice to taxpayers. The advantages of a class cannot be greater than the welfare of the nation."

Thus the Wall street lackey disposed of the pension bill. It is expected he will use the same argument in vetoing the bonus bill, which is now before him for consideration. Only a perfunctory effort will be made to override the veto of the Bursum bill. President Harding vetoed a similar measure by Senator Bursum.

Miners Protest Bill To Register Workers Of Foreign Birth

(Special to The Daily Worker)

MINERSVILLE, Pa., May 5.—More than 500 miners and other workers of this vicinity unanimously adopted the following resolution at a recent mass meeting in Union Hall:

"Whereas, the Johnson bill recently passed by senate and Congress aims to discriminate against the foreign-born workers because of their political and trade union views, and

"Whereas, that bill would enable the employers to import to this country cheap labor and to break strikes, and

"Whereas, the new bills empower the government to cancel the citizenship of foreign-born workers and to deport them, because of participation in strikes, and

"Whereas, there are bills pending in Congress for the registration and photographing and finger-printing of all foreign-born workers in this country, be it resolved, that we miners of Minersville, Pa., and vicinity protest against the adoption of these strike-breaking laws and pledge ourselves to do everything in our power to make them annulled and be it further

"Resolved, to publish this resolution in the press and to send a copy to Congress.

(Signed) Carl Herman, Chairman."

Mellon Charged With Drawing Surtax Plan For Big Corporations

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The Mellon surtax plan was drawn as a political favor to big business, Senator Simmons, North Carolina, charged in the Senate Saturday when the rates were formally taken up for a vote.

Simmons opened the fight for the 40 per cent maximum surtax instead of the Mellon 25 per cent proposal.

Tracing the history of Mellon's tax recommendations, Simmons declared the treasury secretary had always favored an extremely low surtax—much lower than Congress ever saw fit to adopt.

Local Union For June 17th.

CLEVELAND, O., May 5.—Local No. 36-124 of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders went on record at its last meeting for a Farmer-Labor Party. It endorsed the June 17th convention. The committee, delegated to the conference to decide on political action called for May 14th by the Cleveland Federation, was instructed to vote for the organization of a Cleveland Labor Party. The committee is composed of Anna Morgan, William Keck, business agent, and Paul Bergman.

GETTING BEHIND THE DAILY WORKER

Among the recent recruits to the rapidly growing army of DAILY WORKER supporters are the strikers in the huge plant of the Pullman Co., at Pullman, Ill. Watch 'em smile as they sell the DAILY WORKER while doing picket duty. Their slogan is, "Spread the Strike!" The Pullman organizations now number about 20,000 workers at Pullman, Ill., and at Michigan City, Indiana. A few of the many departments are out. The strikers hope to achieve a general walkout in the whole plant.

IMPOVERISHED FARMERS ON "GOLDEN GRAIN" PRAIRIES OF CANADIAN WEST ARE IN REVOLT

The fertility of the prairie lands of the Northwest is a matter of world renown. The rich black loam makes possible the production of hard wheat in quantities which stagger the imagination.

The immigration officials of the Dominion government; the publicity agents of the Canadian Pacific Railroad and other large land-owning corporations never tire of picturing, in the most glowing colors, the oceans of golden grain.

But it must be understood that altho Nature has endowed these wide-flung plains with a generous hand, the actual tillers of the soil are in desperate plight. Canadian agriculture is staggering around on crutches; the actual tillers of the soil are face to face with bankruptcy.

The Province of Saskatchewan has become famous as the "breadbasket of the British Empire." Yet the average half-section farm (320 acres) of this province carries a debt of five thousand dollars. In three typical municipalities 189,000 acres of land were foreclosed in one year because of the inability of the farmers to pay their taxes.

The Burden of Debt.

The province of Manitoba is in no better plight. Last fall 174 rural schools were compelled to close their doors because the tillers of the soil were unable to pay taxes.

Sunny Alberta likewise tells its tale of woe. It has been estimated that the total indebtedness of this province is well over $715,000,000. The province has tax sales over 10,767 farms with a total acreage in excess of 1,653,000. Foreclosures for arrears of taxes have become so numerous as to cause the provincial government cause for apprehension.

Tenant farming is on the increase and very few farmers actually own the land they till. Ninety-four percent of the farms of western Canada are mortgaged and it has been estimated that the indebtedness of the farmers is at least one billion dollars. It must be understood that this is a very conservative estimate.

Farming Does Not Pay.

It is becoming more and more apparent that farming does not pay from the viewpoint of the farmer. A bushel of wheat requires the expenditure of at least one dollar. In 1922 the average price received by the farmers of Canada was 87 cents, thus making a deficit of $51,000,000 on the total wheat crop. In 1923 the price dropped to 67 cents. The crop of this year was the largest in the history of the country and the plute press raved about the approaching prosperity in the "golden west." But the farmer discovered that the greatest crop in the history of the country brought him seventy million dollars less than the previous year.

Mortgages are increasing by leaps and by bounds; and the destitution of the farmers of this Northwest is becoming terrible. They are fast caught in the mortgage net of finance capital. They are rapidly being reduced to the level of landless slaves masquerading as propertied employers of labor.

Their plight is getting worse. The prices they pay for the commodities they need is on the increase; whilst the bottom has dropped out of the market so far as farm products are concerned. The gap between the price of city and the price of farm products is widening with alarming rapidity.

The Canadian farmer is face to face with bankruptcy. Thousands are leaving the farms and seeking pastures new. Despite the frantic efforts to encourage immigration on a large scale the number of vacant farms is steadily increasing.

Farmer Restive.

The farmers are beginning to show signs of revolt.

The milk-and-water policy of class-collaboration so long expounded by the leaders of the grain growers (like Crerar Maharg) is being slowly exposed. The Progressive Party (which is the political expression of the organized farmers) swept the west like a prarie fire. In the last Federal elections it captured practically every seat west of the Great Lakes; whilst its exponents rode into office in the three prairie provinces. Despite this wonderful show of solidarity and the existence of farmers' governments, the lot and condition of the farmers has steadily retarded. Adhering to the wretched policy of class collaboration the Progressive party has ceased to be feared by the banking barons of Montreal, and is hardly to be distinguished from the two old-line political parties.

The reaction is setting in with a vengeance. The whirlwind defeat of the Drury Farmer government of Ontario revealed the intense disgust of the farmers of that province. In the west the old-line grain growers association have lost members in tens of thousands and are only shadows of their former selves. A decided anti-political reaction is making itself apparent, the rapid rise of the Farmers' Union of Canada being evidence of this turn of the tide.

Demanding Action.

The farmers are questioning the efficiency of the old-line leadership and show unmistakable signs of restlessness. A left tendency is becoming apparent and is manifesting itself in more or less open revolt against the old reactionary leadership. At present this left wing is unorganized except in isolated cases, and it loses its effectiveness because of the individualistic nature of its activities. Efforts are now being made by the Communists to consolidate this left-wing; to give it direction. If this is accomplished then there will be remarkable changes in the agrarian situation of the Northwest within the next two or three years.

Signs are not wanting of a better understanding between the tiller of the soil and the industrial proletariat. Last summer the militant Farmers' Union of Canada issued an appeal to all labor organizations in the Dominion for joint action on the wheat pool, and suggested the calling of a joint convention of all farmer and labor organizations.

The recent convention of the Alberta section of the Canadian Labor Party (a mass political party constituted much the same as the British Labor Party) took a step in the same direction. A fraternal delegate was welcomed from the United Farmers of Alberta and a resolution was passed favoring closer cooperation between the two organizations. The Nova Scotia section of the C. L. P. favored the same course previously.

Workers-Farmers' Alliance.

The Communist Party of Canada understands the imperative necessity of a working alliance between the farmers and the industrial proletariat for definite class action. This need is all the more imperative when it is remembered that Canada is predominantly agricultural in its economy. A successful proletariat revolution in the Dominion without the active assistance of the farmers would be wholly impossible.

Every effort is being made, therefore, to bring closer together the labor and agrarian movement. The situation is not such that a Federated Farmer-Labor Party could be launched with any degree of success, but everything is tending in that direction. The rapid development of the Canadian Labor Party, which promises to become a real, live mass political party within a surprisingly short space of time, is a stepping stone in the right direction.

In this as in other countries the Communists unfurl the banner: Towards a Farmers' and Workers' Republic.

ANOTHER BANK CLOSES DOORS IN FROZEN NORTH

Ruin Of Farmer Blamed For Bankruptcy

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 5.—The capital Trust and Savings Bank, one of the largest in St. Paul, with $5,000,000 deposits, closed its doors today.

The closing came after a practically all night session of the directors and officials with A. J. Veigel, State Superintendent of Banks.

"The difficulties," Veigel said, "are due to 'frozen assets,' in the form of North Dakota and Montana paper, which cannot now be liquidated."

The bank has capital stock of $500,000 and is operated in connection with the Capital National Bank. The National Institution, it is said, is not affected by the closing.

Reports were that other St. Paul banks, and the clearing house association will come to the aid of the Capital Trust and Savings Bank. J. L. Mitchell is president of the bank. It was organized December 16, 1890.

Big Business Believes In Open Grafting Openly Arrived At

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 5.—Big business is trying to stop the congressional investigations of the graft of the Harding-Coolidge adminstration, Frank A. Vanderlip told the Western New York Publishers' Association, in session in Rochester. "The investigation might bring radicalism if it uncovered too much . . . Business is inclined to say there has always been graft in government and wants an orderly political campaign," he said.

Vanderlip who has aroused the ire of his former Wall street associates by starting a private investigating bureau to help the Wheeler and Walsh committees, declared "The job is only started. Daugherty is out, but his appointees are still scattered thru the department. William J. Burns, chief government detective, is one of those remaining.

LABOR CONQUERS RIGHT TO MEET IN WILKES-BARRE

Teapot Dome Speeches Despite Legion

(Special to The Daily Worker)

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., May 5.—The Workers Party proved its right to hold meetings in this city by holding one last night. The American Legion, which broke up a former meeting with armed men, did not attempt to interfere this time.

Abraham Jakira, district organizer for the Workers Party presided while George Powers of New York spoke at length on the graft-ridden political condition shown by the Teapot Dome exposes and while the DAILY WORKER and other party literature was sold.

Stenographer and Detectives.

A public stenographer, commissioned from Mayor Hart's office took down every word of the speeches. The meeting was so thoroly in the hands of the workers that the stenographer went to the formality of asking the chairman for permission first. Detectives scattered thru the audience, listened also, but made no attempt to interfere.

The right to hold the meeting was won after a long and hard struggle in which the American Civil Liberties Union had taken a leading part.

The Liberties Union was represented on the speakers' platform by Rev. Paul W. Fuller, also educational director for District No. 2 of the United Mine Workers of America. Fuller spoke on the right of free speech as guaranteed by the constitution of the United States and on the need for a Labor Party.

Labor Party Cheered.

All references to the Labor Party, and particularly to the need for farmers and workers to unite politically against the exploiters, were cheered enthusiastically by the miners and other workers assembled.

The Workers Party has won its battle of this year against corporation-legion-old party-politician gang that has been running this community and the fight is on for greater victories.

"Like most Socialist organs," the farewell editorial declares, "it was always published at a financial loss, which had to be made up in various ways by supporters of the movement, and rather than continue to face losses it was decided at a recent meeting of the stockholders of the company publishing the paper to suspend publication on May 1."

"Russia and Germany," Tale of Two Republics, Shows Here May 14th

"Russia and Germany"—a Tale of Two Republics, is the great new film showing Germany in the throes of a life and death struggle, while Russia is calmly going along on the way of peace and reconstruction. In Russia torn streets are being rebuilt, the children dance, buildings are going up, the workers are not in constant fear of unemployment oppression, they are learning to know how beautiful life can be when there are no capitalist masters.

In Germany there is trouble; troops with steel helmets march to oppress the "Proletarian Hundreds." The workers retreat sullenly and reluctantly; revolution is in the air; the misery which reigns in Germany, is unbearable; children are dying of hunger and disease. Against the beautiful setting of old German cities, hunger is making its ravages among the suffering population. And yet the spirit of rebellion is not dead; tremendous forces are grappling with each other.

All this can be seen in this new film, which unfolds before one's eyes, history in the making. This picture is released by the Committee of International Workers' Aid, and the proceeds go to the benefit of German Workers' Relief.

The Committee for International Workers' Aid, the American branch of the Internationale Arbeiter Hilfs Komitee appeals to the workers of America to do something for the children of the workers of Germany.

This picture is coming to Orchestra Hall, 220 S. Michigan Blvd., on May 14, at 7:00 and 9:00 p. m., for one night only. Under the auspices of the Friends of Soviet Russia and Workers' Germany, Room 303, 166 W. Washington St.

CALL FOR UNITED N. Y. FARM-LABOR MEETING MAY 18

Plan State Convention for Schenectady

NEW YORK CITY, May 5.—The Buffalo Labor Party and the New York Federated Farmer-Labor Party have sent out a call for a State Farmer-Labor Party convention to be held in Schenectady, Sunday, May 18, at 10 a. m. in the Labor Temple. All local unions and other working class organizations have been invited to act on the call in their first meeting and elect delegates to this state convention and to the national convention in St. Paul on June 17.

The names of state convention delegates should be sent in at once to the state secretary of the Farmer-Labor Party, Frank Herzog, 63 Leroy avenue, Buffalo, N. Y. Speakers will be sent to organizations requesting them from the local secretary, if they state in which language they wish the speaker to address the meeting.

The call for the state convention is issued in the name of the United Labor Party of New York. It is as follows:

To All Trade Unions, Labor, and Fraternal Organizations, Co-operatives and Labor Political Groups.

BROTHERS:—The United States today is under the control of a privileged class which thru its economic and political power dominates the life of this country. This privileged class has set up a financial oligarchy in Wall Street which uses its power to amass great wealth for itself at the expense of the well-being of the farmers and industrial workers, the producers of the wealth of the country.

To maintain its privileges and aid its exploitation of the farmers and industrial workers, this privileged class has fastened its grip upon the government. It uses the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the government to assist it in securing greater and greater profits, as was strikingly demonstrated by the recent exposure of corruption in connection with the Teapot Dome scandal.

During the past few years millions of farmers have been driven from the farms as a result of this exploitation by the privileged class. The industrial workers, struggling to maintain their organization and a decent standard of living, have found that this privileged class has at its command the powers of the government, whenever the struggle over the right to organize for better wages and working conditions has resulted in a strike. The use of injunctions against the workers on strike is an every-day occurrence. The infamous Daugherty injunction against the railroad shopmen still stands—an injunction which at one stroke robbed the workers of every supposedly guarantee by the Constitution of the United States.

The Republican and Democratic Parties have proven themselves to be equally the instrument of the privileged class.

These conditions have developed a widespread movement by the farmers and industrial workers to organize a political party which will fight their battles and challenge the continued rule of that privileged class in this country. State Farmer-Labor Parties have already been oragnized in Minnesota, Montana, South Dakota, North Dakota, Washington and West Virginia.

The State of New York, the empire industrial and commercial state in the nation, is still without a political party of the workers and exploited farmers. To organize such a party, a Call for a Convention is hereby issued by the Buffalo Labor Party and the Federated Farmer-Labor Party of New York City. Campaign For N. Y. State Farmer-Labor Party On May 18th

NEW YORK CITY, May 5.—Many Farmer Granges from up state, local union branches, Workmen's Circle, and other organizations have already signified their willingness to send delegates to the state convention for the formation of a Farmer-Labor Party in the state of New York.

The state convention is to be held at Schenectady on Sunday morning at 10 a. m. on May 18th. The call for this convention has been issued jointly by the Buffalo Labor Party and the Federated Farmer-Labor Party of New York.

Dudley Field Malone, a progressive Democrat, just returned from a six weeks' tour of the country, states in the New York American that the newly formed Farmer-Labor Party which is to hold its national convention at St. Paul on June 17th, will probably carry about 9 states and will poll a tremendous vote thruout the entire country.

The work for formation of the Farmer-Labor Party in New York is progressing satisfactorily, and all organizations which have not as yet elected their delegates are requested to do so immediately. The expenses are very small and each and every organization ought to be represented at Schenectady.

Money is badly needed to carry on the work to make this convention a success, and all organizations should vote a donation at the next meeting and send it to the local secretary, Mr. W. J. Kelly, 81 East 10th street. Each organization should sound the slogan of ON TO SCHENECTADY ON MAY 18th, and then to the national convention at St. Paul, on June 17th.

Bedacht Pleases Kansas City May Day Celebrators

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 5.—Max Bedacht addressed a splendid May Day meeting here, held in the new hall of the Carpenters' Union, Local No. 61. Bedacht told the audience that the struggle of the workers in America was not an importation, but the direct result of the inevitable class conflict under capitalism.

The crowd gave excellent attention to Bedacht, altho he was the last speaker. They seemed most interested in his analysis of conditons here in the plans for a class Farmer-Labor Party to further their efforts to gain power.

The meeting was held under a United Front with other revolutionary and labor groups. It was entirely harmonious thruout.

William Henery spoke for the Socialist Party.

LA FOLLETTE WANTS LABOR PARTY TAIL TO HIS POLITICAL KITE; FEARS CLASS-CONSCIOUS WORKERS AND FARMERS

By LAURENCE TODD
(Federated Press Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, May 5.—LaFollette and Huddleston, or LaFollette and Wheeler?

Progressives in Washington are trying to determine, in their individual minds, which one of the outstanding Democrats would be the best running-mate for the Wisconsin senator—if a Democrat could be persuaded to run.

Huddleston of Alabama seems to be mentioned first in every discussion, because of his leadership of the struggle for labor legislation in the House in recent years. He is still young, and his latest speech, dealing with the Barkley rail labor bill, was one of the most effective made in Congress this year.

Wheeler of Montana is second, and by men who despair of shaking the Bourbon power in the South he is generally named first. Josephus Daniels of North Carolina is also mentioned as a possibility, and inquiries are made concerning Governor Davis of Kansas.

Wants Good Foghorn.

LaFollette will need a husky teammate, because his own health has been only indifferently sound during the past eight months. He will probably not be able to deliver daily speeches during the campaign. As was the case when Roosevelt was put out of the active fight in the 1912 canvass, and Hiram Johnson bore the brunt of the speech-making, LaFollette must rely upon his associate on the ticket to carry the message of political revolt to twenty million voters. The question of the hour is where a powerful speaker who is likewise a fire-tested rebel against government-by-privilege can be found.

Is Huddleston physically strong enough, in case he is willing to leave the Democratic party in the South? Or would Wheeler, with his acknowledged strength on the platform, be willing and able to undertake this endurance contest?

Fears Workers Party.

These questions reflect the assumption that someone already well known in politics, rather than a man known chiefly as an official of organized farmers or organized labor, will be chosen to make the race with "Bob."

The assumption is the easier because it is now apparent that LaFollette will not accept the nomination of the St. Paul convention which meets June 17, unless upon his own terms. He and his close advisers are going to make it as plain on their part as C. E. Ruthenberg has on the side of the Workers Party, that neither accepts the other.

And because the Workers Party leaders look with hope to the St. Paul convention of the Farmer-Labor Party and Committee of 48, the La Follette organization looks upon that gathering with apprehension.

They must take action before it acts, if they are to hold it in line for the program of an independent, rather than a third party, campaign.

One Million Farms Within Transmission Range of Muscle Shoals

WASHINGTON.—Morris L. Cook, representing Governor Pinchot's giant power survey commission for Pennsylvania, told the Senate committee on agriculture that there are 1,000,000 farms within transmission range of Muscle Shoals, and that within five to ten years electric power can be economically applied on all of these farms. The range of transmission is 300 miles. About 100 uses for electric power are now recognized in farming. Ordinary water powers, far less efficient than Muscle Shoals, will soon be doing the work of cheap man power. And giant power stations, burning coal at the mine mouth, give current at 4c per kilowatt more than ordinary water power. Linked together in one great pool of power, they make possible the use of small local water powers that hitherto have been inefficient.

Coolidge May Do Some Fancy Juggling With Exclusion Bill

WASHINGTON, May 5.—President Coolidge's probable action on the immigration bill containing the Japanese exclusion provision was the subject of speculation at the Capitol, where the conferees on the measure were reported to be in agreement on harmonizing the differences in the bill as passed by the Senate and the House.

The White House statement, which said the President favored exclusion if it could be arranged without giving affront to Japan, was held to shed new light on his attitude toward the measure.

BIG PROPORTION OF AUSTRALIANS IN LABOR UNIONS

Gompers' Movement Is Weak In Comparison

By W. FRANCIS AHERN
(Staff Correspondent of the Fed. Press)

SYDNEY, New South Wales, May 4.—The federal bureau of statistics shows that out of 1,291,303 workers in Australia 20 years and over, 702,938 are trade unionists. Of 1,041,915 male workers, 616,886 (59.2) are unionists, while of 249,388 female workers, 86,052 (34.5 per cent) are members of unions. There are 387 unions affiliated with 27 central labor organizations.

The employers are organized into 467 associations, with a total membership of 51,706. These associations are affiliated with central associations, generally statewide, with a loose federative system between the different states.

Hundreds of Co-operatives.

There are 228 producers' co-operative societies with a total membership of 192,470, and 137 consumers' co-operatives with a membership of 110,979.

Unemployment at the end of 1923 averaged 6.2 per cent of the total workers employed—the lowest since 1918. Queensland is the only state in Australia that is paying unemployment insurance subsidies to the workers. It is governed by a labor administration.

Wages Gain Slightly.

There were 292 industrial disputes in Australia last year, involving 826,697 workers. The total number of working days lost totalled 1,337,519.

At the end of 1923, the average wage for male adult workers was $22.32 per week of 46¾ hours. For adult female workers, the average was $11.52 per week of 46 hours.

Berry Blaws In Omaha Bid To Get Political Support

(Special to The Daily Worker)
By TOM MATHEWS

OMAHA, Neb., May 5.—Altho his coming was heralded by brass bands and the fussings of reception committees, Major George L. Berry, strike-breaking head of the pressmen's union, was greeted by ninety people at the Omaha Labor Temple last week.

Berry did not mention his vice-presidential race in his speech, but that it was made for political capital was easily to be seen. It was the opinion of some of his auditors that Berry should be a Republican rather than a Democrat, as Strike-breaker Coolidge and Strike-breaker Berry would make such a good combination.

Berry "panned" the revolutionists, whom he proclaimed to be opposed to American institutions and "Americanism as I see it."

"The employee is not entitled to more than he contributes. Both employer and employee must work together in a spirit of co-operation to the end that business will grow and prosperity be with us."

Berry concluded his harangue with a cautiously worded indictment of the Coolidge administration. Not one word about the open shop drive or the need of closer solidarity among the wage earners, but plenty of drivel about "Partners and employers of the elected officials of the government" and such nonsense. Berry praised the government as a democratic institution of which every citizen is part owner. If there is any corruption in the government, it is the fault of incompetents like Coolidge and Daugherty, etc., etc.

LABOR HERALD TELLS TRUTH OF UNEMPLOYMENT

May Issue Contrasts Russia and U. S.

"The Strangest Thing You Ever Heard." Such might be the comment of the usual reader who would take up the LABOR HERALD for May and read the editorial on unemployement in Russia and in the United States.

Yet the strangest thing marking the difference between unemployment in Russia and in the United States—or any other capitalist country—is not so strange after all, when you remember that Russia is a WORKERS' republic and that every relation existing between production and the producers is altered fundamentally by the fact that ownership and work reside in the same class—the working class.

Wages Rising In Russia

The superlatively strange thing is that in spite of the fact that there has been a great increase of unemployment in Russia, wages of those employed are steadily going upward! In America, "the land of the free and the home of the brave," an increase in the number of unemployed quickly acts to lower the wage scale and increase the hours of the workers employed. This is not permitted in Russia. On the contrary, the existence of great numbers of unemployed—mostly peasants who flooded the cities as refuge from the famine and who remained as unskilled city workers—is not allowed to interfere with the Soviet Government's plan of increasing the workers' wages, as a reconstructed industry makes possible an increased production.

New Pre-War Standard

Not only are the nominal wages adjusted to the standard of living by reckoning the average budget in terms of the current price every two weeks, but the standard itself rises with increased production, upon agreement of the government and the unions. This standard has reached about 85 per cent of the pre-war standard, in addition to new considerations never enjoyed before the revolution, such as rents made especially low (purely nominal) for workers, co-operative buying, communal kitchens and housing facilities, libraries and a most elaborate system of schooling in vocational and cultural branches, all of these new advantages never known before the revolution.

The editorial mentioned points out the many phases of relief for unemployed in Russia—measures which bring Russian workers security even tho temporarily unemployed, a security never felt by American workers even when employed. These facts set a goal for workers in America. It is no accident that the LABOR HERALD'S editorial columns, which have had such profound influence on American unionism, should direct attention to this remarkable benefit of a soviet society.

Utah Federation Moving Towards State Labor Party

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, May 5.—The executive committee of the State Federation of Labor has issued a call for a meeting of various third-party political groups on July 23rd. Two delegates from each organization, including the Workers Party, have been allowed. The purpose of the July meeting is to encourage the formation of a Labor Party.

A paid organizer for the state has just been sent out by the Federation.

The state Federation also plans to put out a local newspaper to further their organization work, politically and among the unions.

Enthusasitic May Day.

ROCKFORD, Ill., May 5.—Several hundred workingclass men, women and children packed Lyran Hall here in one of the most enthusiastic May Day celebrations Rockford has ever known. There was an enjoyable musical program and also several working class recitations. Manuel Gomez, member of the District Executive Committee of the Workers Party, spoke on "The Meaning of May Day."

13 CINCINNATI WORKERS HIT WAR FRAME-UP

Arrested in 1917 for Anti-War Leaflet

WASHINGTON, May 5.—Questions showered from the supreme court bench here upon Atty. Ed. F. Alexander, pleading the case of 13 Cincinnati workers arrested as members of the Socialist Party in 1917 and convicted in 1919 on charges of having circulated an anti-conscription leaflet, were uniformly friendly, when the case was argued April 29 on a question of writ of certiorari. The defendants, some of whom are now members of the Workers Party, were framed according to their lawyer, and the charge of treason brought against them in the first place and indictment for "conspiracy to defraud the United States" by inducing men not to register for the draft, was described as absurd.

Alexander told the court how the Cincinnati Socialists met on the Sunday before draft registration day, to nominate a city ticket. After doing that, they agreed to a proposal by Lotta Burke, a member, that they print and circulate part of a leaflet against the idea of conscription, which had been used in Cleveland. She read the Cleveland leaflet, omitting, however, a paragraph urging men to "refuse to register for conscription."

This leaflet, with the refusal crossed out, was taken to a small printer named Tom Foster, who afterward turned out to be a ready witness for the prosecution and is thought to have been "planted" to involve radicals and railroad workers in trouble. Foster delivered to Miss Burke two proofs of the leaflet, in which the illegal paragraph did not appear. Then he failed to deliver any leaflets to the party until the hour for their citywide distribution. After many had been distributed, Miss Burke found that the printer had inserted the illegal paragraph. She tried to stop the distribution. But the business men's spying organization and federal officers were already informed, and arrested 11 party workers at their meeting places. Later they arrested Miss Burke and the party candidate for mayor, Hammerschmidt, who was her escort to the printing office.

The law's delays marked every step in the prosecution, after the local Scripps paper, the Cincinnati Post, had led the hysterical demand for the death penalty if the "treason" should be proved. Tom Foster was not even arrested. The trial judge died, and his successor sentenced the Socialists to prison terms of from 1 to 3 months, altho conviction had been voted only after the jury had been evenly divided and had stipulated that they should ask for mercy for all the accused.

The defense argued that a recommendation for mercy, which the jury voted, made utterly silly the conviction of "conspiracy to defraud" the government out of conscripted soldiers.

Are you self-conscious about the impression you make on people?

PERSONAL appearance has a lot to do with the way you feel. Clothes count, of course. But still there is one thing so many people overlook—something that at once brands them as either fastidious or careless—the teeth.

Notice today how you, yourself, watch another person's teeth when he or she is talking. If the teeth are not well kept they at once become a liability.

Listerine Tooth Paste cleans teeth a new way. At last our chemists have discovered a polishing ingredient that really cleans without scratching the enamel—a difficult problem finally solved.

TAMPICO STRIKE LEADER TELLS DAILY WORKER OF FIGHT WITH BIG BRITISH OIL INTERESTS

By JAY LOVESTONE.

(Special to the Daily Worker.)

MEXICO CITY, Mexico, April [illegible]—"We will fight till we win and we are bent on victory at all costs." This is the message sent, thru the DAILY WORKER, to the workers and poor farmers of the United States by Gregorio Furrubiates, leader of the Mexican workers, now striking against the powerful British oil corporation at Tampico, the El Aguila.

Gregorio Furrubiates is a genuine rebel, a proletarian fighter of the first order, enjoys the whole-hearted confidence of the workers, and is a communist. The following sidelights on the gigantic strike now raging in Tampico were given your correspondent by Comrade Furrubiates while he was in Mexico City as a member of a committee of striking workers to see President Obregon and tell him that his arbitration commission had better act without delay or else the strikers would be compelled to take matters into their own hands against El Aguila Oil Corporation.

Electrical Workers Strike First.

"The strike began as a strike of 150 electricians employed by the Tampico Light and Power Company, of which Mr. J. S. Leach was manager. Mr. Leach has since been expelled from Mexico by the government for his persistently hostile and troublesome attitude towards the working men.

"The strike of the electricans lasted five months. Mr. Leach at one time succeeded in rounding up 125 scabs. But we soon gave them such a worthwhile education and made such an example out of them that it imbued the oil workers of El Aguila, which was using the light and power of the struck electrical company, with a spirit of magnificent solidarity. A mass spontaneous organization wave swept their ranks. When it was their turn to strike, the oil workers came out 100 per cent. And today these scabs can't get a job anywhere and are ostracised by all workers everywhere.

"For the first 12 days of the electrical workers' strike there were neither police nor military on guard. There were no scabs to protect. The oil capitalists then resorted to a trick to fool the government into rushing soldiers to the strike zone by telling it that the workers had taken over the factories. But when the soldiers came there were no scabs to look out for.

"The men, women and children all lined up solidly behind the electrical workers, who did take over the plant when they struck. As a matter of fact, the workers ran the plant very well and made a profit of 5,000 pesos a day. Soon the electrical workers won their strike. They then declared that they will supply El Aguila power only upon the request and recommendation of the Oil Workers' Union. The capitalists then went after the oil workers. Here is where the present serious strike troubles began.

Oil Workers Locked Out.

"No sooner were the oil workers locked out and forced to strike in self defense against the attacks made on them by El Aguila, than they raised the red flag over the plant and threw a guard of working men about it. Immediately the British Corporation appealed to the Association of Oil Producers in Mexico for help."

At this point your correspondent reminded the strike leader that this was the same outfit of international oil interests that once occupied offices in 347 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and dictated the policies of Washington and Mexico City at a time when the relations between the two governments were intensely strained. This clique of oil magnates even had its own army in Mexico, led by one named Pelaez.

This reminder served to cause Furrubiates to state that it was precisely the knowledge of those facts that has aroused the ire of great masses even outside the ranks of the oil workers. The strikers are convinced that the sole object of El Aguila in appealing to the Association of Oil Producers is to invoke the powerful influence of the latter on the United States government, which in turn, will bring to bear heavy pressure on the Mexican government to terminate the strike favorably for the El Aguila corporation.

Then the stocky, solidly built strike leader went on to say: "Yes, the government is pledged to force arbitration. In view of the British company having the international oil interests acting for it, we will very likely be compelled to declare a general strike in the port of Tampico.

"When the company tried to break our ranks by firing 150 of our men because of the stoppage of power incurred by the electricians' strike, then it set the house on fire. The lockout gave tremendous impetus to our agitation for organization amongst the oil workers. Continued firing of oil workers by El Aguila boosted our campaign still more. Soon a committee of oil workers called upon the El Aguila and demanded that the lockout cease immediately and that all the workers be given back their jobs. This appeal of ours fell on deaf ears. Today from 2,075 to 3,000 of the firm are organized and striking very well. Only a few clerks have been left out. All other workers are organized industrially.

"Our union seeks to have the British Oil Corporation comply with the labor laws of the country which provides for an 8-hour working day, sanitary conditions of employment, accident insurance and three months' pay if discharged without cause. We have been fired without cause. We have been struggling for more than a month."

Great Solidarity of Workers.

Thereupon the writer put this question to Furrubiates: How do the rest of the workers feel about your fight? To this Furrubiates replied:

"All the workers of Tampico are rallying to the oil laborers. A manifesto pledging us their full support has just been issued. Inspiring solidarity is evidenced among the railroad workers, the red anarcho-syndicalists, and even the yellow unions. Substantial material help is being rendered us. The Tampico workers are giving us 5,000 pesos weekly. The Butchers' Union is giving us three cows a day.

"The organized workers have built dramatic clubs giving plays, having proletarian class themes only. The unorganized workers are helping us financially by patronizing these plays. One play is given every week. This nets the strikers at least 1,500 pesos weekly. Just to show you how the other workers feel about our fight, let me read to you the following telegram I received a few moments ago from my union, The Oil Workers' Union of Tampico." Furrubiates went on to read:

"'We can sustain strike indefinite time. Electricians are aiding 1,000 pesos weekly; street car men, 700; small merchants society, 200; the butchers, three cows a day. Workers of this port are ready for general strike if necessary. Delegate Central and South American organizations tell us will boycott El Aguila products if strike is not settled.'"

"Out of 2,300 workers there is not a scab on the job today.

Force Government To Act.

"When we were tipped off that the company was planning to fill several of its tankers, we telegraphed President Obregon and demanded that he order the Commander of the local military force to prevent the scabs from handling the oil. Our demand brought back the following telegraphic reply from Obregon:

"'Your attentive message received. Have already ordered the Secretary of Industry and Labor thru his delegated representative to guard the observance of the labor laws and prevent the resumption of work as long as the conflict has not been terminated by the authorities in charge of arbitration. Respectfully, Obregon, President of the Republic.'"

This telegram was sent on April 14th.

Works Completely Tied Up.

What has been the condition of the strike since then? was my next question. The spokesman of the oil workers replied:

"Since that day El Aguila has been absolutely tied up. In the midst of the strike we learned that some English workers were loading oil for the firm in another port. We compelled the government to stop this. Obregon has declared that if the manager of the company does not present himself before the Arbitration Commission, the decision will be rendered without him. But El Aguila has so far refused to send its representative because it continually maintains that its case is no longer in its own hands but is now solely in the hands of the Association of Oil Producers.

"We workers expect the government to compel El Aguila to adhere to the Constitutional provisions regarding the 8-hour day, insurance, the right to organize, etc.

The Strikers' Demands.

"We have thirty-three demands. One of our main grievances is that workers injured while on the job be taken care of as the Constitution provides. We will not compromise any of the rights guaranteed us by the Constitution. Other demands than the enforcement of the Constitutional provisions, we may be ready to arbitrate.

"At least 2,100 workers are already on strike. We are all set for a general strike in a few days to include all the workers in Tampico. That would mean taking seven thousand workers off their jobs. All the petroleum fields are agitated. The laborers are preparing to organize a big general union of all oil workers. There is a spontaneous movement in their ranks for a Federation of Oil Workers. There are no less than 15,000 oil workers now being organized who are ready to tie up all the oil fields of the country."

McDonald Aid Sought.

The writer then suggested that the strikers might consider the advisability of cabling the McDonald Government and demanding that it should not support El Aguila in this fight. Furrubiates gladly accepted the recommendation. Since then the Tampico strikers have cabled McDonald.

Samuel Gompers was also appealed to, thru the Pan-American Labor Federation, to help the strikers against the oil capitalists' association. A general appeal has been issued to all workers, asking for the support of the strikers. A boycott against all F Aguila products has already been declared.

Workers To Fight On.

Replying to the writer's inquiry as to how long the strikers could hold out, Furrubiates declared: "Why, we are ready to go to all lengths, appeal to other channels, and can stay out indefinitely. El Aguila cannot afford to allow its machinery to remain idle longer than two months. Besides, the American Doheny Oil interests are its fierce competitors and may be planning to take away some of its business. Of course, if these competing oil interests show signs of helping El Aguila, we will attend to them also."

WAR SECRETARY APOLOGIZES TO ANTI-WAR WOMEN

Withdraws Offending Circular

(By The Federated Press)

BUFFALO, May 5.—Women peace workers have made the U. S. War Department eat its words and withdraw its attack on them it was revealed at the National League of Women Voters' convention in session in Buffalo. Secretary of War Weeks, following protest of league members, has called in an anti-pacifist poster distributed for propagandist purposes by General Fries, Chemical warfare service. The poster was headed "The Socialist-Pacifist Momevent in America is an Absolute Part of International Socialism."

The convention of women were furious when President Maude Wood Park recounted the government's attack on their organization. Some delegates objected that their constitutional right to work for peace should be questioned by the government. Others resented the coupling of the league's name on the war department poster with more radical organizations.

The peace activities of the league will continue. A committee was appointed to call a conference of seventy-five national and local peace societies and all other organizations having peace programs. On the commitetee is the honoray president, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt.

A sugary letter from President Coolidge did not altogether quiet the wrath of the women voters. After regretting hisinability to address the convention and praising the advent of women as voters as a "tremendously important step in the evolution of democracy," Coolidge said. "I am sure that thru the agencies of such organizatoins as your own the fullest conception of their duties and obligations will be carried to the women of the nation."

eScretary Weeks expressed regret for the poster and announced its withdrawel in a letter read to the delegates.

BUFFALO, May 5.—"Other nations are suspicious of our intentions and are justified in being so," declared Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, former president International Suffrage Alliance, to the National League of Women Voters' convention in Buffalo.

The Workers Party in Action

PARTY PRINCIPLES AND DISCIPLINE

A letter authorized by the Central Executive Committee directing the reinstatement of an expelled comrade.

Dear Comrade:

The Central Executive Committee of the Party has carefully considered all the documents sent to it in regard to the expulsion of Otto Newman as a member of the Party. It has also had before it a statement by Comrade Newman in regard to his expulsion.

It appears from these documents that he was expelled from the Party for presenting at a public meeting, on the subject "Can the Workers Gain their Freedom by Political Action Alone," the part which force played in the class struggle thru reading the "Thesis of the Third Congress of the Communist International and the "Strategy of the Communists" and the "Communist Manifesto of 1847," excerpts dealing with this question. It appears further that the City Central Committee of Portland had forbidden any Party member to raise the question before an open meeting.

Political Action.

1. The first point which the Central Executive Committee desires to bring to your attention is the complete misapprehension of the term "political action" as indicated in both your letter and also the part of Comrade Newman. Both you and he use the term "political action" as if it were synonymous with "parliamentary action." As Communists, we do not believe that to be true. For us, political action means any form of action thru which a class struggle for political power is manifested, that is for control of the state power. Political action for us does not mean merely voting and electing representatives to legislative bodies and other public offices. Mass meetings intended to exert pressure upon the capitalist government may be a form of political action. Similarly a strike with political aims is a form of political action. A civil war such as recently took place in Mexico between the Obregons and De La Huerta forces is as much a form of political action as going to the ballot box to vote for certain candidates for public office.

Understanding political action, in this, the Communist sense, the answer to the question propounded at the Forum meeting should have been unhesitatingly on the part of all Communists that the workers will achieve their freedom by political action. It is exactly this which is the essential thing about our Communist principles. We say that the workers must enter into political actions against the capitalist state and achieve control of the state power and use this as a class in their interests, and that this is the only road to the social revolution and the abolishing of the capitalist system.

A centralized Party

2. In a letter from Comrade King, the secretary of the English branch bearing on the expulsion of Comrade Newman, the question of the jurisdiction of the Central Executive Committee and its right to intervene are raised. This letter we believe requires a statement from the Central Executive Committee. Our Party is a centralized Communist Party. The constitution of the Party therefore, gives the Central Executive Committee full power to carry on the work of the Party between its convention. In a centralized Communist Party, the Central Executive Committee must have full authority to review any act of any unit of the Party and to modify or change this act. It must have full power to mobilize every unit of the Party policies or Party work There are no autonomous groups in a Communist Party. The Party is and must be one unit. It must act and fight as a unit and it must have a leading body, the Central Executive Committee with full power to direct the activities of the organization as a whole, which means to direct the activity of any unit of the Party. It is only by establishing a leading organ and maintainting a firm discipline in the Party that a Comnist Party can fit itself for struggles and conflicts which it must pass thru in order to lead the workers victoriously to the proletarian revolution

Force and The Class Struggle

3. The Central Executive Committee is of the opinion that the attitude of the City Central Committee on the question of the part which force plays in the class struggle in incorrect. We cannot as a Communist Party hide our views on this question from the working masses. We must, where the issue is raised, frankly present our viewpoint. We cannot stultify ourselves because of the pressure of the capitalist state power. What then, is our viewpoint on the question of the part that force will play in the class struggle, between the workers and the capitalists.

Our Party does not advocate the use of force by the workers today. The whole strength of our Party is being given to the campaign to build a mass political party, that is a Farmer-Labor Party, thru which the workers and farmers will enter into the political struggle against the capitalist ruling parties. We believe that it is thru the formation of such a mass Farmer Labor Party that the cause of the revolutionary movement in the United States can best be served. Does this mean that we believe that the workers and farmers of this country will thru such a Farmer Labor Party elect their representatives to public office and than win control of the governmental power and proceed by legislative action of the parliamentary institutions of the capitalist government to the abolition of the Capitalist System?

Such a viewpoint is an illusion. The history of the past shows that such a viewpoint is an illusion. No privileged class in past history has given up its privileged position upon the demand of the exploited class without resorting to force to maintain its privileged position and its right to exploit the oppressed class. Even American history shows that when a privileged class is attacked it resorts to force in order to protect its privileged position. The Southern slave-owners resorted to civil war in order to prevent their right to profit from the labor of slaves from being taken from them.

As Communists, we therefore frankly declare our viewpoint that the class struggle between workers and capitalists will inevitably in its future development take the form of a struggle in which force will be used. The exact form of this struggle is a matter of historical development which we cannot predict today. All that we can say is that it will be a struggle between the organs of the state power of the workers and the organs of capitalist state power. We have seen in Russia, in Hungary and in Bavaria that the forms which expressed the workers' struggle for state power are the Soviets and that the struggle takes the form of a struggle between a capitalist parliamentary government and the Soviets which are the expression of the workers' government. It is this fact which we believe that Comrade Newman tried to bring out in reading from the various pamphlets at the forum meeting.

The Central Executive Committee believes that the rule laid down by the City Central Committee of Portland forbidding the branches discussion of the whole question with such a subject as, "Can the Workers Gain Their Freedom Thru Political Action Alone?" was wrong. While it is the duty of Party members to carry out the decisions of the governing body of the Party, when the body is wrong, the Central Executive Committee cannot sustain the action of the City Central Committee in expelling Comrade Newman for endeavoring to present the Communist position by reading from Communist literature at the forum meeting in question. The effect of sustaining this expulsion would be to support an erroneous position of the question discussed above, and it is more important that the question of principle be clear than the issue of discipline involved in this case.

In view of all of the foregoing, the Central Executive Committee instructs the C. C. C. and the English Branch of Portland to reinstate Comrade Newman as a member of the Party.

The Central Executive Committee further instructs that this letter be read in full both at the City Central Committee meeting and at the meeting of the English branch so that the principle set forth may be understood by all the Party members in Portland. We feel certain that the result of this incident will be to greatly strengthen the Portland Party organization thru a clear grasp of the underlying principles of a Communist Party.

Executive Secretary.

That Terrifying Election

Early reports of the results of the German elections Sunday indicate the correctness of the forecast that the Communists would be the greatest gainers. Already the adherents of the Third International are assured a minimum of sixty seats. In the last Reichstag the Communists could muster a maximum strength of only seventeen votes.

It is of inestimable significance to note that the foreign office of the reactionary Socialist-Stinnes-Stressman outfit, masquerading today as the German Republic, has found it necessary to issue a special statement on the outcome of the election. And that declaration is frank enough to confess disappointment at the results. The Prussian foreign office speaks of the "terrifying increase of Communist votes."

These Junker-renegade socialist hangmen of the workers have all the cause on earth to be terrified at the turn of events in Germany, if the election is to be taken at all as a barometer of the intensity of the class conflicts. There is no doubt that the Communists have much more strength than the sixty seats in the Reichstag would indicate. In many sections of the German Reich, Bavaria for instance, the Communists could not vote because of Fascist terrorism. The Communist Party had just emerged from a completely illegal stage forced upon it by Ebert and his gangmen. Even in the election campaign the Party was practically working under a partial ban. Many of its best workers have been jailed and manhandled. Despite these difficulties and the tremendous efforts made by the capitalists to rout the workers in the campaign, the Communists have shown that, for the first time, they have the right to speak as the party of the majority of the working class.

It is true the Socialist-Democratic Party of Noske and Scheidemann have gotten a few more seats in the Reichstag. But when one considers that those Socialist votes were also representative of a large section of the lower bourgeoisie and that the socialist organization had all the advantage of being the Government party and was free from the obstacles hurled in the path of the Communists, it is obvious that the old Social-Democratic Party has, for once, lost its position as the leading political expression of the proletariat. The outlook for a decisive test in the German class war is thus greatly enhanced. The much-heralded Dawes report is also given a severe jolt by the rising tide of Communism in Germany.

In Darkest Pennsylvania

Six workingmen are now being tried by a United States Steel and National Coal-Association court in Farrell, Pennsylvania, on the charge of having violated the state anti-sedition law, thru membership and association with the Workers Party.

This trial is of vital concern to the workers and rural masses of every section of the country. This trial is only the preliminary move of the steel and coal interests to launch a new campaign of terrorism against the working men of the state, especially in Western Pennsylvania. For some time the department of justice and its stoolpigeons in the trade unions of Pittsburgh have been trying to break up the Workers Party in the Smoky City. The solidarity of all labor with the Communists in the strong and successful Labor Defense and Free Speech Council has so far stopped the capitalist agents from denying the working class of Pennsylvania the right to belong to and support a political party opposed to capitalism.

The big business interests have chosen a weaker section of the proletarian front to make their attack. Should they win in Farrell, there is every likelihood that they will then go after the nine workingmen arrested a year ago in Pittsburgh, and charged with the crime against the bosses and their government—the crime of belonging to the Workers Party.

Every possible support must be rendered the brave workers now battling for their very lives. The law these workers are charged with having violated was opposed at the time of its passage, and is today bitterly denounced by every part of the labor movement, regardless of its political opinion. If the employers win in Farrell, they will attack Pittsburgh next. After Pittsburgh the rest of the state will be easy. And after the most aggressive and militant group of the working class is crushed, the onslaught against the other workers' organizations is the logical next step. Thus it is in the interest of all workers, regardless of any difference of opinion that may separate them today, to line up behind the Communists and their sympathizers, now under fire by the blackest band of enemies the laboring and farming masses of the country face today.

An Exploded Charge

When the question of the expulsion of members from the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, because of their membership in the Trade Union Educational League, comes before the union's convention, now in session in Boston, it will be well for the delegates to remember what has actually taken place during the present strike in Chicago.

The expelled members were charged with being disrupters and dual unionists, surely a serious charge if true. But the insanity of this claim was shown when the garment strike started and expelled members were called upon to take responsible positions in the conduct of the strike. If the charges had any basis in fact, this would certainly not have been done.

Not only did the T. U. E. L. militants respond to the call of the strike, and take leading positions in the struggle, but the aid of the DAILY WORKER, in giving daily publicity to the strike, was considered indispensable in waging the fight. The speakers of the Workers Party were also called upon continually to address the strikers at their daily meetings.

This situation alone is an open confession that the expulsion policy of the Sigman administration in the I. L. G. W. U. is wrong and indefensible. And if the policy is indefensible during a strike, it is equally without excuse during peace times, and especially so during the sessions of a convention, when all prejudice should be put aside and all matters discussed on the basis of the welfare of the organization.

The expulsion policy in the I. L. G. W. U. has done great harm to the organization. Now is the time to abolish it. That is the biggest task of the Boston convention of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

Our Pullman Strike Special

Yesterday's issue of the DAILY WORKER was given over to a considerable extent, to the strike of the carmen at Pullman. Thousands of copies of this issue went to workers still on the job, who feel that they are not affected, and to the workers in other plants in this big industrial section on Chicago's South Side.

This issue contained articles and news stories by our own writers. But it is significant that it also contained an article by John Holmgren, vice-president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, in charge of the strike. The Carmen's Union is the third largest organization within the American Federation of Labor and was the steel rod in the backbone of the shopmen's strike in 1922.

Holmgren, as an official of a union affiliated with the A. F. of L., has no fear of the DAILY WORKER, as the official expression of the Workers Party. All he knows is that the DAILY WORKER is proving an effective aid in the strike, and that a united front of all labor's forces is needed if the strike is to be won.

The splendid spirit of revolt displayed by the Pullman workers outstrips anything that has developed in a score of years. The present is a golden opportunity to transmute that spirit into a powerful organization of all workers in the Pullman plant. This present favorable situation has big opportunities of bearing rich fruit because the workers are not being divided by an imaginary and baseless war, within their own ranks, against the Communists. We may differ with Strike Leader Holmgren on a lot of things, but for his share in bringing about the united front of the Pullman workers we give him full credit.

Getting the News

The Seattle Union Record aspires to be the daily mouthpiece of the workers and farmers in the Pacific Northwest. It has, therefore, some views on what kind of a paper the workers and farmers want.

The DAILY WORKER also aspires to speak for labor, in the cities and on the land, and it has its ideas on what labor needs to read.

When the DAILY WORKER made its appearance, the editor of the Seattle Union Record took us to task for not publishing all the "news," that we were ignoring current events. On comparison we found that the DAILY WORKER was giving just as much space to the big developments over the world as the Union Record, perhaps more so. Of course, we interpreted these events as we saw them.

But perhaps we mistook the criticism of the Union Record editor. The Pacific Coast daily, in its issue of Saturday, April 26th, on its first page, in large type, loudly proclaims $10,000 of New Features Added to the Union Record."

We are told that a "Bigger and Better Union Record!" is to develop out of the use of the "Million Dollar Hearst Features!" and Mr. William Randolph Hearst is paid the tribute of being "admittedly one of the most brilliant newspaper publishers in the world."

This makes us rather proud of the criticism of the Union Record editor. Surely, if he thinks the Hearst chloroform good for the workers and farmers, then we would feel there was something wrong with us, if he directed any praise our way.

Against "Willie" Hearst's "Abie the Agent" we will pit the latest news about the biggest strike, or expose the most recent developments in corrupt legislation that is being put over in Washington, and depend on the workers and farmers to know which is the better for them. We had always thought that the Union Record was slipping. Now we are sure of it.

A German Communist Meeting

By William Z. Foste

The day that Hugo Stinnes died, I was in Berlin. The capitalist papers were overflowing with glowing eulogies of this master industrialist, who probably did more than any other one man in the past several years to reduce the German people to their present pitiable poverty. But the revolutionary journals shed no crocodile tears over the passing away of this super-parasite. They showed his true role as a gigantic bloodsucker. It seemed a very fitting occasion to visit a big Communist mass meeting called for that evening, so I went.

The German Communist Party is at present an underground illegal organization. By outlawing it, the authorities hope especially to cripple its influence in the coming elections to the Reichstag. The big party headquarters on Rosenthalerstrasse are vacant save for a few comrades here and there. But public mass meetings are still held under the name of the Party, and the one scheduled was such. These meetings, however, are often the scene of bloody clashes with the Fascisti, who seek to break them up. At the meeting in question, a visit from the Fascisti was particularly expected, owing to the peculiar nature of the program and the fitness of the occasion. As it turned out, however, no disturbance of consequence developed, altho a few shots were fired outside of the hall.

The program was one of the best pieces of propaganda work it has ever been my good fortune to see. It consisted of a series of stereopticon views of the German revolutionary movement, accompanied by a lecture. It was a history of the counter-revolutionary activities of the Social-Democratic Party, and was entitled "S. D. P. Words vs. S. D. P. Actions." The whole traitorous record was there in broad outline. This history began with the Second International Congress just before the war, where the Socialist Democrats declared they would use "every means" to prevent war. Then came the great "betrayal" in 1914, with the Socialists mustering their forces to help the Kaiser overthrow Russian, English, French, and American imperialism. The pictures graphically portrayed the organized and systematic treason of the Social Democrats during the war, the jailing of Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, the outbreak of the Russian revolution, the signing of the Brest-Litvosk treaty, and eventually, the overthrow of the Kaiser.

Here began a new record of betrayal by the Socialist Democrats, the assassination of the German revolution. All the main developments were covered by the pictures; the agreement with the capitalists that the present social system should continue, the murdering of Liebknecht and Luxemburg, the shooting down of German workers by Moske's assassins, the overthrow of the Munchin soviet; the abolition of the proletarian troops and the substitution of white guard organizations, the defeat of the "March Action" in 1921, the treasonable agreement to fulfill the reparations demands of the Allies, the betrayal of the workers in the Ruhr, the suppression of the revolutionary movement in 1923, the abolition of the eight-hour day, and a hundred other events, all pitcured in such a simple and effective way as to bring home most powerfully to the workers assembled the tragic lessons of the past ten years. It was a most terrific indictment of the Social Democracy, as well as a glowing defense of the Communist Party.

But if the program was highly interesting, the audience itself was hardly less so. The great hall was literally jammed, at least 3,000 people, men, women and children being packed into the building, whose gloominess, frigidness, and generally rundown condition reflected the status of present day Germany.

The crowd was stern and cold and calm—marvellously so. Never at any time did the assembled workers show any emotion. There was no applause whatever. Many of the pictures were blood-stirring, and the crowd was intensely interested in and sympathetic with them, but it sat quiet as they were shown. Occasionally a worker would cry out his indignation at some scene or individual being shown, or perhaps, a titter would run thru the house at the humorous portrayal of some incident, such as the flight of the Social Democratic government during the Kapp-Putsch, while the workers fought the battle. But that was as far as the emotional demonstrations went. The whole thing was most deadly serious.
